I am concerned about the muddled thinking of the proponents of abortion who oppose this motion. My hon. Friend the Member for Berkshire, East (Mr. MacKay), who has disappeared since he made his speech, talked much about freedom of choice, a subject on which my hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone (Miss Widdecombe) also touched. Of course, we believe in freedom of choice, but that choice is limited by its effects on other people. No choice is completely unrestrained; one must examine its implications for other people. With abortion, we are talking about the effects on the unborn child and the rest of the family. None of those who support abortion mentioned that in their speeches today.

I notice that my hon. Friend the Member for Berkshire, East did not mention children, except to make a muddled and unworthy attack on those of us who oppose abortion, by suggesting that we were not concerned about protecting children who have been born. We are equally concerned about them; but we are also concerned about the rights of the unborn child.

I am also worried about abortion's implications in society for those who have been born. It is no accident —the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) touched on this—that child abuse has increased since 1967, because the abortion mentality says that it is all right to abort unborn children. This consumerist attitude to children carries over into attitudes towards the children who have been lucky enough to be born.

I also feel strongly about the misrepresentation of the attitude of those of us who supported the Alton Bill, which runs as follows: we could have had the Bill if we had gone for 24 weeks. That is nonsense. If we had gone for 24 weeks, we should not have saved the lives of the unborn, and the scandal of late abortions would have continued. To suggest that inflexibility or obstructiveness on the part of the hon. Member for Mossley Hill and of those who supported him prevented us from getting the Bill passed is arrant nonsense. We would not have achieved the Bill's objective, which was to reduce the number of late abortions.

Mr. Kenneth Hind (Lancashire, West) rose——

Mr. Bennett: I would love to give way, but my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess) is waiting to speak and there is an agreement, for which I am grateful, between Front Bench spokesmen on both sides to restrict the time of their speeches.

The hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) talked of the fundamentalist approach. I take such an approach and have never made a secret of it. I happen to believe that abortion is morally wrong. I stand by that, but I recognise that I live in a pluralist society. Not everybody agrees with this approach. The majority of hon. Members do not agree with that point of view, but that does not mean that I am not entitled to start from the moral basis of being opposed to abortion and then seeking to find the point at which we can carry the House on the question of abortion. That is what the hon. Member for Mossley Hill sought to do and what my hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone will seek to do. We shall seek to find the point at which a majority of hon. Members will support reform of the abortion law.

We should be concerned about where our society is going. As my hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone says, the process of abortion brutalises society. It also brutalises and dehumanises the people who are forced to take part in the operation. It takes away from the staff of the hospitals their human compassion because day in, day out nurses and doctors take part in abortions. I shall describe to the House part of a late abortion operation. I have no doubt that hon. Members who oppose our stand will say that this is emotive.

Let us have on the record what we are talking about in a late abortion, the sort of abortions that my hon. Friend the Member for Mossley Hill wishes to restrict. The dilation and evacuation method is as follows. By this method the cervix is dilated and the baby removed piece by piece. No anaesthetic of any kind is administered to the baby. We know that children of that age are capable of feeling pain and are hurt in this process. At this stage of pregnancy, the cervix is described as "green," unready for the dilation that will come naturally at birth. The doctor has to dilate the cervix up to 22 mm while inserting the instrument that is used to dismember the baby. This dismemberment is necessary because the baby has a fully calcified skeleton, is about a foot in length and cannot be removed in one piece. After the abortion a nurse will reassemble the baby's body to make sure that no bits have been left behind in the womb that might cause infection.

That is what goes on in our National Health Service hospitals day after day, week in and week out in late abortions. Nurses, some of them 22 or 23 years of age, are asked to reassemble bits of carefully formed babies on the operating table to make sure that no bits are left inside the mother. I shall quote from an eye-witness account of dilation and evacuation done at 22 weeks in a London hospital.

"First came an arm, perfectly formed, a tiny baby's hand, fingers curled. A limb was extracted, then two limbs lay in the bowl. The intestines, brain tissue, liver and lungs came away. Last of all, the most difficult part was the brain. The skin was torn and there was not much more than a skull."

That is done every day in our name in British hospitals. Hon. Members who support abortion think that we should not discuss that and put it on the record. The crux of the debate is about what we are asking our nurses to do. If that does not brutalise the people who have to take part in these operations day in day out I do not know what does.

I should like to draw attention to a couple of other unfortunate facts about which hon. Members who support abortion have been quiet. We have not heard much about multiple abortions. In April, I asked my right hon. Friend the then Minister for Health, now the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, about abortions. He told me that 23,838 residents of the United Kingdom had had a previous abortion. The number of non-residents who had had a previous abortion was 3,042. A further 3,228 had had two previous abortions; 548 were on their fourth abortion; 131 were on their fifth abortion and 23 people who went for an abortion had already had five previous abortions.

During the debate on the Bill that led to the Abortion Act 1967 some hon. Members told us that abortion would not be used as a means of contraception. Abortion is used time and again by the same women and if that is not contraception I do not know what is.

I should now like to deal with late abortions. We know that no fewer than 92 per cent. are carried out on perfectly healthy children, but time and again we hear nonsense about how late abortions are necessary to save the life of the mother, because the baby is the result of rape or because the child will be handicapped. I am concerned about the victims of rape and incest, but the statistics show that fewer than 100 of more than 170,000 abortions carried out in the early 1970s, when the figures were last published, were of foetuses that were the result of rape or incest. We should be concerned about what is done in our name and about ensuring that this law, which has manifestly failed to operate properly, is repealed.

1.45 pm

Mr. David Amess (Basildon): It is difficult to follow the excellent speech made by my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett), but I shall do my best. I pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Mr. Watts), and I congratulate him on the motion, which I wholeheartedly support. Unlike me, he cannot be accused of being involved in a papist plot. This is not a party political matter. I suspect that many people in my constituency support me on wider issues while not sharing my view on this one, but I am not prepared to compromise myself on this fundamental issue.

I shall first examine why hon. Members reach the House. I am an avid reader of The House Magazine, and I particularly enjoy the parliamentary profile. It is interesting to learn what it was that encouraged hon. Members to go into politics and become Members of Parliament. Some say they did so because they enjoy being involved in the legislative process. Some are more blunt, and say that they enjoy the concept of power. Some say that it is because they enjoy helping people. At the end of the day, it is about people that we are talking, whether we debate social legislation, education or whatever. As hon. Members, we are all involved in a process that recognises life, and we are all trying to work together to improve our constituents' quality of life. Each and every one of us is saying that life itself is the fundamental.

I was delighted with the frank response that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department gave me yesterday when I asked a question about the Infant Life (Preservation) Act yesterday. I shall not read it out, but he more or less said that the Government thought that the limit should be 24 weeks, although he also said that it would be best to achieve that through a private Member's Bill. Since the Abortion Act 1967, some 2·7 million abortions have been performed. A number of hon. Members have spoken about the small number of women Members of Parliament. We now have 41, which is many more than there were in 1967. In the debates on the 1967 Act arguments about that legislation being taken successfully through a House with fewer women Members than we now have were not raised.

I do not believe in the equality of men and women. I am not a supporter of women's rights. If I were pressed, I would probably say that I believe that women are superior to men. They now outlive us by 10 years, and they take stress and anxiety far better than we do. I have seen my wife deliver three children, and anyone who can go through that experience must be superior to men. I hope that we shall not raise the red herring of the number of women Members in the House when in future, we discuss legislation on this subject. I understand the arguments advanced in favour of abortion, such as the right of women to choose, which my hon. Friend the Member for Berkshire, East (Mr. MacKay) mentioned, disability, rape, social problems and backstreet abortions.

My view is that life begins at conception. I am sure that the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) would say that that is a fundamental and pure view and that by voting, for instance, in favour of the Bill that the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) advanced in the previous Session I am compromising my principles. The hon. Gentleman was right when he said that politics is the art of the possible. When I arrived in the House, I did not believe that I could change the world. I am happy to work within the system and chip away. That is why I am happy to support the motion and legislation on similar lines. I know that hon. Members who take the opposite view think that this is a conspiracy and that if we get away with 26, 24, 20 or 18 weeks we shall not let the matter rest there. Our opponents feel that at the end of the day we do not want abortion.

I should be content if that which my hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone (Miss Widdecombe) told us earlier were legislated for. It is a nonsense that in special care baby units 24-week-old babies are kept alive on ventilators —my wife is raising money to provide an extra piece of equipment for the special care unit in Basildon hospital —when in the same hospital we allow the abortion of babies of the same age.

I entirely understand the terrible physical and mental ordeal of women who undergo abortions. I have met a number of such women at my surgery and I am unhappy with the level of counselling that some of them have received. There is no follow-up to the traumatic experience. In the previous Parliament I concentrated on the subject of late abortions. My right hon. Friend the Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Sir B. Hayhoe) answered an Adjournment debate on that subject. He said that guidelines would be given to clinics. That was two years ago and no progress has been made.

Mr. Hind: Does my hon. Friend agree that the strength of feeling on these Benches about late abortions and research on embryos is such that neither we nor the public outside who feel as we do can allow the issue to rest until there is some much needed reform. Such reform would have to allay the worries of the public and meet the needs of medical science.

Mr. Amess: I entirely agree with my hon. Friend. I hope that none of my hon. Friends will take offence when I say that Members of Parliament are not modest people. We are all vain, and we display that vanity in different ways. The idea that we are dragged to this place because we attend meetings at which everyone insists that a particular individual should stand as a Member of Parliament is nonsense. I ask the House to show some humility and courage, and not to deny others what we certainly would not deny ourselves. Let us join together and protect the unborn child.

Ms. Jo Richardson (Barking): We have had an interesting and combative debate, and I have listened to almost every speech with the greatest interest.

Let me first say to the hon. Member for Slough (Mr. Watts) that, although he was fortunate to come first in the ballot, I regret his decision to merge the two distinct issues of pre-embryo research and the Abortion Act 1967 in a single motion. Most of the speeches today have concentrated on either one or the other issue, which shows that they are separate in some people's minds.

Let me also say how sorry I am that yet again the inflammatory language of "abuses" and "killings" has been resorted to both in the motion and in speeches. I hoped that at least one lesson had been learnt from the debate forced on the House earlier this year, that unsubstantiated claims of abuse of the Abortion Act either by the medical profession or by women in need of safe legal abortion add nothing constructive to the debate or, indeed, to the esteem in which the House would like to be held.

I shall deal with the question of reform of the Abortion Act a little later. As I have said, I am sorry that the motion did not cover the issue of pre-embryo research on its own. Many hon. Members, including myself, were shocked and disappointed that the Government did not give time for this important matter when they introduced the Queen's Speech. Although hon. Members' reasons for wanting a decision and legislation differ, and although our views on the outcome are opposed to those of the hon. Member for Slough, I think that we all agree that a decision on the whole question of Warnock and the White Paper is essential to the health, wellbeing and integrity of all concerned—those with sub-fertility problems, those who face the actual or potential threat of hereditary congenital defects, scientists, doctors and all informed and concerned opinion.

As the Royal Society has said, since the birth of the world's first test-tube baby Louise Brown over 10 years ago about 10,000 babies have been born successfully, thanks to the techniques of in vitro fertilisation. Thousands of otherwise childless couples have been able to start a family. The procedure of IVF, which has benefited large numbers of infertile couples, was developed only after many years of research on animal and human embryos. Until there was reasonable certainty about its safety and efficacy, IVF could not ethically have been offered as a treatment to an infertile couple, and even now the chance of any one treatment cycle resulting in a child is only 10 to 15 per cent. Further research is therefore essential.

It is of course true that the fundamental principles of human IVF were established with the use of animal models, but different animal species—including the human —differ from each other in biochemical and developmental details. That means that, however much enormously useful information can be provided by animal models, there will ultimately be a point in the research when the human system must be directly examined. That is why it is necessary that we ensure that there is an opportunity for the research to continue.

We know that it is hard fully to estimate the scale of the problem of infertility. However, it is widely reported and generally accepted that it affects one in six couples in this country, three quarters of whom may benefit from IVF and associated techniques. At present those working in the area know that the relatively low success rate of IVF means that people embarking on the treatment are taking a gamble, with the odds stacked against them. The possibility of improving that rests on continued research, using the human pre-embryo so that ultimately every woman treated will have a realistic chance of becoming pregnant.

In the past year I have been fortunate in having been invited to discuss the problems that infertile couples face with two different groups in two different fertility clinics in London—one in Hammersmith and one at St. Bartholomew's hospital. Such people are looking anxiously to Parliament to legislate positively to ensure that the problems and tragedies that they face in their lives can be solved by continued research.

We all know that the development of such techniques is at an early stage, especially in terms of genetic disease. Scientists, clinicians and doctors need the opportunity of research up to 14 days—I entirely accept that limit—to ensure that their diagnostic techniques can continue to progress to the benefit of all. We have all read and heard this week—it has been referred to this morning—about Professor Robert Winston and his pioneering unit at Hammersmith hospital and the work that it is preparing to carry out in the next few days. I heard him speak on the radio this morning and it was thrilling. We must ensure that what was stated in the White Paper, and what the Government propose to do about Warnock, are brought into the House in the form of a Bill. I entirely agree with the hon. Member for Slough that the Government should have brought forward a Bill. I have no disagreement with that part of his motion. However, I suspect that when the time comes, we shall vote in different Lobbies about the options in relation to research.

I have my eye on the time and shall deal now with the subject of abortion. In many ways, that issue has occupied a disproportionate amount of time in the debate. I wish to put the Abortion Act 1967 into context. I remind hon. Members that that Act marked a milestone in women's history. There had been years of struggle and campaigning throughout the country before the legislation giving safe, legal National Health Service abortion rights was finally enacted. That Act freed British women from the dangers of illegal back-street abortions and self-induced abortions which, for some, had caused severe illness, subsequent infertility and even death. Between 1952 and 1953—only two years—110 deaths were recorded from abortion, compared with only six between 1983 and 1985. Surely that shows the progress that has been made in terms of women's deaths. It is a substantial and significant decrease and a direct result of the fact that abortion is legislated for and carried out safely and legally.

In answer to a point made by the right hon. Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine)—I know that he has had to leave—there is no such thing under the Abortion Act as abortion on demand. We do not have abortion on demand in this country. British women have no right in law either to contraception or to abortion. The Act merely makes abortion legal within specified limits, which are entirely at the discretion of doctors. Women are dependent on two doctors agreeing that there are legal grounds for abortion before it can be performed.

Some hon. Members may agree with me that a way of ensuring safe, early abortions would be to have some sort of self-referral up to 12 or 14 weeks. Alas, we are not yet at that stage in the House, but still defending the 1967 Act. The law does not require health authorities to provide an abortion service. As a result, the level of provision varies considerably between districts. In some areas 90 per cent. of abortions are carried out on the National Health Service and in others the figure is shamefully less than 10 per cent.

That is why the private sector has had to have a role. The private abortion sector developed after the 1967 Act to meet the needs which could not be met by the NHS. I keep abreast of events and I know that private clinics would be only too glad if the NHS had the resources and was allowed to take over the facilities that the clinics have to provide. So please let us not go round accusing the private sector, as hon. Members do so intemperately, of making millions out of women's misery.

The control of fertility is fundamental to women achieving real equality and choice in their lives. The hon. Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess) spoke not of equality but of the superiority of women. If women cannot decide freely whether and when to have a child, they are constrained in all the other important decisions of their lives. They cannot decide about personal relationships, the type of job that they want or the size of their families. They cannot decide on participation in a whole range of social and political activities. In many ways, that is why there are so few women in the House. Because women do not have that control over their lives they cannot say, "For this period of my life I shall do that and for that period I shall do such and such." I beg hon. Members to believe that until we accord women dignity and respect, and until we say to them, "You can make the decision—one hopes in conjunction with your partner or husband—about what you will do with your life and the size of your family", women can never achieve genuine equality.

Some have continued to say that the majority of abortions are carried out for what they call social reasons. Others have gone further and renamed the social reasons "trivial reasons". I do not regard the reasons of the majority of women having an abortion as trivial. They think carefully about it. Some are mothers, and both their families' and their own futures are involved. They have to make difficult, complicated and sometimes unpleasant decisions, so let us not look at them with disrespect but accord them some dignity in their decisionmaking. Let us not trivialise this difficult subject. Women do not want an abortion if they can avoid it, but there are many reasons why it may be necessary. Slip-ups occur and difficulties are created which are not always of their own making. For Conservative Members who support the totality of the motion, which I do not, to suggest that women are trivial is to demean women's dignity. I do not believe that they are trivial, so I hope that the motion will fall. Once again, we have aired the argument about abortion—linked, unfortunately, with the issue of research. I hope that the research question will at some stage be resolved. For the time being, we should leave the Abortion Act 1967 as it is.

2.10 pm

The Minister of State, Department of Health (Mr. David Mellor): This has been a most absorbing debate. I am glad that we were able to hold it, thanks to the good fortune of my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Mr. Watts) in winning the opportunity to bring this motion forward. As a relative newcomer to this issue, my learning curve has been raised by several notches thanks to the detail with which the issue has been considered today. I congratulate those who have taken part in the debate on the way in which it has been conducted.

The conduct of the debate reflected a deep awareness on both sides of the argument. The right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) who sponsored the Abortion Act 1967 participated in the debate as did his hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton). I am glad that cordial relations have been resumed and that they are now sitting together on the same Bench. The hon. Member for Mossley Hill made a valiant attempt to change the 1967 Act last Session. We also heard contributions today from several of my hon. Friends. I know that some hon. Members have formidable family experiences of matters that are central to this issue. One of my colleagues had the enormously distressing experience of seeing two children die of a severe degenerative condition. Another of my colleagues has adopted a severely handicapped child. Therefore, it is with some diffidence that I seek to respond to the debate. Time is limited and I want to give my hon. Friend the Member for Slough an opportunity to reply. If I miss any points, I trust that I shall be reminded of them and brought to account later.

Life has a funny way of treating us. I first became a friend of my hon. Friend the Member for Slough when I assisted him in selling banana lollies to the unsuspecting population of Hayes as a holiday job. Little did we think then that we would find ourselves here 21 years later debating such important topics. Certainly our customers could have had no such inkling. I shall deal first with some of the points that arose about the Warnock report and the Government's intentions on legislation. I will then consider abortion.

A number of hon. Members raised the important matter of new legislation. We stand completely by the stated intention of legislation during this Parliament. We intend to do so and we have taken some comfort from the fact that, following the publication of the White Paper in November 1987, the debate last February and some of the points raised today, there is a basis on which to proceed. There is a clear recognition on both sides of the question of the need for a framework within which such research and development as is permitted can be taken forward. There is also recognition that the House will have to nerve itself to make a central decision. Leaving on one side the work to deal with the problems of infertility, the House must decide whether further research should be permitted on an embryo up to the age of 14 days. We stand by our proposal that, when the Bill is presented in due course, alternative clauses should be presented, which would permit the House to make its decision on what should be within the law and what should be within the scope of the statutory licensing authority.

My hon. Friend the Member for Berkshire, East (Mr. MacKay), whose courage and vigour on these issues I admire—I say that sincerely—has challenged whether that is a sensible course to adopt. My reply is that there is no other principled basis on which we could proceed. At heart, it is for hon. Members to decide on the basis of individual conscience at what point the work of embryos should not be permitted. The Government are not abdicating responsibility in offering the House, as we propose to do, a clear choice. A framework will be established, which the Government and the House believe is important and necessary, because it will have the effect of bringing under regulation matters that cannot merely be left to develop haphazardly and which are already being examined carefully through the work of the Voluntary Licensing Authority. That has been commended by my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) and others and I shall deal briefly with its work in a moment.

Mr. Wigley: I am grateful to the Minister for his earlier remarks. Can the Minister tell the House whether, as we all accept the validity of having a free vote on an issue that crosses party lines and see why such a vote might be facilitated by having alternative clauses presented by the Government, his Department will give its opinion on the best way forward, as it has responsibility for these matters?

Mr. Mellor: As I understand it—and I am sure that hon. Members whose experience is greater than mine will correct me if I am wrong—my predecessors have never hesitated to give their personal opinion on the question of research. I must say that I am impressed by the quality of some of the research that is being carried out and, plainly, it would be part of the Department's duty to give such assistance as it could on the factual basis of that research and its aims, rather in the way that Home Secretaries have to set out some of the factual background to the decision on capital punishment, although the decision is left to individual choice. The Home Secretary makes his views clear as well. That is part and parcel of being a Minister because a Minister does not lose the right to his or her individual conscience on such issues.

I want to deal briefly with the Voluntary Licensing Authority. It has functioned well and I thank those who serve on it for demonstrating the highest standards of public service and integrity. It has shown clearly, in a practical way, that the statutory licensing authority, with which we intend to replace it in time, could work well and make difficult decisions. Although the Medical Research Council and others have been able to support the work of the Voluntary Licensing Authority from public funds, the authority has recently made an application for further financial help. I am glad to be able to announce today that the Government have agreed to contribute to the authority's costs in the next financial year a sum in the region of £45,000, to assist it in carrying out its important work.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East not only raised the question of the benefits of research but sought re-confirmation of the fact that no genetic engineering would be permitted. I am happy to be able to confirm that. Whatever else may or may not be agreed to, that will not be.

Mr. Skinner: Currie's gone. The Government have had an abortion.

Mr. Mellor: I hope that the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) can contain himself. The debate has been serious. I am anxious to treat it seriously and to give answers to some of those who have spoken. I hope that the hon. Gentleman does not propose to disrupt this debate to make a cheap and facile point. I, myself, shall speak for no more than a further five minutes to make way for others.

[Mr. Mellor]

Let me deal with the question of abortion. All of us know how difficult it has proved in recent years for the House to agree whether the 1967 Act needs changing. I am afraid that I cannot say anything today that is different from what has been said by my predecessors and others on a number of occasions. We continue to regard abortion as a matter for private Member's business, and to believe that it would not be appropriate for the Government in any way to seek to take over the responsibility.

We also stand by the decision that we have always reached in these difficult matters that no private Members' legislation should be given Government time. The House will fully understand our difficulty. Where does one draw the line? While abortion for example, is a very important topic, there are many other important topics.

I recognise the difficulties of introducing private Member's legislation when there is a significant body of opinion against it, but I nevertheless feel that we would depart from that view at our peril.

My hon. Friend the member for Slough drew an analogy between the proposals post-Warnock and the abortion proposals. In effect, he asked, "Why should not a range of choices be offered within the framework of a Government Bill?" That argument was advanced skilfully by my hon. Friend and by others but, with respect, I believe that the two matters are different in kind. In the case of abortion a well-established procedure has been accepted in the house for several decades. With the follow-up to Warnock, on the other hand, we are dealing with the way in which the frontiers of science have been pushed back to permit a range of potential experiments that we would not have dreamt possible a few years ago. Such matters have at their heart questions of conscience, but they are also matters on which the Government should be expected to move forward. They are different in kind from the abortion issue, on which tradition is entirely different.

Mr. Steel: Will the Minister keep an open mind on a question that I raised earlier? The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department appeared yesterday to have made a new statement of policy on the Infant Life (Preservation) Act. That Act is not private Members legislation; it is a Government statute. I believe that further thought should be given to the possibility of amending that Act, which would have a consequent effect on the Abortion Act.

Mr. Mellor: I heard the right hon. Gentleman's suggestion and I remember the position from my time at the Home Office. The Infant Life (Preservation) Act merely establishes a time limit before which it is suggested a foetus would not be viable and after which the burden of proof switches to those who would say that it is not viable. Clearly, the line drawn in the Act, which is 28 weeks, is not the right one, and 24 weeks is now right. It is clear that the Government accept that, although my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department has said that he would prefer that to be remedied by private Member's legislation. I am sure that I should pass the matter to him for further consideration.

I was moved—anyone would have been moved—by the eloquent speeches of my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos) and others about the Carlisle baby. No one can hear about the case without feeling some distress. I am afraid that the questions that my hon. Friend raised are within the ambit of my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and fall to be considered by the Director of Public Prosecutions and others. Especially now that the mother concerned has threatened legal action against the health authority I can say no more about the matter than that I know that the health authority concerned conducted a full inquiry. I am sure that lessons were there to be learnt, not least as to why no resuscitation equipment was available. It is a condition of the Secretary of State's licensing of private abortion centres that resuscitation facilities must be available for abortions after 20 weeks. I understand the anxiety about the Carlisle case, but I can say no more about it for the reasons that I have given.

The debate has established a good deal more common ground on the Warnock report than some may have imagined. It has exposed some difficulties that lie in the way of the House reaching a conclusion on abortion, but it has been a helpful and stimulating debate and I am grateful to my hon. Friend for having raised the matter in the way that he did.

Mr. Watts: With the leave of the House, Mr. Speaker, in the limited time that is available to me I am sure that right hon. and hon. Members will understand if I do not pick up many of the points that have emerged during the debate. I have succeeded in at least one of my objectives —to provide an opportunity for a wide-ranging debate on these important issues.

The hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) was slightly critical that my motion dealt with both embryology and abortion. I had two reasons for framing the motion as I did. First, I wished to provide an opportunity for hon. Members to debate the entire range of pro-life issues and it would have been invidious to choose between one or the other. Secondly, in my mind they are connected issues as both involve our attitude to unborn human life.

The reply of my hon. and learned Friend the Minister was rather like the curate's egg. I welcome his renewed commitment to the legislation on embryo research and urge him to introduce it as early as possible, but I was disappointed that my proposal for a way in which the House could reach a conclusion on abortion reform did not find favour with him. He failed to take adequate account of the fact that the Abortion Act 1967 would not have reached the statute book had it not been given extra time by the Government of the day. As that is the legislation which many of us wish to amend, it would be an act of fair play to ensure the time necessary to reach a conclusion.

As I said in my opening remarks, I accept the Government's argument against providing extra time for a private Member's Bill—it was wrong to do it in 1967 and it would be wrong to do it now—but the standing of the House is called into question when we allow our procedures to prevent us from arriving at a decision on an important matter which causes anxiety to many hon. Members and their constituents. I hope that the Minister's remarks do not represent a slamming of the door and a drawing of the bolts, but that he and his ministerial colleagues will be open to further persuasion that this is one way by which reforms could be achieved. He has not said no for all time. I believe that if a way is not found —there may be ways other than those that I have proposed —in every Session we shall spend a great deal of private Members' time debating abortion and Bills seeking to amend the legislation.

It being half-past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

That, at the sitting on Tuesday 20th December—

(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1)(b) of Standing Order No. 14 (Exempted business), Mr. Speaker shall put any Questions necessary to dispose of proceedings on the Motions in the name of Mr. Secretary Moore relating to Social Security not later than Seven o'clock;

(2) If proceedings on the Motion in the name of Mr. John Wakeham relating to Scottish Affairs have not been previously disposed of, Mr. Speaker shall at Ten o'clock put any Questions necessary to dispose of them and of any Amendments to that Motion which may have been selected by him and which may then be moved; and proceedings in pursuance of this paragraph, though opposed, may be decided after the expiration of the time for opposed business. —[Mr. Garel-Jones.]

Egg Industry

2.30 pm

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (Mr. John MacGregor): I wish to make a statement about the egg situation.

When earlier today my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Health indicated that details of any scheme to help the egg industry would not be given until I made a statement to the House on Monday, he was correct. I felt that it was right, in view of the widespread speculation about a scheme, that it was in the interests of the hard-pressed industry itself to signal the Government's intention to introduce such a scheme now. I apologise to the House for any misunderstanding that may have arisen and now wish to make the position clear.

The Department of Health drew the Government's attention this summer to a new and growing problem from salmonella enteritidis phage type 4 linked to eggs, and in August the chief medical officer issued advice to the public on the risks of infection from consumption of raw eggs, or home-made dishes containing raw eggs, and later advised vulnerable people to cook eggs until they were solid. As a result of the Department of Health's information my Ministry acted immediately with the industry to tackle the problem at every point in the production chain. This has led, among other initiatives, to the publication of codes of practice to apply to commercial and breeding flocks.

However, during the past two weeks a great deal of uncertainty has arisen over the implications of the problem for consumers, and that has caused a sharp decline in egg sales. The Government have, therefore, taken steps, through a series of newspaper advertisements starting today, to reiterate the advice of the chief medical officer and to ensure that the facts are clear to everyone.

In view of the adverse impact that this uncertainty has had on the market, the Government have also decided, as a wholly exceptional measure, to introduce short-term measures which will enable eggs to be moved so as to help support the market at a critical period. We are entering into immediate discussions with the industry with a view to implementation within a few days. I am also in touch with the European Commission in respect of any Community aspects of those arrangements.

Early this morning I requested permission to make a statement about the scheme on Monday. Obviously consultations must take place with the industry, but I should like to make it quite clear that there will be no announcement of the Government's decisions on the details of the scheme before that statement, to which I hope you will agree, Mr. Speaker, on Monday.

Dr. David Clark (South Shields): I am glad that the Minister has finally succumbed to our pressure to tell the House about his proposals to help the beleaguered egg and poultry industry. We are pleased, at long last, that the Government have admitted the seriousness of the matter, which has been brought to this level largely by the indiscreet and irresponsible statements of the then Under-Secretary of State for Health. Her statements have devastated the industry. The House knows, the industry knows, and the pubic know, and no matter how great the compensation that the Minister can offer the poultry industry, we must admit that those indiscretions have ruined the lives—and hon. Gentlemen know that I am right—and livelihoods of many hundreds of egg and poultry producers. It is ironic that we—the general public and the taxpayers—must foot the bill. We are paying just as dearly as the poultry producers for the Under-Secretary's gaffe.

I agree with the Minister that the first objective must now be to try to restore public confidence in the industry. I hope that the first step was taken just half an hour ago when the Under-Secretary resigned her position. The problem could have been eased two weeks ago if the Prime Minister had done her duty and sacked the hon. Lady.

The Government have no alternative but to compensate those egg producers whose businesses have suffered as a result of ministerial incompetence. Furthermore, how much compensation does the Minister intend to make available to those workers employed in the industry who will be made redundant as a result of the recent fiasco?

Today, the Minister has referred only to removing excess eggs from the market. We are talking about roughly 15 million eggs a day. The present situation cannot continue for long, and the House knows that removing excess eggs is not the long-term solution to the problem. Given the position into which the Government have got us, the only answer is to try to reduce the supply of eggs. Tragically, that means culling a fair proportion of the British poultry flock.

What are the Minister's plans for paying compensation to those breeders who will be forced to gas their chickens, many of them healthy, to reduce the stock? Has the Minister any idea how much that will cost? Will it cost £10 million, or £40 million, as suggested by the National Farmers Union?

I appreciate that the Minister has had to come to the House in some haste. Will he assure us, however, that when he finalises the details of the scheme—I urge him to do so as quickly as possible as he and I know that poultry producers are going bankrupt right now—he will come to the House to allow us to debate them in full at the earliest opportunity?

Mr. MacGregor: My concern throughout has, of course, been for the consumers and the industry. That is why all the steps that I have taken have been directed to that end. That is why I made a number of comments about the safety of eggs and why I have always clearly stated the chief medical officer's advice. That is why, earlier this week, we decided to go ahead with the advertising campaign that will be conducted this weekend. That is also why I am now considering the scheme.

This scheme is not the first step. We have taken a number of steps ever since the summer to deal with the new and growing problem identified as one particular type of salmonella. We have acted consistently throughout and since the summer.

We now face an abnormal market——

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Markets cannot be abnormal.

Mr. MacGregor: As usual, the hon. Gentleman understands nothing about markets.

In normal circumstances the scheme would have taken many weeks, if not months, to formulate given the abnormal state of the egg market. There is no question, but that, at present, the egg market is most unusual. Because of that, it is taking me a little time to produce the scheme. It is wrong to call it a scheme of compensation; it is a measure to deal with the market situation.

The hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) will understand that there are many practical difficulties about such a scheme. I am sure that he will understand why I do not wish to comment on the details of it until I make my statement on Monday. Whether we have a debate is obviously a matter for discussion through the usual channels.

I assure the hon. Gentleman that, if you, Mr. Speaker, agree, I shall make a statement on Monday.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield): I congratulate my right hon. Friend on his extremely constructive, timely and positive statement.

I believe that I am right in saying that this House is an understanding place and that it is understanding of Members who, from time to time, make mistakes. The tragedy of this case is that the Under-Secretary of State did not apologise for her error. If she had, the House would have forgiven her. Are not the Government liable, because this mistake was made by one of Her Majesty's Ministers? Therefore, my right hon. Friend's proposal is indeed compensation for the many egg and poultry producers who have sustained a massive loss as a result of what has happened.

Does my right hon. Friend accept that many egg and poultry producers have sustained a major loss, not least those in my constituency, in that of my hon. Friend the Member for Congleton (Mrs. Winterton) and in those of many others? Will he therefore make a statement early next week which will give these valuable sections of agriculture the compensation that they deserve?

Mr. MacGregor: I have already twice made it clear that I shall be making a statement on Monday. Today, I am not announcing any arrangements for the scheme. I have said roughly what it is intended to do and that I do not see it as compensation. I am not making a detailed announcement now, but the announcement I have made implies no acceptance of legal liability on the part of the Government.

Now it is important to consider the interests of the consumer and of the industry. That is what we should be thinking about, and that is why I am focusing entirely on ensuring that the full facts are put before the public so that they can see that the risk to normal, healthy people from consuming eggs is small. I hope that they will go on consuming eggs as avidly as they always have done and as I always do. That is the best outcome for the industry, and it is why we put the full facts before the public today.

It is also important to recognise that we face a new problem. That is why we have given in full the chief medical officer's advice, particularly to vulnerable groups. I hope that my hon. Friend will agree that it is because I recognise the industry's position that I am working flat out to produce a scheme that I intend to announce on Monday.

Mr. David Steel (Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale): The Minister appeared to suggest a moment ago that the Under-Secretary of State for Health had been a casual victim of market forces. Surely things are a little more complicated than that. I agree with the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton), some of us will never understand why an instant retraction and apology that the whole House would have understood was not made.

The advertisement this morning states that we eat 200 million eggs a week and that there have been 49 outbreaks of salmonella this year. That represents one outbreak a week on a consumption of 200 million eggs a week. Is not the restoration of a sense of proportion in this more important than shovelling taxpayers' money at the problem? Will the right hon. Gentleman do his best to restore that sense of proportion? Will he pass on a comment made by one of the egg producers in my constituency, which was that he and some of his colleagues in the industry suspect that salmonella may originate from the illegal washing of eggs? Does the Ministry have any information about that?

Mr. MacGregor: The right hon. Gentleman completely misunderstood my reference to an abnormal market; he got it wrong.

I entirely agree with the right hon. Gentleman's main point. It is important to keep a sense of perspective, or, if necessary, to restore one. That is what I have been endeavouring to do throughout.

As for the figures in the advertisement, I want to underline one other point. It is important to understand the statement that the 49 cases are an underestimate. Let us be quite clear what this means. There are and always have been unreported cases of food poisoning from salmonella, usually because its effects are mild. By definition, we do not have these unreported figures. However, in the context of the consumption of 30 million eggs a day, the number of infected cases must be very small indeed. I entirely agree with the right hon. Gentleman that we need to get that message across and that we need to restore this sense of perspective.

As to the right hon. Gentleman's final point, not only the new type of salmonella, but also salmonella in general is often caused by people not observing the normal rules of food hygiene in the home and elsewhere. That is why in the advertisement we have focused sharply on food hygiene in the home. Long before the present concern arose we were considering new booklets about food hygiene in the home which we shall produce early next year. Those are the crucial points. We must keep a proper sense of perspective.

Mr. David Curry (Skipton and Ripon): In his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton), my right hon. Friend said that the Government do not accept legal responsibility for what has happened. May we be quite precise about this? Is it quite clear that the Government are acting in response to the economic crisis in the industry with a voluntary political initiative? Is it clear that this does not imply a legal liability?

Mr. MacGregor: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. He is quite right.

Mr. Dafydd Wigley (Caernarfon): I, too, have an egg producer in my constituency who has had to slaughter a third of his chickens. He is in danger of having to slaughter another third this weekend and losing jobs. Will the Minister give a lead to such producers by telling them that they should take no irrevocable action until the Government have come forward with details? Can he give an assurance that, in contrast to the Chernobyl compensation, which many farmers in my constituency failed to get, there will not be an artificial time cut-off that will debar some producers from any scheme that the Minister may be studying?

Mr. MacGregor: This is quite different from the Chernobyl case, and I am not contemplating a compensation measure. I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for what he said in the first part of his question. He has drawn attention to the precise reason why I signalled the Government's intentions earlier today. I did that because I wanted to give a reassurance before the weekend. I hope that after consultations with the industry full details will be available to the House on Monday.

Sir Peter Emery (Honiton): Will my right hon. Friend accept our gratitude to him for coming to the House to make this limited statement before the weekend? We could not expect all the details to be obtained now, but it is most important to egg producers that my right hon. Friend has indicated the action that the Government are taking.

We have never had a direct contradiction of the statement by my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) that most egg production is affected by salmonella enteritidis. Everybody knows that to be wrong, but it has never been said from the Dispatch Box that it is wrong. May we have that made quite clear, because it will help to give some reassurance to people who eat eggs. Production has been cut, and distribution in Devon has been cut by between 40 and 50 per cent. during the past 10 days. The Government must take that element of disaster in the industry into account when they are working out the compensation. May I have an assurance that they will?

Mr. MacGregor: In the light of what my hon. Friend said at the end of his question, I must make clear yet again that this is not a compensation scheme. I was not here earlier in the day when these matters were being discussed because I was working and am still working flat out on the details of the scheme. I know that that is what the industry, consumers and the House would wish me to do. As I have already said, I hope to be able to give all the details on Monday. These are complex matters and some of the elements have never been considered before. That means that it is inevitably taking a little time.

On my hon. Friend's second point, I repeat that the important thing is to keep putting the facts before the public. One of the difficulties in the past few days is that one sentence or other has been taken alone and often used out of context. That is why it is important to put the totality of the case to consumers and that is why we have issued advertisements. I have made clear on many occasions, and I think it has been picked up, that it is not the case that most eggs are infected.

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South): The Minister spoke about consultation with the EEC. Could he tell the House whether the steps that he has taken since the summer to deal with some or many of the salmonella problems were taken under EEC legislation or under legislation of the United Kingdom? Secondly, bearing in mind that the treaties relating to the agricultural policy refer to "stabilisation of markets", is the expenditure that he expects to announce on Monday covered by the treaty of Rome or by United Kingdom legislation? If it is United Kingdom legislation, will he have to get the permission of the Commission or the Council for this step, or can he do it entirely on his own prerogative?

[Mr. Nigel Spearing]

Mr. MacGregor: The steps that we have been taking since the summer have been pretty well entirely concentrated on ensuring that the industry takes proper health measures and that the difficulties associated with this new and growing problem arising from this one strain of salmonella are being fully attended to in order to minimise them. These steps—codes of practice for the poultry and egg industry, looking at the feed and so on—are steps that we have been taking within our own control in the United Kingdom.

As to the measures that I am now considering, the point is that certain types of schemes have to be cleared with the Commission—for example, to ensure that they are not unfair state aids. Hon. Members often express concern about what they fear might be unfair state aids in other countries, so it is entirely reasonable for the Commission to be involved when such schemes are being considered. That is one reason why I am in touch with the Commission.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett (Pembroke): My right hon. Friend will be aware that I have tabled a series of questions for answer today on the detailed issues that concern the egg industry, and I am happy to wait until Monday for those details. However, would my right hon. Friend respond to a suggestion made by egg producers in my constituency about the possibility of random sampling of eggs from each producer to see whether they are affected, and the issue of a certificate if they are not, which could be displayed at the point of sale? Many of us feel that my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) has done the honourable thing. She was a well respected Member of the Government, and we hope that she will be back to serve the Government in some other capacity.

Mr. MacGregor: I am willing to look at anything that would be helpful either to consumers or to the industry, because they have identical interests in these matters. One of the difficulties about random sampling is that it cannot give any assurance about the rest of the eggs. We could not give cast-iron guarantees.

Mr. Ron Leighton (Newham, North-East): Bearing in mind that the Government do not have any money—it is all taxpayers' money—how much taxpayers' money will this debacle cost? There is the cost of advertising and of removing the eggs from the market, and we do not know about compensation. Will the Minister give us an estimate? Will this not be the most expensive publicity-seeking ministerial announcement in all history? Should there not be a Governmnt health warning on most of the ministerial statements we hear in the House? Many ministerial statements harm my constituents who live on benefit, especially child benefit. No notice is taken——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope that the House will keep to the subject of the statement. The subject is eggs, we must not go beyond that.

Mr. MacGregor: I have already made it clear that I shall be making the announcement about the details of the scheme on Monday.

Mr. Robin Maxwell-Hyslop (Tiverton): Why is my right hon. Friend reticent about producing compensation and calling it such when the Chernobyl disaster was not due to the recklessness of a United Kingdom Minister and this is? Will the funding of the scheme to be announced on Monday come from the Department whose Minister caused the disaster or from my right hon. Friend's Department, which did not?

Will my right hon. Friend confirm that the comment that he made about raw eggs in cooking refers to dishes that are not cooked after the raw eggs are put into them and not to dishes that are cooked after the raw eggs are put into them? My right hon. Friend spoke of dishes in which raw eggs are used, when in much cooking raw eggs are used but the dish is subsequently cooked, and many local authorities are giving wrong advice on the basis of that ambiguity.

Mr. MacGregor: I appreciate my hon. Friend's concern on this issue, but I hope that he will agree that it would be wise for me to wait until I can make a full statement to the House before I go into any details, or I shall be pressed to give other details. As to my hon. Friend's second point, I cannot do better than repeat the advertisement in today's newspapers:

"everyone should avoid eating raw eggs or uncooked foods made from them".

Mr. Brian Sedgemore (Hackney, South and Shoreditch): Will the Minister join me in expressing sorrow at the plight of the former junior health Minister whose political career so far has been quixotic, exotic, ebullient and exciting? Bearing in mind the fact that, as a result of the statement today, many more people will eat eggs and put themselves at risk from salmonella poisoning, does the Minister plan to bring forward a compensation scheme for customers who are poisoned as a result of eating eggs?

Mr. MacGregor: I hope that as a result of reading the advertisements this morning everyone will return to their normal practice of eating eggs. That would be the best thing that could happen. People should also consider the advice of the Chief Medical Officer. He has consistently given that advice for some time and I am anxious that everyone should be aware of it. It is not in the egg industry's interests that people should not take that advice and contract food poisoning. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will do exactly as he said and will encourage people to eat as many eggs as possible, taking account of that advice.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is an interim statement. I shall allow questions to run for a further 10 minutes, and then we must move on. Any hon. Members who are not called will have some priority on Monday.

Mr. Patrick Cormack (Staffordshire, South): Is my right hon. Friend aware that there will be gratitude that once again he has shown such detailed knowledge of and care for the industry? Will he ensure that the aim of the package is proper restitution of the rightful expectations of those who have been deprived in the past fortnight by the outbreak of hysteria? Will he also stress that it has been an outbreak of hysteria and that there is no need for ordinary people to worry about ordinary diets?

Mr. MacGregor: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for his opening remarks. For details of the scheme, he will have to await my statement on Monday. He is absolutely right in saying that people should return to their normal practice and take full notice of our advertisements in the newspapers this morning.

Mr. Kevin Barron (Rother Valley): Is there an upper limit to this monetary intervention in the market, and how is the Ministry likely to pay it?

Mr. MacGregor: The hon. Gentleman must wait for my statement on Monday.

Mr. Den Dover (Chorley): Does my right hon. Friend accept that many hon. Members and people in the egg industry are disappointed with today's advertisements? Should not the Ministry be more positive? May we expect that by Monday some thought will have been given to further advertisements that will be proactive rather than reactive?

Mr. MacGregor: It is important for any Government statement or advertisement of this sort to stick to the facts and be clear about them. The facts that we outlined, for example, at the beginning of the advertisement are clear:

"Eggs are a valuable and nutritious part of a balanced diet. We in Britain eat, on average, 30 million eggs a day—200 million a week. The number of reported cases of food poisoning from salmonella linked to eggs is very small by comparison with the huge numbers of eggs that are consumed."

That is absolutely clear. It is also necessary to repeat the advice given by the chief medical officer, particularly to vulnerable groups, as a result of the new strain of salmonella.

Mr. Donald Anderson (Swansea, East): The Minister has denied legal liability. Can he point to any cause of the abnormal market in eggs other than the reckless statement of his agent, the former junior Minister?

Mr. MacGregor: Many people have made many statements in the past two weeks. The issue has hit the headlines. It is important for it to settle back into the normal run of events and for people to look—but not from the perspective of sensational headlines—at our advertisements which repeat clearly what we have said for a considerable time.

Mr. Tony Baldry (Banbury): It is essential to return egg supply and demand to a better balance. Should not any scheme that seeks to do that have the support of the whole House? We can help to improve the demand part of the equation by reassuring our constituents that there is no danger from eating eggs. They need only to read today's newspaper advertisements to see that the risks are minuscule. Re-establishing a sense of proportion and perspective would be the fairest way of helping egg and poultry producers.

Mr. MacGregor: I entirely agree with my hon. Friend. One important aspect of supply and demand is to get demand to its normal levels.

Mr. Allen McKay (Barnsley, West and Penistone): While the Minister is working flat out on the scheme that is to be announced on Monday—whether it is called compensation or restabilising the industry is immaterial at this stage—will he take into consideration the fact that hundreds of people have been laid off work? If the industry is to be restabilised, let us talk about restabilising them as well.

Can the Minister assure the House that in any future report on the egg industry he will consider whether there is any need to increase the inspectorate, and any need for a report on how hens are kept and the type of feed that they are given? Will he also consider whether the problem of imported food is being increased?

Mr. MacGregor: In answer to the first question, may I say that I have stressed throughout that my concern is with both consumers and the industry, which I want to see in a healthy state. When I refer to the industry, of course I mean all those working in it.

In answer to the second question, some of the matters to which the hon. Gentleman referred, such as feed, and imported feed, are issues that we have been following up in our initiatives since the Department of Health warned us about the problem in the summer. We are taking a number of steps in those directions.

Mr. Bill Walker (Tayside, North): Does my right hon. Friend agree that few areas of human activity are without risk, and that that is particularly true of what we eat? It is important to get the risk into perspective. What has hit the market is a belief that that risk is greater than it is. My right hon. Friend's statement today, and the statement that he is to make on Monday, deal with that very effectively. Certainly egg producers from Scotland to whom I spoke this morning were pleased to know that the Government are moving, and are moving so quickly.

Mr. MacGregor: I agree entirely with my hon. Friend. I think that much of what is happening is being taken out of perspective. My efforts have largely been designed to get it back into perspective and out of the headlines so that people behave in their normal sensible way.

I also entirely agree that in looking at risk in perspective it is necessary to look at other aspects as well as eggs. There are potential difficulties with many other types of food and drink. There are potential risks in practically everything that we do as human beings. What we are doing in this instance is minimising the risk.

Mr. Harry Cohen (Leyton): Although the comments of the Under-Secretary of State for Health appear to have been wrong and damaging, it could be argued that she was only doing her job and drawing attention to the health risk. Is it not the Ministry of Agriculture that has been dilatory in not tackling the problem of contaminated birds and feed long before now, given that the trend of increasing infection was already well known?

Just as when an overcrowded train crashes there are more injuries and fatalities, overcrowded factory farm conditions create an increased spread of infection. Should not the Government consider phasing out factory farming conditions, or some of the worst aspects of them?

Mr. MacGregor: The hon. Gentleman is quite wrong. We have been taking active steps in the Ministry to deal with the problem. In certain salmonella strains new problems are growing in the United States and many other European countries. I have been abroad a good deal in the past two weeks, and I have been discussing the issue with the Ministers of Agriculture in the United States and most of the member states of the European Community. We are all doing what we can to deal with the problem.

[Mr. MacGregor]

The hon. Gentleman is also wrong in what he said in his attack on what he described as factory farming. There is no evidence that free-range eggs are affected any differently from battery hen eggs. We must deal with the problem in both, as indeed we are doing.

Mr. John Greenway (Ryedale): I am sure that the many egg producers in my constituency will welcome my right hon. Friend's statement, and we look forward to his more detailed statement on Monday. Does he not agree, however, that it is most important to maintain a viable egg-producing industry, and that the scheme that he announces on Monday should take all the affected eggs off the market? The worst possible tragedy on top of the tragedy that we have already suffered, would occur if, when the market picks up, we were not able to supply it from our domestic production.

Mr. MacGregor: I agree entirely with my hon. Friend. What we should all be doing—I do not refer just to the statement that I shall make on Monday—is ensuring the proper and full viability of the industry.

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): The Government have given the poultry industry the Christmas dish that it most wanted—the head of the Under-Secretary of State for Health on a plate, suitably garnished with a hard-boiled egg stuffed in her mouth. In view of the fact that a writ has been taken out by one of the largest egg producers against the Under-Secretary of State, will the taxpayer have to pay for that aspect of what the hon. Lady said? Will the taxpayer have to compensate further for the Under-Secretary of State's utterances?

Mr. MacGregor: I can make absolutely no comment on that. Obviously, those are not matters for me.

Mr. Kenneth Hind (Lancashire, West): Those of us who represent egg producers are extremely grateful for the speed with which my right hon. Friend has acted and with which he has listened to our representations. Will he confirm that last week the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service carried out a trawl of egg producers throughout the country, taking thousands of samples, and discovered no salmonella in the eggs?

Mr. MacGregor: I shall have to check the exact results, but certainly in many flocks no salmonella has been identified in checks. However, undertaking inspections of all flocks is a difficult job and not something that we could do.

Mr. Skinner: Will the Minister confirm that for a fortnight the Government have not followed the tradition of collective responsibilty? Two separate Departments of State have been saying different things on this subject. It is only as a result of being dragged to the House today that the Minister has been able to clear up the matter—that is, along with the resignation of the junior Minister.

Will the Minister bear in mind the fact that there is no way in which he can get eggs off the market without rigging the market? If there is to be rigging of the market, we should have it in other respects also. Will the Minister tell his hon. Friends that we have a many stocks of surplus coal and I should like to get rid of those——

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the hon. Gentleman please stick to the statement?

Mr. Skinner: I am just drawing a decent analogy and comparison about the way in which the Government operate. They talk about taxpayers' money being sacrosanct. The Prime Minister is always lecturing us about using taxpayers' money. The shipyard workers in Sunderland would like some of that taxpayers' money——

Mr. Speaker: Order. Please stick to the statement.

Mr. Skinner: Finally, I remind the Minister that a few days ago the Secretary of State——

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is the time for questions. The hon. Gentleman should not remind the Minister.

Mr. Skinner: I ask the Minister to remember, because he may not remember—but we remember—that the Secretary of State for Health repeated at the Dispatch Box what the junior Minister had said. If it is right that the junior Minister has to get the sack, in collective responsibility the Secretary of State should follow suit because he said from the Dispatch Box that the hon. Lady was correct. The Secretary of State and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food cannot both be right.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health and I have been working closely together on this issue since August. As for the hon. Gentleman's comparison with the coal industry, I advise him that the poultry and egg industry has been operating profitably on its own for a long period. If it had sustained the kind of losses under which the coal industry operated during the hon. Gentleman's party's period in government, there would not be a poultry industry today.

Mr. Ivor Stanbrook (Orpington): Is it not highly probable that the basic cause of this trouble is a disease that has been brought about by confining poultry in unnatural conditions? If that is so, should not the industry concerned primarily bear the cost of remedying the problem rather than calling on the taxpayer to bail it out?

Mr. MacGregor: Since the answer to the first part of my hon. Friend's question is no, the second part does not arise.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes (Harrow, West): Does my right hon. Friend agree that the decrease in egg sales started before my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) said anything on the subject? Does he accept that, now that she has honourably and bravely resigned from her post, the egg producers have a major role to play in re-establishing the confidence of the British public in feeding methods? Is not that the most important matter now?

Mr. MacGregor: I agree with my hon. Friend that the most important thing is to re-establish the confidence of the consumer. The egg industry has the greatest interest in that and is working closely with us to achieve it. One of the most important elements in re-establishing confidence is to get rid of many of the false impressions. That is precisely the purpose of many of the advertisements that we have introduced today.

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr Garel-Jones.]

3.10 pm

Mr. Toby Jessel (Twickenham): We have just been discussing an important item of diet. To keep well and fit people need not only good food, but exercise. That is where sport and the Sports Council come in. Britain in the 1980s has seen a great revival in health and strength. Without doubt physical fitness has a continuing part to play. In that, we owe much to the Government's encouragement of the work of the Sports Council.

The Sports Council exists under a royal charter which sets out its object as being to

"foster the knowledge and practice of sport and physical recreation among the public at large and the provision of facilities therefor."

Led by its distinguished chairman, John Smith, it does excellent work for Britain and should be most warmly praised.

Sport in Britain has a tremendous ally in the person of my hon. Friend the Minister for Sport. It is well known and understood that under the royal charter and the Act the Sports Council is autonomous. Consequently, my hon. Friend the Minister is always scrupulously careful not to tell the Sports Council what to spend its money on, or even to look as if he is doing so. He has said so both publicly and privately. Perhaps at this point we should consider an analogy with Bagehot's doctrine on constitutional monarchy:

"The sovereign has, under a constitutional monarchy such as ours, three rights—the right to be consulted, the right to encourage, the right to warn."

I do not believe that the Sports Council would say that its Minister was always to encourage but never to warn.

The Sports Council is funded publicly through the Minister, who is in the Department of the Environment. The Minister is answerable to Parliament and Parliament to the public. Thus in practice there is in one sense an element of accountability because to uphold its funding the Sports Council needs friends in Parliament and among the public. It follows that the Sports Council needs to make it easy for the Minister for Sport to come to Parliament and ask us to vote for generous funding for its work. That means that it is wise for it not only to do good for sport, as it does, but to ensure that it acts as a good neighbour. That is recognised in its policy document. "Sport In The Community. . .The Next Ten Years," which states:

"the Sports Council has a duty . . . the clear message of all research and experience in the last decade is that facility provision alone is inadequate: an understanding of users' requirements and the needs of the local community (including non-users) . . . are all needed . . .the Sports Council will . . . continue to advise on the aesthetics, efficiency and cost-effectiveness of sports building design."

Thus it is the Sports council's policy to take into account the interests of the local community of non-users. Clearly, when any facility is provided, the non-users comprise the immediate local community bunched around it whereas the users, by the nature of things, are most scattered. No one with the interests of sport at heart should ever put the Sports Council, perhaps unwittingly, into the position of backing a scheme which is deeply unpopular and damaging to the local environment of non-users. If the Sports Council ever finds itself drawn into that, it would be wise to pause, hold back and think twice about financial participation, even if, earlier, it gave support on the basis of what then would have been incomplete information.

All of that applies to the Teddington floodlight scheme in my constituency. That scheme is so deeply unpopular that at two public meetings the public voted against it, first in the middle of August by 132 to 17 and then early in September by more than 400 to 12. The latter was a majority of about 30 to one against.

On 2 November I questioned my hon. Friend the Minister and asked:

"will he discuss the damage to the good will of the Sports Council because of its part funding of a horrible scheme to erect eight floodlight towers, 52 ft high and emitting 66,000 W in the heart of a residential area of Teddington? . . . Will my hon. Friend invite the chairman of the Sports Council to consider instead an improved playing field for Teddington school, but without any floodlights?"—[Official Report, 2 November 1988; Vol. 140, c. 1014-5.]

The school needs an improved playing field surface, but it does not need the floodlights. The Sports Council needs the floodlights, but there is no need for the Sports Council to insist on a scheme in that location. The floodlights could go somewhere more suitable and the borough council, perhaps with some sponsorship, could fund the provision of turf for the school but without the floodlights.

The dazzle from the floodlights would be powerful, brilliant and overwhelming. As with car headlights, it is not just the wattage that matters, although that is high at 66,000 W with the floodlights. The glare surrounded by blackness exhausts and tires people's eyes and sometimes causes headaches. I cannot see how families with young children can expect to get them to sleep at 8 pm or 9 pm without a total blackout system.

The floodlights would be provided for a hockey pitch which requires twice as much light as soccer because the ball is smaller and moves faster. I hope that no one will suggest that some marginal reduction in the wattage would make much difference. People are also concerned about noise at matches and practice sessions, about traffic and parking problems, and about the stark ugliness of eight tall pylons in a green area of special character along the banks of the river Thames.

The proposal does not affect only my constituency. It will also affect the constituency of Kingston upon Thames which is represented by my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury. There are several blocks of flats on the Kingston side of the river which have been purchased on leases. The people living in those flats mostly do not have gardens and they bought the flats because they wanted a view of the river Thames. They do not want to look out on ugly pylons by day and on brilliant floodlights by night.

The cost of the scheme would be £380,000. It has been suggested that the Sports Council would produce £100,000 of that; £50,000 was to have come from Shell's club, the Lensbury club, but the club has withdrawn out of respect for local opinion. I ask my hon. Friend the Minister to draw the Sports Council's attention to the club's action, which might be seen as an example for the Sports Council. A further £50,000 was to have come from local sports clubs and £180,000 from Richmond upon Thames borough council, which is both the education and the planning authority. Acting as the planning authority,

[Mr. Toby Jessel]

Richmond upon Thames has flouted local public opinion by granting planning permission in defiance of huge majorities at the two local public meetings.

My constituents accept the need for the school to have an improved turf, but not the floodlights. A group of local councillors and others have been carried away by enthusiasm for the scheme and have taken a cavalier attitude to the needs and interests of people living around. All along, consultation has been inadequate, which may give rise to law suits if the scheme is persisted with. I stress, in particular, to my hon. Friend that Richmond upon Thames borough council has been less than candid in telling the Sports Council that it is being asked to put money into a scheme that is deeply detested locally. The Sports Council has been deceived on that point. In view of that, it is not enough to make the obvious point that the Sports Council has no planning locus, because that might imply that the Sports Council needs to take no interest whatever in the profoundly hostile local reaction. That is contrary to the Sports Council's own policy about sport in the community, which I quoted earlier, and it ignores the need for public goodwill and the reputation that the Sports Council wants to have as a good neighbour.

Some months ago, the Sports Council could have argued plausibly that it was not aware of the scheme's deep unpopularity. That is not the case now that this has been drawn to the Sports Council's attention. I cannot believe that the Sports Council, which is made up of decent and honourable people, would want to ride roughshod over other people's quiet enjoyment of their houses and flats. I ask my hon. Friend to draw the Sports Council's attention to every one of these points and to invite the chairman of the Sports council to comment fully on every point. I hope that wisdom will prevail and that the Sports Council will find a suitable site elsewhere to meet the growing need and demand for hockey pitches and turn away from the collision course on which it has embarked.

3.22 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Colin Moynihan): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel) on securing this debate and on speaking so eloquently and knowledgeably on the subject of the improvements to the pitch at Teddington school. I was, of course, aware of the scheme before this debate and have received detailed representations from my hon. Friend on the subject.

The subject of today's debate is accountability and funding of the Sports Council and I hope that my hon. Friend will allow me to concentrate on that for a few minutes before responding to the particular points that he has made about the pitch at Teddington.

First, I was delighted to announce last month an increase of £2.265 million in the council's grant, which will have a real impact on the funding of the Regional Council for Sport and Recreation as well. Since 1979-80, central Government's grant to the Sports Council has increased from £15.5 million to more than £39 million in the present financial year—a substantial increase in real terms. In addition to this sum, local authorities are now estimated to be spending about £800 million a year on sport and recreation. Private sponsorship of sport this year will approach £180 million. So total spending on sport is around £1 billion and there is much to show for it. Participation has increased from 17 million people in 1977 to an estimated record this year of 23 million people.

There are now over 1,000 swimming pools compared with 440 in 1970, 1,117 sports halls compared with 770 only seven years ago and 99 artificial sports pitches, compared with 30 in 1982. We can all be proud of these new facilities and developments.

The House will be aware that I have made significant changes to the membership of the Sports Council. When I took over as Minister for Sport 18 months ago, I was concerned that the Sports Council had become too large to make important decisions in an effective manner. I was myself a member of the council between 1983 and 1985 and, even then, when the council was below its final peak of 32, we would spend many long hours discussing subjects that bore little or no relevance to our two main objectives of increasing participation in sport and developing excellence.

That is why I raised the possibility of restructuring the council in my open letter of a year ago to John Smith, the chairman. Many of the replies that I received to that letter agreed that the Council was too large. So I decided to reduce it substantially by not reappointing those whose terms of office expired in the summer and and by asking others to resign.

The new council, with 14 members, provides a new streamlined and efficient approach, which reflects the changes and challenges developing in sport today and provides a framework to meet the opportunities for sport in the 1990's. I decided to appoint, first and foremost, sports men and women—Sebastian Coe, Richard Fox, and Maggie Hohmann. How right Adrian Moorhouse was to comment in The Times end column on Wednesday of this week that he "would also like to see a way for the international swimmers themselves to have some input to the committees".

He went on:

"In Seoul we had a team with the oldest average age ever, and swimmers are now mature enough to deserve some say in how the early years of swimming's professional era should be managed.".

So it is right that Maggie Hohmann and Mary Peters—an impressive sports woman herself not so long ago—will have the opportunity to take a special interest in women in sport. Tim Marshall, a wheelchair athlete and a member of my review group on sport for the disabled will take a close interest in the council's role in that area.

It is important that governing bodies take note of this changing emphasis in representation at national level and provide positions at all levels of their committee structures for coaches and active or recently retired sports men and women who have both the ability and time available to have a vote and representation throughout their sports. Governing bodies still have strong representation through Ron Emes in canoeing, Charles Palmer in judo, John Smith, the chairman, who is a member of the Football League management committee, Peter Yarranton, the vice-president of the Rugby Union, and Norman Jacobs, one of the new members, who is a steward of the British boxing board of control. I also felt that it was vital to recognise the growing role that the private sector is playing in all aspects of sport. That is why I am delighted that David Simon, the Managing Director of BP has agreed to join the Council. He will bring the expertise needed to maximise the many private sector opportunities.

I am delighted that the Council is setting up three new groups which will act as consultative bodies to the Council. First, there will be a Committee of sports men and women in which Sebastian Coe, Richard Fox and Maggie Hohmann will play a key role. Secondly, a group of top business men will complement David Simon's role. They will be: John Quinton of Barclay's bank, Michael Parker of Saatchi and Saatchi, John Brackenbury of Brent Walker, Neil Shaw of Tate and Lyle, Michael Lowy of the British Sports and Allied Industries Federation. Thirdly, the chairmen of the regional council for Sport and Recreation will have direct access to me, unlike the other two groups. The council will also have formal consultations with the British Olympic Association and will, of course, continue to consult the Central Council of Physical Recreation.

I know that the Sports Council is fully committed to ensuring that the new arrangements will work, and will serve the interests of sports men and women.

I referred earlier to the increase in participation in sport and recreation. I can well understand that the resulting increase in these of facilities can sometimes result in conflict between participant and local residents—as my hon. Friend the member for Twickenham illustrated today.

I am aware of the background to the case. I know of my hon. Friend's opposition to the proposed development of the pitch at Teddington and of the opposition of those who attended the public meeting to which he referred. I have discussed the subject with him on several occasions. He has worked as assiduously as ever on behalf of his constituents and has also been in touch with my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning.

As my hon. Friend explained, the application submitted by Richmond education authority was for permission to lay an astroturf hockey pitch on part of the school playing fields and to erect eight sets of floodlights on pylons around the pitch. My hon. Friend sought to persuade Ministers to call in the planning application before the council deemed itself permission.

My hon. Friend has claimed three grounds in support of his case for a call-in. I assure him that Ministers considered each of these most carefully, and it may be helpful to the House if I take a few minutes to explain our response to each of them.

First, Richmond had a self-interest in deeming itself planning permission. Councils deem themselves planning permission quite frequently, but they are required to refer the application to the Secretary of State only where the development conflicts with the development plan. There is no suggestion that that is the case with this scheme.

Secondly, my hon. Friend pointed out that the area has been designated one of special character. The local plan recognises that special character and Ministers have no reason to believe that the planning committee did not take this into account in its deliberations.

Thirdly, my hon. Friend has suggested that the Royal London borough of Kingston was not adequately consulted. I understand that it was in fact consulted on 12 July. What happened after that is between the two borough councils.

In the circumstances, Ministers concluded that the planning issues raised were of no more than local significance and did not justify the Secretary of State's intervention.

I understand that Richmond council deemed itself planning permission on 8 September after a full debate. That means that Ministers are no longer able to call in the application. I am told, however, that the council has imposed conditions relating to the permission of screening for the site and to the hours of use of the floodlights and the sports pitch.

Mr. Jessel: Is my hon. Friend aware that at two public meetings to which I referred, where there were enormous votes by the public against this scheme, Richmond council sent two planning officers as observers who failed to report the result of those votes to the local planning committee? Is it not totally wrong for the Sports Council to be expected, as it needs good will, to rely on that planning decision as interpreting the wishes of local people in view of the Sports Council's policy for non-users as set out in "Sport in the Community—The Next Ten Years"? Will my hon. Friend now address himself to the points that I raised in the debate?

Mr. Moynihan: I was unaware of the presence of those officials and the extent to which they debriefed their council. The Sports Council should be fully aware of as many points as are available when making its decisions on grant aid. Of course, the Sports Council should have that additional information before it when it makes a final decision, and I shall ensure that the information is brought to its attention.

Just before my hon. Friend intervened, I was talking about floodlights. As he knows, floodlights may be used only until 10 pm on weekdays, 8 pm on Saturdays and 6 pm on Sundays. The school will use the hockey pitch by day and the local hockey clubs will use it in the evenings and at weekends.

As my hon. Friend said, the total cost of the scheme is £380,000. The Sports Council has said that it will give a grant of £100,000 towards the total cost. On 2 November, the hon. Member asked me in the House whether I would raise with the chairman of the Sports Council the issue of its part-funding of the scheme. He asked me about it again today. In my answer I explained that I had no locus to intervene on planning grounds, and this remains the case. I nevertheless did undertake to ensure that the chairman of the Sports Council received details of my hon. Friend's representations to the House. This I did in a letter which I sent to the chairman, John Smith, last month. In his reply, the chairman has drawn attention to the fact that the need for an intensive use pitch in the Teddington area is recognised in the regional recreation stategy and in the London playing fields strategy. The chairman supports the advice given by his officers and by the Regional Council for Sport and Recreation that such a pitch is needed and that, to ensure intensive use, floodlighting is an essential part of the scheme.

I understand that last Wednesday my hon. Friend spoke to John Smith on the intensity of the floodlighting and that Mr. Smith has asked his officers to examine ways in which the provision of lighting could be kept to the minimum level compatible with an efficient intensive use facility. My hon. Friend will of course appreciate that the council has a responsibility to ensure that the floodlighting does the job for which it is provided.

It is on these grounds that the Sports Council has approved grant in aid for the project. Like me, the chairman of the council can make no comment on the merits of the planning decision, which must be entirely the responsibility of the local authority.

Having made my hon. Friend's representations known to the Sports Council, and aware of the relationship between the Minister and the Sports Council as laid down in the Royal Charter and approved by the House, I regret that there is nothing further that I can do. However, I will, of course, ensure that the Sports Council members are provided with a copy of the comments that my hon. Friend has made in the House today, which adequately reflect the strongly-felt opinions of my hon. Friend and a number of his constituents. I will ensure, too, that every view which has been drawn to this House's attention does not go just to the chairman by virtue of the presentation of a copy of today's Hansard, but will be personally sent by me to all members of the Sports Council.

Mr. Jessel: Will my hon. Friend ask the Sports Council especially to comment on its need for good will from Parliament and the public, and its need to act as good neighbours and not to involve itself in highly unpopular schemes which are damaging to its reputation, because they comprise an uncivilised act towards people living round about?

Mr. Moynihan: I have always had the highest respect for the good will of the Sports Council when coming to its decisions, and I shall ensure that that specific point is drawn to its attention.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twenty-four minutes to Four o'clock.

Written Answers to Questions

TRANSPORT

M1-M6 (Commercial Traffic)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish his Department's projection of the increased volume of commercial traffic on the M1 and the M6 following the opening of the Channel tunnel in 1993.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department prepares forecasts of national traffic. Where specific trunk road improvements are being assessed, local traffic forecasts are prepared. Projections are not otherwise made for specific roads.

Drivers (Disqualification)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take action to ensure that individuals convicted and disqualified from driving in any part of the United Kingdom will be denied the right to drive throughout the United Kingdom during their period of disqualification.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Northern Ireland (like the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man) has an entirely separate driver licensing system to that for Great Britain. British courts have no jurisdiction in Northern Ireland on driver licensing matters, and disqualifications imposed on the mainland are not valid there. There are at present no plans to change these arrangements.

Bus Drivers

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list any changes in the terms and conditions of employment of bus drivers employed by London Buses Limited, bearing on their health and the safety of bus passengers, since he assumed responsibility for London Regional Transport.

Mr. Portillo: Limits on public service vehicle drivers' hours of duty are prescribed by law to ensure safety. The requirements are standard for all bus operators. Other terms and conditions of employment are matters for the operators themselves.

Roads (Expenditure)

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the level of both capital and current expenditure by (a) central Government and (b) local government on Britain's roads in each year since 1974-75.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Expenditure figures for local roads spending prior to 1978-79 are not readily available in cash. In order to give (as nearly as practical) a consistent series of data, the following table gives expenditure for 1974-75 to 1979-80 on a price base of November 1978 (source Cmnd 7841), and expenditure for 1987-88 (source, Transport Statistics Great Britain) adjusted for the change in GDP since the third quarter of 1978-79.

[1] Structural maintenance of national roads was reclassified as capital expenditure in 1983. Figures in the series 1979-80—1987-88 reflect this classification while figures in the series 1974-75—1979-80 do not.

Traffic Congestion (London)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with London borough councils about the causes and cures of recent widespread traffic jams in inner London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has regular contact with the police, London borough officers and the traffic signals control unit about traffic conditions. In the highly interdependent London network, congestion is often caused by incidents (breakdowns, accidents, roadworks) on local roads. Because traffic volumes are high, minor incidents can have a widespread knock-on effect.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the impact of the partial closure of Battersea bridge on the traffic flow in inner London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This is primarily a matter for the London borough of Wandsworth as the highway authority and for neighbouring authorities.

Crash Barriers

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for installing crash barriers on duel carriageway stretches of the A34 particularly at Gore hill in Berkshire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have a major programme to install central reserve safety fencing along the dual carriageway lengths of the A34 between the M3 at Winchester and Oxford. Work is due to start early in the new year. It will take about two years to complete. Precise timing of the Gore hill section depends on overcoming certain technical difficulties.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will invite tenders for the second Severn bridge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has sent a notice to the Official Journal of the European Communities for publication today asking groups of firms interested in bidding:

(i) for the design, construction financing and operation and

(ii) for the design and construction only of a second Severn crossing to submit themselves for selection as tenderers. This initial selection process has been introduced at the request of the industry to cut down wasted effort in preparing a full tender. Applications to be considered for selection must be returned to the Department of Transport by mid-January. The groups selected to submit full tenders will be announced towards the end of February. Guidelines for these tenders will be published in the spring.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Students (Statistics)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the age participation index and qualified participation index for each year since 1979 (a) for universities only, (b) for PSHE institutions only and (c) for all higher education institutions.

Mr. Jackson: The information required is as follows:

Teachers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will implement the International Labour Organisation rulings on the rights of employees to negotiate with their employers in relation to teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 11 November at column 318.

Education Reform

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what effect he expects that state schools that opt out and function independently will have on preparatory schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Schools which become grant-maintained will remain within the maintained sector of education, and will increase the diversity of provision available to parents within that sector. There will be no direct effect on preparatory schools although ultimately we expect that increased diversity and competition will encourage all schools (including preparatory schools) to maintain and improve their standards and responsiveness to those they serve.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the effect of the Education Reform Act on school-theatre and museum and theatre visits.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has no reason to believe that the level of school visits to theatres and museums need change markedly as a result of the provisions of the Education Reform Act. The Act clarifies earlier legislation in establishing that schools may not charge for any provision offered during school hours, with the exception of individual music tuition. Charges may be made for visits and activities provided outside school hours, unless these are required for a prescribed examination syllabus or for the national curriculum. Restrictions on charging do not prevent local authorities and schools from seeking voluntary contributions in support of particular activities and we expect that parents will continue to support activities which they regard as educationally worth while.

Student Loans

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will reconsider the limitations on mature students, particularly those nearing or at retiring age in respect of the Government's proposals in the White Paper on "Student Top-up Loans," where anyone commencing higher education at the age of 40 years or over will have to repay the loan up to and until the age of 60 years.

Mr. Jackson: The Government have invited comment on the repayment regime but we want students up to the age of 50 to have the benefit of loans. Under our proposals the annual repayments made by graduates approaching the age of 60 will be no more and no less than repayments made by younger graduates in the same economic circumstances. Any debt still outstanding at the age of 60 will be cancelled.

Veterinary Schools (Research)

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what have been the sources of funding in veterinary schools over the last five years;

(2) what revenue from commercial sources has been derived from publicly funded research in veterinary schools over the last five years.

Mr. Jackson: Universities (of which veterinary schools are component parts) receive general funding in the form of block grant from the University Grants Committee and from various other sources. It is not possible to identify how elements of that income flow to individual faculties and schools. The available data on specific income (for research contracts and other services) in veterinary science are shown below. Information is not available on the revenue from commercial sources derived from publicly funded research.

[1] Includes income from commercial sources.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the research objectives of veterinary schools.

Mr. Jackson: Such objectives are for each university to determine.

Scientific Equipment

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is available to his Department regarding expert estimates of the annual percentage increase in real terms of costs of scientific equipment needed for priority areas of research identified by the Advisory Board for the Research Councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend receives advice each year from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils on the sums to be allocated to each of the research councils in support of priority areas of research. This includes provision for scientific equipment and takes account of cost movements and of changes in the nature and standard of equipment which is available.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to receive advice from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils arising from the board's commissioned survey of scientific equipment provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that the ABRC has not yet received the report of the survey it has commissioned on scientific equipment provision, and that it is unlikely that the board will offer my right hon. Friend advice on this matter before next spring.

Correspondence

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place in the Library his letter and attachment of 28 November sent to the hon. Member for Blackburn in answer to his question of 19 October.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Copies of my letter and attachment have been placed in the Library.

Grant-maintained Schools (Ballots)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report the names, areas and type of those schools in respect of which he received a notification by 30 November concerning a governors' resolution or parent petition for a ballot for a grant-maintained school, the schools being ones affected by a section 12 and 13 proposal undecided on 4 August; and what was the total number of schools so affected.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Notification of a governors' resolution or parent petition for a ballot has been received in respect of the following 18 schools which were subject to published section 12 or 13 proposals published by but undecided on 4 August:

School	LEA	Type
Queensbury	Bedfordshire	13-18 County Mixed Comprehensive

Student Unions

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will place in the Library the correspondence between his Department and the National Union of Students concerning automatic membership of student unions; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what recent representations he has received from the National Union of Students regarding the automatic membership of student unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 2 December 1988]: The NUS has made no recent representations. The last exchange of correspondence between the NUS and Ministers on this subject followed a meeting which I held with the NUS on 29 February. This exchange preceded the announcement of the survey and I do not think that it would now be appropriate to place it in the Library.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place in the Library a copy of each of the returned questionnaires for his review of student unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 2 December 1988]: No.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what was the total number of questionnaires for his Department's review of student unions (a) sent out and (b) returned, and what is the percentage of the latter to the former;

(2) how many questionnaires for his review of student unions were sent to (a) student unions, (b) institutions of higher and further education and (c) the National Union of Students; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 2 December 1988]: Questionnaires were issued to 70 institutions in Great Britain. Each institution received four copies but it was for each to determine, against the definition of a student union used for the survey, how many separately completed questionnaires to return. Institutions were invited to involve their local union(s) in completing the questionnaire but no questionnaires were issued direct to local unions for return to the Department. A copy was sent to the NUS for information.

By 1 December a total of 86 returns had been received from 68 institutions. Returns from the remaining two institutions are expected within a few days.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy towards treating the National Union of Students as a representative negotiating body; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer of 2 December 1988]: The Department consults as appropriate, but does not negotiate, with the National Union of Students.

Natural Environmental Research Council

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what he assesses will be the impact of funding cuts for the Natural Environmental Research Council on working on practical projects involving volunteers in the area of nature conservation: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 2 December 1988]: The staff reductions NERC has announced include one post concerning bat ecology, where work done in the past has involved volunteers. Otherwise, volunteers are involved only on projects commissioned by customers, and their future involvement will be dependent on customer support.

ENVIRONMENT

Civil Defence

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what grants were authorised to be paid by his Department for capital works carried out under the Civil Defence (Water Supplies) Regulations 1949 in each of the financial years 1985-86 to 1987-88 inclusive; to which authorities they were paid; and for what purposes;

(2) what grants were authorised to be paid by his Department for capital works carried out under the Civil Defence (Sewerage) Regulations 1949 in each of the financial years 1985-86 to 1987-8, inclusive; to which authorities they were paid; and for what purposes.

Mr. Moynihan: Grant authorised by the Department since 1985-86 for capital works relating to water authority civil defence functions has been for structural and accommodation works for emergency control centres, as follows:

Water authority	Financial year	Amount of grant (75 per cent. of cost) £
Anglian	1985-86	3,794
	1986-87	102,750
	1987-88	19,156
Severn Trent	1987-88	173,905
Southern	1987-88	4,050
Wessex	1985-86	2,639
	1986-87	18,731
	1987-88	128,974
Yorkshire	1985-86	4,908
	1986-87	23,625
	1987-88	262,267
	TOTAL	744,799

Wildlife and Countryside Act

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his proposals to amend section 53 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 following the decision in the case of Rubinstein and another v. Secretary of State for the Environment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Our intention is to introduce legislation, when a suitable opportunity occurs, to return to the situation that was assumed to exist prior to the judgment in the Rubinstein case. This will enable surveying authorities, on the discovery of evidence, to make orders correcting mistakes in the recording of rights of way on the definitive map.

Water Quality (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many individual occasions the level of (a) nitrate (b) aluminium and (c) other substances in Nottingham water supplies has exceeded the levels in EEC drinking water directives.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand from the water authority that within the last 12 months there have been no individual occasions when aluminium has exceeded the limits laid down in the EC drinking water directive in the city of Nottingham drinking water supplies.

The nitrate standard has been marginally exceeded (at times of peak demand) from a source serving about 2,000 people in the city but this does not constitute a risk to health.

A single sample failed to meet the directive requirements relating to iron.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's policy on the import of foreign toxic waste into the United Kingdom for treatment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) on 23 November at columns 4-5.

Toxic Chemical Incinerators

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many toxic chemical incinerators there are in the United Kingdom; and what are their locations.

Mr. Virginia Bottomley: There are three merchant incinerators in the United Kingdom which process toxic chemical wastes: at Ellesmere Port (Cheshire), Fawley (Hampshire) and Pontypool (Gwent). These are subject to the control of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. In addition, the inspectorate, together with Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate (in Scotland) and the alkali and radiochemical inspectorate (in Northern Ireland) exercise control over 77 chemical incinerators which burn only waste generated on the site by a related industrial process.

Raptors (Illegal Sales)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to obtain information from the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds relating to the prices commanded by illegally sold British birds of prey.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. Although the Department's licensing and registration functions are useful inhibitions to the sale of illegally taken birds of prey, it has no direct responsibility for enforcing the law prohibiting their illegal taking, which is a matter for the police. I therefore have no reason to seek information about the prices at which birds of prey are sold.

Lowland Heath

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of voluntary conservation bodies to discuss the draft flora, fauna and habitat directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My noble Friend, the Minister for Housing, Environment and Countryside, met representatives of voluntary conservation bodies to discuss the draft directive on 18 November. I explained the current position on the directive in my answer to my hon. Friend, the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Sir T. Skeet) on 29 November, at column 200-20.

Nuclear Waste (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what investigations have been made in the county of South Yorkshire to see if the soil strata is suitable for low or high-level nuclear waste; and how many suitable sites have been discovered.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: UK Nirex Ltd. is responsible for the field work necessary to identify potential sites for a deep disposal facility for low and intermediate-level radioactive waste. No part of the United Kingdom is ruled out at this stage.

Heat-generating (high-level) radioactive waste is being stored at British Nuclear Fuels works at Sellafield for about 50 years until levels of radioactivity have declined sufficiently to facilitate disposal. No work is being undertaken to identify potential disposal sites for this type of waste.

PCB Levels

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution proposes to publish the report arising from the investigation, undertaken two years ago, and carried out jointly by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the university of East Anglia, into national background levels of PCBs and including an investigation into the area surrounding ReChem International (Pontypool).

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: During the period 1985 to 1987 the hazardous waste inspectorate, now part of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, conducted a national survey into background levels in soils of polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs), polychlorinated dibenzo-p-dioxins (PCDDs) and polychlorinated dibenzo-furans (PCDFs). A summary of that work was published this year in the third report of the hazardous waste inspectorate and the full technical report will be published in 1989.

A further study, which involves more detailed sampling around potential sources of PCBs, including the ReChem International incinerator at Pontypool, has begun. The full results of this study are expected in two years' time. In the interim, preliminary findings will shortly be communicated to local authorities concerned.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of additional staffing requirements for the Housing Corporation for the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Trippier: My Department is currently discussing with the Housing Corporation its additional staffing requirements for 1988-89 for new responsibilities under the Housing Act 1988. Final decisions have yet to be taken.

Lead Shot

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what steps he is taking to encourage the development of non-toxic alternatives to lead shot;

(2) what is his Department's policy on the substitution of steel for lead shot in game shooting; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have asked the Nature Conservancy Council to assess any potential danger to wildlife from the residues from lead shot and to consult interested parties. In addition, the British Association for Shooting and Conservation (BASC) has set up a working group to co-ordinate research into all aspects of the use of lead shot. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has undertaken research into the effect of residues from lead shot in animal feedstuffs. We are encouraged to see that both BASC and the Gun Trades Association are assessing the use of steel and other materials as possible substitutes for lead shot. Decisions on the continued use of lead shot will be made as and when the results of all these studies are available.

Football Club Membership Scheme

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the response of the football authorities to his proposed national football membership scheme.

Mr. Moynihan: The football authorities contributed fully in the working party which I chaired on the national membership scheme and agreed the report which the working party produced. They have made clear that they are opposed to the principle of the scheme but I am very glad that both the new president of the Football League and the chief executive of the Football Association have recently repeated their willingness to co-operate with the Government in producing a workable scheme. I look forward to discussing the details of the scheme further with them.

Croxteth Hall

Mr Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of Croxteth hall and Country park, Liverpool.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are awaiting the Merseyside residuary body's proposals on detailed arrangements for ensuring the future of Croxteth hall and country park. We hope to make a statement shortly.

Truscon RD27 Houses

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received from Liverpool city council about the possible repurchase of Truscon RD27 houses situated in Storrington avenue, Liverpool; and what his response has been.

Mr. Trippier: Liverpool city council have applied for consent to repurchase three privately owned Truscon

RD27 type houses at Storrington avenue and the Department's officials recently wrote to the council about the repurchase terms. It is now for Liverpool city council to take the matter forward.

Planning Applications

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications were received by the London borough of Croydon in each of the last 10 years; how many were granted; how many appeals were made; how many appeals were allowed; and how many appeals were refused.

Mr. Chope: The information available in the Department is given in the tables.

Planning Controls

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which are the current planning controls now protecting water authority lands from developers because of (a) their outstanding natural beauty, (b) their value to urban or rural communities as spaces of recreation or as environmental protection, and (c) their character as national parks.

Mr. Chope: The Town and Country Planning Acts and subsidiary legislation, and the Government's planning guidance, apply to water authority land as they do to land in other ownership. The Town and Country Planning General Development Order grants planning permission, subject to limitations, for development by water authorities for the purpose of their functions.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of planning appeal decisions which were (a) allowed, (b) dismissed, (c) withdrawn and (d) undetermined in each of the English national parks, including the Broads authority in each of the last five years; and if he will express the numbers allowed and dismissed as a percentage of those determined.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 2 December 1988] The available information in respect of the English national parks is given below. Similar information in respect of the Broads authority area is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the number of planning appeal decisions which were (a) allowed, (b) dismissed, (c) withdrawn and (d) undetermined in England in each of the last five years; and if he will express the numbers allowed and dismissed as a percentage of those determined;

1987-88	18,474	6,955	37·6	11,519	62·4	3,173	12,160

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of planning appeal decisions which were (a) allowed, (b) dismissed, (c) withdrawn and (d) undetermined on green belt land in each of the last five years; and if he will express the numbers allowed and dismissed as a percentage of those determined.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 2 December 1988]: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Football Matches (Arrests)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has anything to add to his answer of 30 November, with regard to division 3 and 4 football matches at which no arrests were made in the 1987-88 season.

Mr. Moynihan: As opposed to individual club information for the season, information about the number of arrests at individual matches for the 1987-89 season is not held centrally. The total number of arrests at division 3 and 4 matches in the 1987-88 season was as follows:

	Total arrests
Division 3	866
Division 4	929

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Councillors (Pecuniary Interests)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list all cases since 1 January 1978 in which successful action has been taken against councillors under section 94 of the Local Government Act 1972 for failure to declare a pecuniary interest in contracts in which local authorities, of which they are members, are engaged.

The Attorney-General: As far as it has been possible to ascertain, during the period mentioned no prosecutions have been brought under section 94 of the Local Government Act 1972,

Sir Harold Cassel

Ms. Harman: To ask the Attorney-General if the Lord Chancellor will be taking any action in respect of the comments of Judge Cassel at Knightsbridge Crown court on 29 November; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: His Honour Judge Sir Harold Cassel has retired on medical grounds.

The judge tendered his resignation on grounds of ill-health in a letter which he sent to the Lord Chancellor on the day before his controversial comments in a case of indecent assault dealt with by him at Knightsbridge Crown court. The Lord Chancellor received the letter on the day of the case. In the light of medical advice, the Lord Chancellor has decided to accept Judge Cassel's resignation.

In his capacity as head of the judiciary the Lord Chancellor issued a statement in the following terms:

"It would not be right for me to comment on the sentence passed by Judge Cassel in a recent case of indecent assault. But, having now seen a report of the case, I wish to put on record my personal disapproval of the remarks he made when passing sentence. It is regrettable that a judge should have expressed himself in a way that suggested that there are any circumstances that can excuse or condone indecent assault on children."

"Satanic Verses"

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received requesting prosecution of the publishers of the book, "Satanic Verses"; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions and I have received written representations concerning the contents of the book "Satanic Verses" from a number of individuals, from two hon. Members, and from two organisations writing on behalf of the Moslem community. The director is considering the matter.

CIVIL SERVICE

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will ensure that the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration has available to him any additional staff necessary for the expeditious conclusion of his investigation into the Department of Trade and Industry's handling of the Barlow Clowes affair.

Mr. Luce: The Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967 provides that the commissioner may appoint such officers "as he may determine with the approval of the Treasury as to numbers and conditions of service."
My understanding is that the commissioner has already appointed some additional staff with a view to ensuring the completion of his investigation as swiftly as its complexity permits and that he is continuing to keep his resource requirements under review.

WALES

Water Bill

15. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what environmental safeguards he proposes to make to the Water Bill in order to protect the public access, recreational and amenity value of the 100,000 acres of land owned by the Welsh water authority.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The hon. Gentleman will by now have seen the Water Bill, which provides the environmental safeguards he refers to.

Nursing

16. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he proposes to take to improve confidence and morale among the nursing profession and ancillary workers in the National Health Services in Wales.

Mr. Grist: We continue to recognise the value to the NHS of all the staff who work within the service. I hope that the Government's commitment to the Health Service is a source of encouragement to the staff.

Employment Measures

17. Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales of he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the Government's employment measure in Wales; and how many were benefiting from them at the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Walker: At October 1988 there were 115,130 people benefiting from the Government's employment and training measures in Wales. In the last year unemployment has dropped by 23,000.

Child Poverty

18. Mr. Martin Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make funds available to the Child Poverty Action Group in Clwyd; and what further steps he proposes to take to protect children in (a) Clwyd and (b) the whole of Wales from the effects of poverty.

Mr. Grist: No. The Government are directing substantial additional resources towards families eligible for income support and family credit. Next year, a total of £70 million will be made available above a social security uprating based on price rises. This extra expenditure will be to the greater benefit of up to 3 million children in Great Britain and will help to protect children in Wales.

Road Planning

19. Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he proposes to take following the National Audit Office's report on road planning as it relates to his Department.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Public Accounts Committee is expected to take evidence on the report in January. In the meantime we are studying it carefully.

Public Bodies

20. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many appointments he has made to public bodies in Wales in 1987 and 1988; and what total costs are involved in each year in respect of (a) salaries, (b) expenses and (c) other costs.

Mr. Peter Walker: Since taking office in June of last year, I have made 300 appointments to public bodies in Wales. The numbers of such appointments for each non-departmental public body concerned, together with details of any salaries paid can be obtained from "Public Bodies", the 1988 version of which will be published on 7 December and a copy will be placed in the Library of the House. The other information requested is not readily available.

M4

21. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to ensure that the M4 will be complete and continuous from England to Port Abraham by 1992.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Work on the missing section of the M4 between Baglan and Lonlas is expected to start before the end of 1990, as indicated in "Roads in Wales".

Severn Crossing

22. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he is yet able to estimate the effect on the Welsh economy of the projected second Severn crossing.

Mr. Peter Walker: The existing Severn bridge has been a notable success in contributing to economic growth in south Wales and I am convinced that a second crossing will help to accelerate the economic achievements of the area. Its construction will in due course also offer substantial employment opportunities.

Gwynedd Area Health Authority

23. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met Mrs. Noreen Edwards, chair of Gwynedd area health authority; and if he will make a statement on the financial problems facing that authority.

Mr. Peter Walker: I last met Mrs. Edwards on 30 November together with all other Welsh health authority chairmen. Gwynedd Health Authority—like all health authorities—is statutorily required to ensure that its financial position is in balance. It has submitted various service rationalisation proposals towards this end and these are currently under consideration.

Labour Statistics

24. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest unadjusted figures for unemployment in (a) Newport, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales; and if he will give the equivalent figures for 1979 on the most nearly comparable basis.

Mr. Peter Walker: On 13 October 1988 the number of unemployed claimants in the Newport district, Gwent, and Wales were 6,313, 18,978 and 117,683 respectively. Unadjusted figures for 1979 are not available on a basis that enables a valid comparison to be made.

Welsh Water Authority

25. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next expects to meet the chairman of the Welsh water authority; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Peter Walker: I meet the chairman on a regular basis to discuss a range of matters.

Council House Sales

26. Sir Raymond Gower: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many council tenants in Wales have bought their dwellings up to the last convenient date.

Mr. Grist: A total of 61,261 council houses and flats have been sold to tenants in Wales between October 1980 and September 1988 under both right-to-buy and voluntary terms.

Water Authorities (Land)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the area of land owned by the Welsh water authority which has been designated as (a) sites of special scientific interest, (b) national parks and (c) areas of outstanding natural beauty.

Mr. Grist: The acreage of land owned by the Welsh water authority within national parks in Wales is as follows:

	Acres
Brecon Beacons	13,783
Pembroke	Nil
Snowdonia	5,399

Major landholdings in areas of outstanding natural beauty are as follows:

	Acres
Lleyn AONB	72
Anglesey AONB	151
Clwydian AONB	206

There is a total of 32 SSSIs on Welsh water authority landholdings of greater than one hectare (2·5 acres) and the total authority landholdings within such areas is about 51,000 acres.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the area of land sold by the Welsh water authority as being land surplus to operational requirements for each calendar year since 1983.

Mr. Grist: The information is more readily available on a financial rather than a calendar year basis. The acreage of land disposed of by Welsh water since 1 April 1983 is as follows:

	Acres
1983-84	222
1984-85	240
1985-86	113
1986-87	492
1987-88	323
1988 to date	1,001
Total	2,391

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the area of land owned by the Welsh water authority which is currently registered under the provisions of the Local Government and Planning Act 1981 as being unused or underused.

Mr. Grist: This is a matter for the Welsh water authority. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is, in respect of each statutory water company, the area of land which has been designated as (a) sites of special scientific interest, (b) national parks and (c) areas of outstanding natural beauty.

Mr. Grist: These are matters for the statutory water companies. I have asked the chairman of Chester waterworks company and of the Wrexham and East Denbighshire water company to write to the hon. Member.

Higher Education

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has received any representations proposing the corporate status of the institutes of higher education in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has neither received nor expects to receive any representations proposing corporate status for any of the institutions of higher education in Wales. This is a matter for discussion and agreement between the institutions and their maintaining local education authorities.

Employment Training

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his assessment of the budget for Wales for the introduction of employment training in 1988-89; how much has been spent to date; how many places have been allocated for Wales; how many places have been taken up; and of these places taken up, how many are considered to have been those relating to the residual community programme.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am satisfied that the financial allocation for Wales for the 1988-89 financial year is sufficient to meet the expenditure employment training will incur during the year. Employment training will offer some 50,000 unemployed adults an opportunity to find and keep work in Wales each year; and it is expected that during 1988-89 about 24,000 will be in training at any one time. In the first two months of the programme over £4 million was spent in Wales. At 30 November 1988 there were 5,996 in employment training in Wales, but it is not known how many of those who were taking part in the former community programme and were eligible to join employment training have done so.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will list the training agents in Wales to whom contracts have been given for the employment training programme.

Mr. Peter Walker: The following organisations have been contracted by the Training Agency to operate as employment training agents in Wales:

Cardiff Chamber of Commerce and Industry Ltd
Careers Service Adult Guidance Agency (Mid Glamorgan County Council)
Clwyd Local Education Authority
Clwyd Training Agency
Dyfed County Council
Gwent County Council
Gwynedd County Council
Manpower Development Agency
Maud and Grove Management Associates Ltd
Powys County Council
Psychological Consultancy Services
South Glamorgan County Council
West Glamorgan County Council.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will list the qualifications and experience of those training agents in receipt of a contract who are operating in Mid Glamorgan.

Mr. Peter Walker: Contracts were awarded to training agents in Wales who, in the judgment of the Training Agency, are best able to deliver the assessment, guidance and counselling to meet the quality standards necessary to assist their client groups.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to inspect the performance and quality of work of those training agents in Mid Glamorgan in receipt of contracts under the employment training programme.

Mr. Peter Walker: It is vitally important that the people who organise and deliver employment training have the necessary skills and competence to do so. Training agents (and training managers) will need to meet stringent criteria as part of the process of obtaining approved training agent status—without which they will not be able to continue with employment training. Training Agency staff will regularly monitor training agents, while helping them develop the skills of their staff, as will the training standards advisory service.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will give, for each of the last five years for which figures are available, the number of planning appeal decisions which were allowed, dismissed, withdrawn and undetermined, respectively, in each of the Welsh national parks, and if he will express the numbers allowed and dismissed as a percentage of those determined;

(2) if he will give, for each of the last five years for which figures are available, the number of planning appeal decisions which were allowed, dismissed, withdrawn and undetermined, respectively, in Wales; and if he will express the numbers allowed and dismissed as a percentage of those determined.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not available.

Owner-occupied Dwellings

Sir Raymond Gower: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dwellings in Wales were owner-occupied at the end of 1960, 1970, 1980, and at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Grist: Information is not available in the form requested. Estimates of owner-occupied dwellings at the closest dates to those requested are:

	Dwellings
April 1961	374,000
April 1971	532,000
December 1980	637,000
December 1987	777,000

Dwelling stock estimates in census years are based upon information collected in the census of population for that year. In inter-censal years they are based on the previous census figures adjusted to take account of new house building and demolition.

Water Pollution

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the Welsh water authority has implemented the recommendation in paragraph 7.49 of the 11th report of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution by consulting the relevant industries in their area with a view to increasing the removal of metals from industrial discharges at source and reducing the metal content of sewage.

Mr. Grist: The Welsh water authority in exercising its responsibilities for the disposal of sewage sludge takes every opportunity to achieve, by consultation with dischargers, the application of best technology so as to reduce the levels of metal contaminants in sewage and sewage sludge.

Grant-related Expenditure (Clwyd)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what assumptions he used about the pupil-teacher ratio in his calculation of grant-related expenditure for the county of Clwyd;

(2) what assumption he made about the sum to be allocated for the local element of educational supplementary grant for in-service training in his calculation of grant-related expenditure for the county of Clwyd;

(3) what assumptions he made about the sum to be allocated for special needs provision in his calculation of grant-related expenditure for the county of Clwyd;

(4) what assumption he made about the sum to be allocated for nursery provision in his calculation of grant-related expenditure for the county of Clwyd.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Grant-related expenditure calculations for local authorities in Wales do not form a basis for calculating notional allocations of GRE to any particular service. The GRE determined for each county council is constructed using indicators of need such as numbers of pupils (including those in special schools) rather than indicators of provision such as pupil/teacher ratios. The portion of costs associated with the local education authority training grants scheme not met by specific grant is accounted for in counties' GREs, using pupil numbers as an indicator of need. Nursery provision is part of the component of GRE relating to all children aged one and over but under five, and the indicator used is the population in this age group. All GRE formulae are agreed in consultation with the local authority associations. Full details of the indicators used or the current year are given in the Welsh rate support grant report 1988-89.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Ministerial Designation

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, on his Department's personalised stationery, he will cause to be printed that his hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs is a Member of Parliament.

Mr. Forth: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for bringing this important matter to my attention.

Having thoroughly investigated the matter and established that the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs is indeed a Member of Parliament, I have arranged for the Department's stationery to be altered appropriately.

Mr. Morton Graham

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action the Office of Fair Trading proposes to take in the case of Mr. Morton Graham, who has been named on the consumer credit licence issued by the Office of Fair Trading, in spite of a criminal conviction for conspiracy to defraud.

Mr. Maude: The day-to-day operation of the consumer credit licensing system is the responsibility of the Director General of Fair Trading and I shall ask him to write to the hon. Member.

FIMBRA (Suspensions)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will make a statement outlining the information which must be given to members of FIMBRA if they are suspended by that body;

(2) what steps he has recently taken to ensure that cases of suspension dealt with by FIMBRA are treated efficiently, courteously and discreetly by that organisation;

(3) if he will make a statement outlining the requirements which are placed upon FIMBRA to provide suspended members with a full and fair hearing at which to put forward their case against suspension;

(4) if he has any plans to ensure that FIMBRA does not make public the knowledge that individual members have been suspended without providing to the affected member full details of the reasons for that suspension.

Mr. Maude: It is a criterion for recognition of a self-regulating organisation under the Financial Services Act 1986 that the organisation's rules and practices relating to the discipline that it exercises over its members must be fair and reasonable and include adequate provisions for appeals. The Securities and Investments Board is responsible for recognising self-regulating organisations and has recognised FIMBRA. I am not aware of any evidence that FIMBRA's rules and practices do not meet the relevant criterion.

National Engineering Laboratory

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the consultants who were asked to quote for the study into the operation of the national engineering laboratory at East Kilbride.

Mr. Forth: The consultants who were asked to quote for the restructuring study into the national engineering laboratory at East Kilbride are as follows:

a. Touche Ross
b. PA Consulting Group

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the cost of the contract announced on 29 November given to the consultants Touche Ross for their study into the national engineering laboratory at East Kilbride.

Mr. Forth: It is not customary to publish the cost of consultancy contracts. This information is commercially confidential.

World Trade

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his latest estimate of the United Kingdom's share of world trade.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the first six months of 1988 the United Kingdom share of the 12 main manufacturing countries' exports of manufactures was 8·2 per cent. It is estimated that our share of total world trade in manufactures in 1988 will be a little over 6 per cent. Our share of world invisible earnings has been rising steadily and our receipts are second only to the United States of America.

Growish Limited

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made on investigations into offences under the Companies Act 1985 in respect of Growish Ltd.

Mr. Maude: I am not aware of any Companies Act offences committed by Royel Investments Ltd, formerly Growish Ltd, but I shall consider any information the hon. Member may have about the matter.

Restrictive Practices (Industrial Action)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce legislation to amend the restrictive practices legislation to allow the self-employed and small firms to act together when pursuing industrial action.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 1 December 1988]: In its Green Paper on restrictive trade practices policy (CM331) the Government have proposed fundamental changes to restrictive trade practices legislation.

Under the proposals, agreements which have significantly anti-competitive effects would be prohibited but controls on agreements with no such effects would be relaxed. There would also be provision for restrictive agreements which meet certain criteria to be exempted from the prohibition. It is too early to say how the proposed new legislation will apply to co-operation arrangements between the self-employed and small firms; this will depend to an extent on the object or effect of the particular arrangements.

My Department is currently developing the proposals in the Green Paper in the light of comments received from interested bodies and the views of organisations representing the self-employed and small firms are being taken into account.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest OECD development assistance committee's review of the United Kingdom aid programme.

Mr. Chris Patten: This review took place on Thursday 1 December. I shall arrange for a copy of the press release to be placed in the Library of the House.

Tanzania (Aid)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid projects are at present being discussed with the Government of Tanzania; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have just signed a new grant agreement with the Government of Tanzania for £16 million of balance of payments support to help with the implementation of agreed economic reforms. These funds will be used in the agriculture, transport, industry and health sectors.

I have also approved the offer of an £8 million grant as cofinancing for the World Bank's industrial rehabilitation and trade adjustment credit. This will be available as soon as the credit is signed, which I expect will be early next month. In addition to this assistance, my officials are continuing talks on identifying projects for the use of an £18 million project aid grant.

Sub-Saharan Africa

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to make a visit to sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Chris Patten: I hope to visit sub-Saharan Africa early next year.

Buses (Sri Lanka)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he can yet give the date when the 40 London double deck buses will be sent to Sri Lanka as part of the United Kingdom aid programme.

Mr. Chris Patten: The buses are being shipped from Sheerness on 15 December, to arrive in Sri Lanka in early January.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Export Refund Computer System

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is the cost of the International Board for Agricultural Produce computer scheme to date; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether the IBAP export refund scheme computer system is still working; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether private contractors have been brought in to devise a replacement system for the IBAP export refund computer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The costs incurred in developing and implementing the intervention board's external claims computer system from its inception in 1982 to date are estimated at just under £4 million. The bulk of the system covering most commodity sectors was delivered in July to September 1987. This then required substantial modification when new Customs and Community documentation came into effect on 1 January 1988. The system currently in use was delivered in March to July 1988. Before this became available substantial payment delays had built up, and recovering these has been handicapped by technical problems with the software in the system. Substantial progress has however been made. In the first nine months of this year the board processed some 540,000 transactions valued at £440 million. 70 per cent. of commodity sectors and of export refund claims by value are now being paid within two months of becoming payable, and the board is working to extend this to the remaining sectors as soon as possible.

In August 1988 the board brought in external consultants to assist with the recovery. They recommended that substantial enhancement of the current system was required in the short to medium term. Work to that end is now being undertaken by these consultants.

The consultants also recommended that this system should be succeeded by a new system able to respond flexibly and effectively to the intervention boards needs in the longer term. The board has accepted this recommendation and is initiating a full business and systems analysis which will be undertaken by private sector consultants.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether any redundancies have been caused by the workings of the export refund system in the current year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I am not aware of any redundancies in exporting firms which can be attributed to the payment delays resulting from this year's changes in the intervention board's external claims computer system.

Salmonella

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the relationship between salmonella poisoning in eggs and current conditions in battery farms with particular respect to the methods of disposal of dead fowls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Modern intensive farming methods pose no more threat of introducing salmonella into eggs than do traditional farming methods. Dead fowls are disposed of in a manner which does not contribute to the problems of salmonella dissemination.

Departmental Dp Division

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many system professionals are employed in his Department's Dp division; and what is the turnover rate.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Currently there are 170 functional specialist computing staff at programmer level and above, employed in the Ministry's computer services division at Guildford, of whom some 135 are fully trained. Since the beginning of the current financial year 37 trained staff have left and 40 trainee programmers have joined the division. These are comparable figures to those of previous years.

Sewage Sludge

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report the volume of sewage sludge deposited in each sea dump around the United Kingdom coast over each of the last five years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department has considered ways and means of assisting the further reduction of the heavy metals load in sewage sludge.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In recent years substantial reductions have been achieved in heavy metal concentrations, which are well within the trace limits permitted by the international dumping conventions. The levels of heavy metals in sewage sludge for sea disposal have been strictly controlled by the provisions of the Dumping at Sea Act 1974 and its successor legislation, part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985. The Government are seeking further reductions in metal concentrations; water authorities are required to draw up action plans incorporating reviews of authorisations that they have granted for discharge to sewers of industrial effluent containing heavy mentals.

The Government also intends to improve the control of sewage sludge spread on agricultural land by introducing statutory regulations next year backed up by a code of practice, both designed to provide an appropriate level of environmental protection.

Agriculture White Paper

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the annual review of the Agriculture White Paper.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland and I have decided to extend and improve the information which has up to now been published in the White Paper on the annual review of agriculture. The new publication will be designed to give data on the state of the agricultural industry in the United Kingdom. It will contain enhanced information on commodities and on the general financial situation of the industry. The new document will be published annually and copies will be made available in the Library of the House.

It will, however, no longer be published as a White Paper. The origin of that practice is that, before our accession to the European Community, the annual review led to the determination of commodity price guarantees for the coming year, which we published as part of the White Paper. Since our accession, the emphasis has shifted towards the annual negotiation of agricultural prices in the European Community, and the annual review White Paper has effectively become a compendium of agricultural statistics. It is therefore appropriate to discontinue publication in the form of a White Paper.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Missing Persons

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men, (b) women, (c) boys under 18 years of age and (d) girls under 18 years of age were reported as missing during each of the last five years for which records are available; and how many and what percentage in each category were subsequently traced.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The only readily available information relates to persons recorded by the Metropolitan police missing persons bureau. I understand from the commissioner that these records are incomplete in respect of persons who are reported missing to other police forces and persons who reappear within a short time of being reported missing. The information for the Metropolitan police district is given in the following table. Further details of missing persons are given in the commissioner's annual report.

Persons reported missing during the year and proportion of each yearly total who were traced by the end of that year.

Metropolitan Police District Number of persons

[1] New counting procedures were introduced from the beginning of 1987: hence the figures for previous years are not comparable.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will ask chief officers of police in England and Wales to supply him with such information regarding missing persons and their subsequent tracing, alive or dead, as is conveniently available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Responsibility for investigating reports of missing persons is an operational matter for individual chief officers of police. Records of missing persons are held locally, and may be circulated to other forces or to the missing persons bureau at New Scotland yard as chief officers consider necessary. There is no requirement upon chief officers to provide the Home Office with statistics relating to missing persons. Information could be collated only by means of a special exercise which would involve disproportionate expense.

Security Services

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to the need for authorisations for the security services to access computer records and systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The conditions under which personal data may be disclosed for the purpose of safeguarding national security are provided in section 27 of the Data Protection Act 1984. It would be for the data user to respond to any request for access made in accordance with the Act.

Schizophrenia

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inmates in Her Majesty's prisons are known, and diagnosed, to be schizophrenia sufferers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Mohammed Arshad Mehar

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why Mr. Mohammed Arshad Mehar, date of birth 1 March 1958 and Ref: C 484704, of 45C Park Street, Southend-on-Sea, Essex, a Pakistani national who applied in September 1987 for an extension of his visa, 888760, to enable him to continue with his work as a specialist chemical worker, had his passport returned by hand to his wife a few days ago without any visa extension or any indication of the Home Office decision on his application; if he will consider the application for the extension of stay in the United Kingdom; if he will complete this in order that Mr. Mehar can return to Pakistan for an urgent family matter and then return to the United Kingdom thereafter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Mr. Mehar's passport was returned without further endorsement because he wished to travel urgently and it was not possible to complete his application. Inquiries in this case have not yet been completed but I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as a decision is reached.

NUS (March)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis's estimate of the number of Socialist Workers party members present in the breakaway section of the National Union of Students march of Thursday 24 November.

Mr. Hurd: As I said in my reply on 29 November to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) at column 174, the faction which first broke away amounted to about 1,000 demonstrators many of whom were thought to be members of the Socialist Workers' party. The action of this group encouraged several thousand others to follow suit.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis's estimate of the number of police officers injured during the National Union of Students march of 24 November, the types of injury and the numbers that had to go to hospital, and the numbers of students injured, the types of injury and the numbers that had to go to hospital.

Mr. Hurd: As I said in my reply on 29 November to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) at column 174, it is estimated that 72 police officers were injured, and seven demonstrators of whom the commissioner is aware. There is no central record available of how many were taken to hospital, but it is understood that most injuries were minor. One woman police constable suffered concussion, spent four nights in hospital, and is now experiencing severe memory loss. I have received separately a letter describing a serious leg injury to one of the demonstrators.

Security Service

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what statutory powers members of the Security Service have, in the past, entered on or interfered with property as defined in the Security Service Bill.

Mr. Hurd: It is not the practice to comment on the operations of the Security Service.

There have been no statutory provisions giving the Security Service special powers in this respect.

Smoke Detectors

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to encourage pensioners to install smoke detectors in their homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A television advertising campaign to encourage the public, including pensioners, to install smoke alarms in their homes is planned to start on Boxing day.

THE ARTS

Ethnic Minority Support

30. Mr. Robert G. Hughes To ask the Minister for the Arts what measures he has taken to promote the arts and culture of black and Asian British people.

Mr. Luce: I fully support the Arts Council's action plan for ethnic minority arts, which provides for a minimum of 4 per cent. of the council's expenditure to be committed in this field.

43. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many ethnic minority musicians or musical organisations the Arts Council funded on a revenue or annual basis in 1987-88.

Mr. Luce: Fourteen organisations.

49. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister for the Arts what proportion of total Arts Council expenditure was spent on ethnic minority arts in 1987-88.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council report on ethnic minority arts, due in the new year, will show the exact proportion.

51. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many ethnic minority film, video and broadcasting projects were funded on a revenue basis by the Arts Council in 1987-88.

Mr. Luce: Seven.

Autumn Statement

31. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received following his recent arts settlement announcement following the Autumn Statement.

Mr. Luce: The arts organisations which I sponsor welcomed my three-year funding strategy and its recent extension to 1991-92, and they are responding positively to the opportunities which the strategy presents.

Incentive Funding Scheme

32. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many Liverpool arts projects, funded by Merseyside Arts Association, have made applications to the Arts Council under the incentive funding scheme.

Mr. Luce: Three Liverpool organisations funded by Merseyside Arts applied to the Arts Council for incentive funding; one of these receives the majority of its funding from the Arts Council.

34. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many west midlands arts companies, currently funded by the West Midland Arts Association have applied to the Arts Council for incentive funding.

Mr. Luce: A total of 14 organisations funded by West Midlands Arts applied to the Arts Council for incentive funding; three of these are also funded by the Arts Council.

36. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many arts organisations in (a) Oxford and (b) the area covered by the Southern Arts Association, who are currently clients of Southern Arts, have applied to the Arts Council for incentive funding.

Mr. Luce: Six organisations funded by Southern Arts applied to the Arts Council for incentive funding; one of these receives joint funding; none are Oxford organisations.

37. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many arts companies in Wales, currently funded by the Welsh Arts Council, have applied to the Arts Council of Great Britain for help under the incentive funding scheme.

Mr. Luce: Thirteen.

41. Mr. Battle: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many arts organisations in Leeds who are clients of the Yorkshire Arts Association have applied to the Arts Council for incentive funding.

Mr. Luce: Four.

48. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will list the photographic organisations who have applied to the Arts Council for help under the incentive funding scheme.

Mr. Luce: Eight applications were made by the following organisations:

Blackfriars Photography Project;
Cambridge Darkroom;
Camerawork;
Creative Camera;
F Stop Photography;
Photographers' Gallery;
The Photography Workshop; and The Untitled Gallery.

50. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many arts companies who are clients of Northern Arts have applied to the Arts Council for incentive funding.

Mr. Luce: A total of 13 organisations funded by Northern Arts applied to the Arts Council for incentive funding; three of these are jointly funded by the Arts Council and Northern Arts.

Young People (Books and Plays)

33. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will run a competition for contemporary authors of books and plays for young people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: This is a very interesting idea which I hope might be taken up. I am concerned to increase access to the arts; encouraging young people is an important part of this.

Museums and Galleries

35. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many new museums and galleries have been opened in the last 12 months; and how many are expected to open in the next 12 months.

Mr. Luce: The Museums Association database indicates that at July this year there were 2,400 museums and galleries in the United Kingdom, and that 10 per cent. of those had opened since 1982, a rate of about 40 per year. There is every indication that interest in the creation of new and specialist museums continues.

Initiatives and Schemes

38. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will publish a table listing all the initiatives and schemes launched by (a) the Office of Arts and Libraries and (b) the Arts Council in each of the last three years the administration of which has not been devolved to regional arts associations.

Mr. Luce: No. The Arts Council's annual reports for 1986-87 and 1987-88, its three-year plan and awards and schemes folder for 1988-89 have been placed in the Library. The council operates only schemes which are essentially national in character. The Office of Arts and Libraries administer only the business sponsorship incentive scheme and the arts marketing scheme.

Regional Arts Associations

39. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans the Arts Council has to devolve the responsibility for more clients to the regional arts associations.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council constantly reviews the division of responsibility between itself and the regional arts associations.

Arts (Economic Importance)

40. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will make a statement on the findings of the report entitled "The Economic Importance of the Arts in Britain", from the Policy Studies Institute.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) on 19 October at column 879.

Mappa Mundi

42. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will use his powers to prevent the departure from the United Kingdom of the Hereford Mappa Mundi in the event of its purchase by a buyer who seeks to export it.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I have given this afternoon to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes). Should a sale prove necessary, and an application for an export licence be made, this will be dealt with under our existing procedures. I cannot anticipate decisions on export applications.

Welsh Arts Council

44. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last met the chair of the Welsh Arts Council and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Luce: I met the chairman of the Welsh Arts Council on 9 November when we discussed matters of mutual concern.

Dramatic Arts

45. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next intends to visit a drama college to discuss funding of the dramatic arts.

Mr. Luce: I visited the Guildford school of acting and dance on Friday 18 November. I have no plans to visit other drama colleges at present.

Statues

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will encourage the erection of statues to prominent public figures of the past in inner cities.

Mr. Luce: I see this as a matter for local communities to decide.

Rural Arts Centres

47. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he has visited any rural arts centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I have visited the Piers art centre in the Orkneys and the Brewery arts centre in Kendal and the Eden court theatre in Inverness this year; I have previously visited the Beaford centre in the hon. Member's constituency and also met its director in my office this year; all are good examples of arts centres which make a vital contribution to the life of rural communities. In March this year I visited the Newent library which doubles as an arts venue for small scale performances.

Library Services

52. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Minister for the Arts if his Department has undertaken any research into the link between the quality and availability of free library services and the needs of the unemployed or low-waged undertaking part-time study.

Mr. Luce: No. Some research in this area has been supported by the British Library research and development department.

Touring

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister for the Arts what moneys for touring have been set aside by the Arts Council for the next financial year.

Mr. Luce: I have made £6 million available for incentive funding and additional touring in the United Kingdom in 1989-90. The Arts Council will be determining the precise allocation of this sum in due course. In the current financial year the sum set aside for additional touring is £1·5 million.

Private Funding

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement about the current level of private funding for the arts.

Mr. Luce: [holding answer 30 November 1988]: There are no precise figures available, but the most important source of private funding for the arts remains the box office. The PSI report on the economic importance of the arts indicates a figure of some £433 million spent on admission to arts venues (museums and galleries; built heritage; theatres and concerts; and cinemas). In addition, business sponsorship brings in around £30 million annually to the arts and I expect this figure to grow in the future. Information is not held centrally on private donations but evidence suggests that some are substantial.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

British Subjects (Murder)

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British subjects were murdered in foreign countries in 1986, 1987 and 1988 to date, by country.

Mr. Waldegrave: Not all deaths of British citizens who die overseas, whether in suspicious or other circumstances, are reported to British consular officers. However, according to records held by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, 80 British citizens have been murdered, or are suspected to have been murdered, overseas between 1 January 1986 and 30 November 1988. The breakdown by year and country is as follows:

Hong Kong (Vietnamese Refugees)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he intends to give to the recent urgent representations from Miss Lydia Dunn, senior member of the Hong Kong Legislative Council, concerning the situation of Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are urgently considering, with the Home Secretary, all aspects of the problem, including those raised by Miss Dunn. The reply will inter alia emphasise the priority that we attach to achieving a comprehensive solution to the problem as soon as possible and the considerable efforts that we are devoting to this end.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese refugees there are currently in Hong Kong; and what are the comparable figures for the same period in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Waldegrave: On 30 November there were 25,197 Vietnamese boat people in Hong Kong, of whom 15,323 were refugees. Figures at the end of November since 1979 are as follows:

Year	People
1979	53,236
1980	23,980
1981	13,135
1982	12,787
1984	12,254
1985	9,577
1986	8,047
1987	9,331

Iraqi Diplomats (Expulsion)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the reasons for the recent expulsion of Iraqi diplomats; and if he will place in the Library any copies of correspondence with the ambassador.

Mr. Waldegrave: On 18 October we requested the withdrawal of three diplomats from the Iraqi embassy and served an exclusion order on a fourth, all for activities incompatible with their status. It has been the invariable practice of successive Governments not to comment on details of security and intelligence matters.

Palestine

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the decisions taken at the Palestine National Council meeting in Algiers, the Government will now seek a meeting at the highest level with the Palestine Liberation Organisation in order to advance the peace process.

Mr. Waldegrave: We keep contact at official level with the PLO, which is aware that it must remove ambiguities in certain of its policies if further and wider contact is to be considered.

Namibia

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what specific steps are being taken by his Department to establish in Namibia a system which will protect the rights and freedoms of the different ethnic and social groups in that country following its independence;

(2) if he will make it his policy to promote the adoption of a pre-independence constitution in Namibia in order to protect the rights of minority ethnic and social groups following independence;

(3) if he will make a statement outlining his policy on and involvement in those current efforts in Namibia which are designed to bring about national reconciliation and a pre-independence constitution;

(4) if he will make it his policy to discuss with leaders of all the different ethnic and political groupings in Namibia the possibility of bringing about in that country national reconciliation and a pre-independence constitution.

(5) what steps he is taking to ensure that ethnic and social groups other than SWAPO continue to be represented in the Government of Namibia following independence.

Mrs. Chalker: We continue to support Namibian independence on the basis of the UN plan endorsed by Security Council resolution 435. We are satisfied that the existing provisions of the plan, in particular the constitutional principles agreed in 1982, provide sufficient safeguards for all ethnic and social groups in Namibia. The UN plan also provides for a transition period before independence in which an elected assembly will draw up a constitution.

Ethiopia

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on any diplomatic steps being taken by Her Majesty's Government to bring about an end to hostilities between the Government of Ethiopia and the guerrilla fighters in Tigray and Eritrea.

Mrs. Chalker: When my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State met the Ethiopian Foreign Minister on 11 September, he urged him to seek a negotiated settlement based on genuine regional autonomy. In the declaration on the Horn of Africa issued on 24 October, we and our EC partners called for such a settlement.

Khmer Rouge

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he intends to take to prevent the Khmer Rouge from occupying Kampuchea's seat in the United Nations.

Mr. Waldegrave: We see no reason to change our present policy, shared by the great majority of United Nations members, of supporting retention of Democratic Kampuchea's credentials at the United Nations. This policy signifies neither recognition of the coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, nor support for the Khmer Rouge.

Convention Against Torture

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government will ratify the United Nations convention against torture; and whether the relevant declarations under article 21 and article 22 of this convention will also be made in order fully to recognise the competence of the committee against torture.

Mr. Waldegrave: We intend to ratify the United Nations convention against torture later this month. We are still considering what reservations/declarations we shall need to submit.

Zimbabwe

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many former residents of Zimbabwe now resident in the United Kingdom are affected by the exchange controls imposed by the Government of Zimbabwe; and what action he proposes to take to assist such people to regain control of their funds.

Mrs. Chalker: We cannot be sure of the number of former residents of Zimbabwe now resident in the United Kingdom who are affected by the existing controls. In their exchange control regulations the Zimbabwe authorities have made provision for special consideration of individual cases on hardship grounds. Whenever appropriate, we continue to make representations on individual cases in order to take advantage of this provision. I raised a number of cases with Zimbabwe Ministers during my visit there last month.

EMPLOYMENT

Worker Representatives

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current European Economic Community discussions on worker representatives on the boards of companies; and whether such measures fall to be dealt with under the majority voting procedures set out in the Single Act.

Mr. Cope: The Government are opposed to European Community proposals which would require statutory employee participation as such participation is more effective on a voluntary basis. The only relevant European Community proposal currently under discussion for which a legal base has been proposed is the fifth company law directive. The proposed legal base would entail qualified majority voting.

Coal Industry (Accidents)

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has received any representations regarding the accident rate of companies contracted to British Coal; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I have received no direct representations on this subject. However, accident trends are regularly discussed at meetings between British Coal, trade unions and Her Majesty's inspectorate of mines and quarries and the proposed new legislation to replace the Mines and Quarries Act 1954 is intended to improve safety standards for all persons employed at mines, including contractors.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total of underground fatal and major accidents among (a) British Coal employees and (b) employees of companies contracted to British Coal.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is tabled for the years 1986-87 and 1987-88.

	1986-87	1987-88
British Coal employees
Fatal	13	8
Major injuries	727	560
Contracted employees
Fatal	—	1
Major injuries	45	52

Source: British Coal. Accidents reported under the Reporting of Incidents, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrence Regulations 1985 do not distinguish between British Coal Corporation employees and those of contractors.

Redundancy Payments (Women)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether legislation will be introduced this session to increase the age limit up to which women can receive a statutory redundancy payment from 60 to 65 years, as announced by the Minister of State on 29 October 1987.

Mr. Cope: Yes. The proposal is included in the Employment Bill.

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many tourism development action programmes were established in the last two years; and where.

Mr. Lee: During this period 12 new tourism development action programmes have been established covering the following areas: Bridlington, Carlisle, Cornwall, Forest of Dean, Isle of Wight, Lancaster, Nottingham, Norwich, Portsmouth, Shropshire, Torbay and Tyne and Wear.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the numbers of hotels and tourism-related establishments that have benefited from receiving section 4 grants in the year 1987 and the amounts of those grants as applied through each tourist board region.

Mr. Lee: Offers of section 4 assistance by regional tourist board region for 1978-88 are given in the table. Figures for the 1987 calendar year could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Tourist board	Number of projects	Total value of S4 offers (£ thousand)
Cumbria	39	469
East Anglia	34	502
East Midlands	31	759
Heart of England	47	1,049

Health and Safety

Mr. Terry Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the Government will ratify International Labour Organisation convention 161 and recommendation 177 on occupational health services.

Mr. Cope [holding reply 2 December 1988]: The Government have deferred a decision on whether to ratify International Labour Organisation convention 161 and to accept recommendation 171 on occupational health services for a period of three years because of anticipated developments in this field. At the end of that time we expect to receive further advice from the Health and Safety Commission.

SCOTLAND

Mental Illness

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department spent on research into (a) mental disorders and (b) schizophrenia in the last year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The figure for research into mental disorders funded by the Scottish Home and Health Department in 1987-88 is £176,300. Of this amount £21,950 is for projects specifically related to schizophrenia.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he gives any guidance to mental illness hospitals on the retention of patients whose condition is unlikely to improve similar to the other advice contained in the Department of Health's policy paper on mental illness services, Cmnd. 9674; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Decisions about the treatment of individual patients involve issues of clinical judgment. Nearly all NHS mental illness hospitals in Scotland have facilities for those patients who require long-term care in conditions of medium security. My right hon. and learned Friend has not issued any specific guidance in this area.

Psychiatric Nurses

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many community psychiatric nurses there have been in Scotland in each of the last two years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally, but arrangements are under discussion to make it available for the first time next year.

Civil Defence

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the numbers of members of staff employed for emergency planning in district authorities whose salary costs are funded either wholly or partly by Scottish Office civil defence grant.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no such district council posts which are funded by civil defence grant.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many members of staff are employed by each regional and island authority (a) as emergency planning officers and (b) as emergency planning team administrative and support staff.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information is in respect of grant-aided emergency planning posts. The number of staff employed by regional and islands authorities in such posts at 30 September was as follows:

Region or Islands Authority	Emergency Planning Officers	Clerical/ Support Staff
Borders Region	4	1
Central Region	4	2
Fife Region	4	1
Dumfries and Galloway Region	4	2
Grampian Region	3	2
Highland Region	6	2
Lothian Region	5	2
Strathclyde Region	11	5
Tayside Region	5	2½
Orkney Islands	2	0
Shetland Islands	1	1
Western Isles	1	0
TOTAL	50	20½

YTS

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many YTS places are currently available in the Ayrshire, Dumfries and Galloway area.

Mr. Lang: On 11 November 1988, the latest date for which information is available, there were 1,172 unfilled YTS places in the Ayrshire, Dumfries and Galloway area.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Lord Advocate will investigate the disappearance of pacemakers from Greater Glasgow health board with a view to proceedings.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This matter is being investigated by Strathclyde police and a report will be submitted to the procurator fiscal, Glasgow in due course.

Marine Biology

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the main research projects on marine biology carried out in the North sea by Scottish research institutes and laboratories for each year since 1974; and if he will list those projects.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information in the form requested is not collected or held by the Department. Details of research carried out by the DAFS marine laboratory, Aberdeen, have been given in its triennial reports for the period 1973-84 and annual reports for 1985-86 and 1986-87. I am arranging for copies of these reports to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is, for each year since 1974, the amount of public funds given to the Scottish Marine Biology Association and its laboratory at Dunstaffnage.

(2) what is the number of staff in full-time and part-time jobs in the marine laboratory at Dunstaffnage for each year since 1975.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

The information is as follows:

[1] Separate figures for public funds are not available prior to the year ending March 1981. The total from public and private funds was (£K): 1980, 399; 1979, 383; 1978, 268; 1977, 264.

[2] Information on commissions prior to the year ending March 1976 could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Forestry

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Government's target of 33,000 hectares of new planting per year has been met to date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government's target has not yet been met. However, some 29,000 hectares of new planting was achieved in the year to 31 March 1988, and the figure for the current year is expected to be of the same order.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps the Government are taking to ensure that long-term confidence in both the forestry and wood processing industries is not adversely affected by low planting levels.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government have made clear their continued support for the expansion of the forestry industry, and substantial grants are available under the woodland grant scheme and the farm woodland scheme. A close watch will be kept on planting trends.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps the Government are taking to ensure that the 70,000 hectares estimated by the Forestry Commission to have been cleared for planting under the previous taxation/grants scheme will be fully utilised.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under the transitional arrangements announced on 15 March 1988 by my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, tax reliefs will continue to be available until 1993 in respect of planting approved under those Forestry Commission grant schemes which have been closed to new applications. The amount of such planting that actually takes place will depend on the decisions of a large number of individual landowners.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, if he will list the total number of hectares: (a) approved for planting under the woodland grant scheme in each of the Forestry Commission conservancy areas and (b) awaiting approval for planting under the woodland grant scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows, covering the period from the 15 June 1988, when the woodland grant scheme was first opened to applications, to 31 October 1988:

Conservancy	Area approved for planting (including replanting) under the Scheme (hectares)	Area awaiting approval for planting (including replanting) under the Scheme (hectares)
North England	207	1,366
East England	106	3,055
West England	226	1,330
Wales	302	675
North Scotland	2,262	5,727
Mid Scotland	751	2,894
South Scotland	344	4,782
Totals	4,198	19,829

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the likely impact of the Environmental Assessment (Afforestation) Regulations 1988 (S.I. 1988 No. 1207) on applications for grant aid for new forestry planting.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: An environmental assessment is intended to provide information that will be helpful in deciding on the likely effects of a forestry proposal on the environment, and the need for one should not be taken as indicating a presumption against afforestation. The number of assessments called for is unlikely to be large, and the regulations are not expected to have a significant effect on the level of applications for planting grants.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the Government's main objectives contained in the report forwarded to the European Commission in terms of Council regulation (EEC) No. 3528/86.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Reports are submitted annually by member states to enable the European Commission to obtain a picture of tree health throughout the Community, and to provide data on a consistent basis for the situation to be monitored from year to year.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total amount of hectares of forest lost or damaged by (a) atomospheric pollution and (b) natural phenomena since 1980 in each of the Forestry Commission conservancy areas.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: (a) The Forestry Commission has conducted nationwide surveys of forests since 1984 in order to assess tree health in relation to air pollution. The surveys rely mainly on the criterion of "crown density" as a measure of tree condition because no loss of forest areas has been observed in Britain which can be ascribed specifically to air pollution. The results of the latest surveys are contained in a report which was published by the Commission on 1 December copies of which are being placed in the Library of the House.

(b) Certain insects can damage forest trees, by far the largest cause of loss being the pine beauty moth which has killed or severely damaged 263 hectares of Lodgepole pine in North Scotland Conservancy since 1980. Wind damage is another cause of tree loss, but the only significant forest windblow since 1980 has been in East England Conservancy where some 16,000 hectares of woodland were blown down by the October 1987 storm.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the environmental safeguards which apply to the location of forestry, as stated in his reply to the hon. Member for Dumfries, Official Report, 17 March, columns 670-1.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Forestry Commission's woodland grant scheme places emphasis on the need for planting to be carried out in an environmentally sensitive way. Applicants are required to give proper attention to landscaping, wildlife conservation, the management of water courses and the protection of ancient monuments, as appropriate. Every planting proposal is carefuly scrutinised by the Forestry Commission with such aspects in mind, and the existing consultation arrangements also provide a safeguard, particularly for areas of special environmental importance. In addition, the Commission may call for an environmental assessment for those proposals which they consider are likely to have a significant effect on the environment.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the arrangements whereby the Forestry Commission pays the domestic rates of its tied cottages; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Forestry Commission follows the Civil Service pay and conditions code in the rent charged for its key houses (tied cottages). These rents include an element to cover general and water rates. Tenants of key houses pay a standard rent in respect of their tenancy and the commission pays the general and water rates.

Schools

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of Scottish schools he expects will opt out of local authority control.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The legislation we are to introduce will enable parents generally to opt for self-governing status for their schools. Recent polls suggest that a significant number will welcome the opportunity offered by this measure.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from parents, teachers or educational organisations concerning the likely effects of primary school testing upon remedial pupils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A number of respondents to the consultation paper "Curriculum and Assessment in Scotland: a Policy for the 90s" referred to the position of pupils with special educational needs. As the consultation paper makes clear it will be for education authorities, in consultation with parents, to decide whether pupils recorded as having special educational needs would benefit from participation in the tests.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish figures showing the numbers of primary schools in Scotland currently undertaking their own schemes of assessment for English and mathematics.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Assessment is an integral part of teaching and my right hon. and learned Friend would expect some form of assessment in these subjects to be carried out in every primary school. Current policy is designed to improve the quality of consistency of that assessment.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will outline the curricula guidelines which he intends to introduce for Scottish primary schools in those subjects apart from English and mathematics.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has asked the Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum to review existing guidance in each subject area and, where appropriate, to develop revised guidelines. their reports are expected to be completed by the end of 1990.

Further Education

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what responses he has received from industry concerning funding of the proposed technology academies in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have already announced our welcome for the decision by Trusthouse Forte to contribute £1·5 million to sponsor the first technology academy in Scotland.

In addition to this commitment, we have received a number of very positive approaches from the private sector. These are being treated in confidence at this stage.

Mrs. Ray Mitchie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students who are studying at Scottish universities, central institutions and colleges of education and who are in receipt of an SED award take (a) three years or less to complete their degree, (b) four years to complete their degree, (c) five years to complete their degree and (d) six or more years to complete their degree; and what proportion of female students are in each category.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not readily available.

Roads

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the road traffic accidents involving injury or death on the A1 in Scotland for the past three years, giving the date, location and extent of injury for each accident.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is being collected and will be sent to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to publish his Department's report on A roads south of Edinburgh.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I expect to receive the technical report from the consulting engineer in January.

Thereafter, I intend to make a statement on its findings and on our proposed way ahead. There will then be a period for comment before we reach final decisions.

Hospital Services

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will call for a report from the chairman of Lothian health board on the future provision of acute hospital services and accident and emergency services in east Lothian.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Lothian health board is currently reviewing its acute service and accident and emergency needs and, following public consultation, proposals covering future requirements throughout the area of the board will be submitted to the Secretary of State. Public consultation is planned for early next year.

Cockenzie Power Station

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will call for a report from the chairman of the South of Scotland Electricity Board on the board's policy for the operation of Cockenzie power station, including the estimated coalburn for each of the next three years, the current stock of coal at Cockenzie, and the origin of that stock and of future supplies.

Mr. Lang: No, the operation of Cockenzie power station is a commercial matter for the South of Scotland Electricity Board. I have, however, asked the chairman to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Coal Industry (Employment)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on future trends in the level of employment in the coal industry in the Lothian region.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply.

The number of jobs in the coal industry depends on several factors, including the reduction of costs to competitive levels.

ENERGY

Berkeley Power Station

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when reactor 1 at Berkeley power station was last refuelled.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The last refuelling of reactor 1 was between the dates given in my reply to the hon. Member on 14 November 1988 at column 425.

Esturial Barrages

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all the feasibility studies being carried out into barrages across United Kingdom estuaries for schemes to produce electricity.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Department of Energy is supporting feasibility studies of tidal energy barrages on the Severn, Mersey and Loughor estuaries, with two other possibilities under consideration.

Standing Charges (Pensioners)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will introduce legislation to provide that pensioners will be exempted from paying standing charges on their power bills in line with consumers who use solid fuel for heating purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

Sellafield (Discharges)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what was the discharge of total alpha activity to the sea from Sellafield in (i) 1974 and (ii) the latest available year;

(2) what was the discharge of total beta activity to the sea from Sellafield in (i) 1974 and (ii) the latest available year.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Discharges to sea from Sellafield in 1974 and 1987 (the latest available year) were as follows:

TBq

Beta	7,200	89

Further reductions in discharge levels are expected in the early 1990s upon completion of BNFL's effluent treatment plant investment programme.

Bristol Channel (Oil Exploration)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what were the findings of the oil exploration activities carried out in the Bristol channel.

Mr. Peter Morrison: To date the results of hydrocarbon exploration in the Bristol channel and adjacent waters have been disappointing with no discoveries of either oil or gas.

West Burton B

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to annouce his final decision on the West Burton B power station in Bassetlaw, Nottinghamshire.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 3 November at column 713.

Arkwright Colliery

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether he will make it his policy to hold discussions with British Coal regarding the escape of methane gas at Arkwright colliery with a view to ensuring that British Coal accepts total liability for claims made by the families and others concerned;

(2) what recent inquiries he has made of British Coal regarding payments of compensation to families and others affected by the escape of methane gas at Arkwright colliery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for British Coal. However it has kept me regularly informed of the situation at Arkwright, following the emission of methane. I understand that British Coal has already made a £100 ex gratia interim payment to all the families who had to be evacuated. This is an advance against the settlement of reasonable future claims, which British Coal has agreed to pay on a "good neighbour" basis. Legal liability is ultimately at matter for the courts to decide.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Financial Management Initiative

60. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the contribution that the financial management initiative has made to securing value for money in public expenditure.

Mr. Brooke: The financial management initiative is seeking to improve the basis on which resources are managed by Departments. I regret that it is not possible to quantify the contribution that it is making to improving value for money, nor to distinguish that contribution from the effect of other actions to increase the efficiency with which resources are used. There is however general agreement that the FMI has made a significant impact by clarifying responsibilities, securing a greater awareness of costs and by providing a framework for other reforms.

The "Next Steps" initiative, which the Prime Minister announced on 18 February 1988 at column 1149, builds on and carries forward the principles of the FMI in relation to executive functions. The Government remain committed to maintaining the momentum of their overall programme for improving value for money.

Recruitment

61. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a White Paper on measures to deal with recruitment into the Civil Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: There are no plans to issue a White Paper on Civil Service recruitment. My Department keeps Civil Service recruitment policies under continuous review, to ensure that they are responsive to changes in both the needs of Departments and in the general labour market, bearing in mind the need to ensure value for money.

Computer Projects

62. Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on monitoring of the costs of Civil Service computer projects.

Mr. Brooke: Individual Departments are responsible for monitoring the costs of their computer projects to ensure financial propriety and value for money.

Capital Allowances

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has had concerning the abolition of capital allowances from guest houses and small hotels.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Capital allowances have not been abolished. Annual writing down allowances remain available for construction costs of guest houses and small hotels which satisfy certain minimum criteria and for capital expenditure on machinery or plant for business use. Rates of allowance now correspond more close with rates of commercial depreciation. A number of representations have been received from the hotel industry about the withdrawal of incentive first-year and initial allowances.

Tax Office, Londonderry (Explosion)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details in the Official Report as to the extent of the disruption caused to the collection of taxes and to tax records as a result of the recent explosion in the tax offices in Londonderry; and whether any delays in the collection of taxes will result.

Mr. Norman Lamont: There was a temporary disruption to normal working in the tax and collection offices in Londonderry while alternative premises were being made ready.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost of repairing the damage caused to the Inland Revenue building in Londonderry by the recent terrorist explosion there.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The building itself is beyond repair. Other arrangements to accommodate staff and work for the time being have been made.

Personal Pensions

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on what proposals he has for making PEP's more attractive to the investing public.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The scheme is kept under review.

Pensioners

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his best estimate of the number of pensioners liable for income tax in the current year.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimates are available for single people aged 65 and over and married couples in which one or both members are aged 65 and over. In 1988-89, 2·6 million of these tax units are liable to income tax, approximately one third of all aged tax units. This estimate is based on a projection of the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes and is therefore provisional.

Secret Services (Expenditure)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the expenditure on the secret services vote for each previous year for which figures are available taking 1988-89 as 100.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Outturn figures are published in the annual appropriation accounts. The figures for the secret service vote for the last five years in the form requested are:

	£ million
1983-84	62·4
1984-85	66·3
1985-86	71·4
1986-87	81·1
1987-88	91·7

Note: Based on 1988-89 Estimates provision of £113·2 million = 100.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer under which headings other than class XX vote 3 Cabinet Office: Secret Services, expenditure on the secret services is accounted for.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In the interests of national security, successive Governments have declined to publish the information requested.

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report the relevant allowances referred to in annex 7 of Cmnd. 9756 in each case in terms of local currency and as a percentage of average adult male earnings or the nearest available equivalent together with the marginal and average rates of tax for single persons and one-earner married couples with such earnings; and if he will add (a) the average and marginal rates for a two-earner married couple where the wife's earnings are the average for an adult female and (b) the amount of child benefit or child allowance.

Mr. Norman Lamont: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information on the level of tax thresholds and on the marginal rates of tax in some of the countries mentioned in annex 7 of Cmnd. 9756 is published in the Inland Revenue's note "International Comparisons of Direct Tax on Employment Income" a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current married man's tax threshold as a percentage of adult manual workers' average earnings currently as calculated in chart 2.4 of Cmnd. 9756; and what is his latest estimate of the number of families who would now receive at least 80 per cent. of their present income if they did not work at all.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In 1988-89, the married man's tax allowance is 37·3 per cent. of average adult manual earnings. The number of families who would receive at least 80 per cent. of their current income if they did not work is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

Taxation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what respect his latest proposals for separate taxation of husbands and wives differ in principle from those given in paragraph 3.4 of Cmnd. 9756; and what is the gain or loss to the Revenue from the change at current tax and allowance levels.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Information about the new system of independent taxation for husband and wife and its costs is given in the Financial Statement and Budget report 1988-89, pages 39 and 46.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the net gain or loss to the Revenue from (a) reducing the standard rate of income tax by 5p, (b) raising the ceiling for means-tested income support by 25 per cent. and (c) increasing the state pension by 10 per cent.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The direct revenue cost in a full year, at 1989-90 income levels of a 5p reduction in the basic rate of tax is about £7·5 billion. If introduced for 1989-90 the change would reduce tax receipts by about £7 billion in that year. A 10 per cent. increase in the basic state pension would lead to an increase of about £2 billion in the amount of pensions paid in 1989-90. An estimate of the cost of increasing the level of income support could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he has come to a decision on the option in paragraph 4.16 of Cmnd. 9756 of restricting the additional personal income tax allowance to those in receipt of one-parent and other appropriate benefits; and if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing what the effect of such a change would be in terms of the number of allowances claimed and the savings to the Revenue;

(2) if he has come to a decision on the option in paragraph 4.15 Cmnd. 9756 of converting the additional personal income tax allowance into increased social security provision; and if he will provide an estimate of (a) the amount of revenue which could be transferred to the social security budget in this way and (b) what increase in benefits would be required to ensure that nobody is worse off as a result of the change.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Section 30 of the Finance Act 1988 changed the rules for the additional personal allowance so that from April 1989 unmarried couples with children will be able to quality for only one additional personal allowance between them. No consequential changes in social security benefits were made and there are no plans for further changes in the allowance.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what tax reliefs are available towards the costs of company employees studying for vocational or professional qualifications in the United Kingdom; and what information he has on such allowances in France and West Germany.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 29 November 1988]: There are tax reliefs for employees' job-related training which exempt from income tax training costs met by employers and by employees themselves provided certain conditions are satisfied. Last year we were able to introduce a new relief for employees whose employers pay for the cost of retraining in new skills and for self-employment.

Details of the tax reliefs for training available in France and Germany, together with those of a number of other major industrial countries, including the United Kingdom, are available in a report published last May by the PICKUP programme of the Department of Education and Science. I believe that my hon. Friend already has a copy.

Mortgages

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the amount of the mortgage taken out by the median mortgagor claiming mortgage interest relief, the increase since May in the rate of interest, the amount of interest payable in a full year, and the total amount of relief at the standard rate payable in a full year at the standard rate of income tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In 1988-89 the estimated median mortgage is £22,000. The mortgage interest rate has increased since May from 9·75 per cent. to 12·75 per cent.; and increase of three percentage points. The gross amount of interest payable in a full year at 1988-89 levels by the median mortgagor is £2,550; the amount of relief at the basic rate of income tax is £640 leaving a net interest payment of £1,910 in 1988-89.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much is paid by the top 5 per cent. of taxpayers in employees' national insurance contributions; and what would be the gain to the Revenue by removing the upper earnings limit.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The top 5 per cent. of taxpayers, including employees and the self-employed, are provisionally estimated to pay about £1·4 billion in national insurance contributions in 1988-89. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 31 October at columns 500-01 for the Revenue effect of abolishing the upper earnings limit.

Tax Allowances

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he proposes to extend the proposed married couples' income tax allowance to single parents in the form of an additional personal income tax allowance when separate taxation of husbands and wives is introduced in 1990-91.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The additional personal allowance for those with single-handed responsibility for children will continue to be available after independent taxation is introduced in April 1990. The additional personal allowance and the new married couple's allowance will be equal in value.

Deposit Takers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for (a) banks, (b) building societies and (c) other licensed depositors the percentage of advances to gross deposits together with the percentage held in, respectively, cash, call money and discounts, special deposits and investments; and if he will provide corresponding figures for 1958, 1968, 1976 and 1978.

Mr. Lilley: The information requested is available as follows:

a. for Banks—in various issues of the Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin, (Table 3.1 in the latest edition). No figures are available for 1958.

b. for Building Societies—in the BSA (Building Societies Association) Bulletin, Table 6, and also in Financial Statistics, Table 7.7. Figures for earlier years are available in "A Compendium of Building Society Statistics", published by the Building Societies Association.

c. for other deposit takers—no separate information is available.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the yield from capital gains tax on the sale of shares in unquoted companies for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Receipts in 1987-88 from capital gains tax from individuals and trusts were £1,380 million. It is estimated that 40 to 50 per cent. was derived from ordinary shares quoted on the United Kingdom stock exchange, about 20 per cent. from other shares and securities, and the rest from other property. I regret that finer analyses to isolate the yield from the sale of shares in unquoted companies are not available. Analyses are not available for the yield within corporation tax from gains on the sales of such shares by companies.

Fraud

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the detection of fraud by the Inland Revenue; and what tax has been recovered by such fraud investigations in the last financial year for which figures are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Since 1979 more Inland Revenue resources have been deployed, not just on fraud detection but on tax investigation work generally. This, together with improved case selection and working methods, has increased the yield—tax, interest and penalties—from such compliance work from £111 million in 1979 to £877 million in 1987-88. In the year to 31 March 1988 tax of £495 million was recovered through fraud investigations.

EEC (Overdraft Loans)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement outlining the powers which are available to the European Economic Community to seek overdraft loans from member states; and under what powers such demands have been met by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Brooke: The Commission is empowered to request overdraft facilities under article 12(2) of Council regulation 2891/77. This article allows the Commission to overdraw its accounts with member states to meet a prospective cash deficit. The member states share the overdraft in proportion to the estimated budget revenue due from each of them.

Member states are legally obliged to comply with properly constituted requests under article 12(2). The Government therefore meet such requests directly from the Consolidated Fund in accordance with article 2(3) of the European Communities Act 1972. Repayment of any drawing under the overdraft facility is made by deduction from future own resources payments. The article 12(2) facility does not affect the total amount which the Community is authorised to spend during the year.

EEC (IGA Payments)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date the IGA payments failed to be made in consequence of the recent European Council decision; what member states have failed to make the necessary payments; what sums are involved; and if such member states are obliged in terms of the agreement to pay interest on late payments.

Mr. Brooke: Member states are not obliged to make payments under the 1988 IGA until they have obtained the necessary approval from their national legislatures. This means that there is no fixed date on which the initial payments are due. Information relating to the timing of payments by individual member states is not generally available. There is no explicit provision in the IGA for interest charges. It would be for the Commission to consider whether to claim interest in the event of any default.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer why Her Majesty's Government agreed to make an advance payment to the EEC of their non-value added tax own resources because of the EEC's cash flow problems created by the non-payment of IGA by certain member states; what other member states were invited to make such advance payments; and under what powers the EEC has asked for such facilities from individual states.

Mr. Brooke: The last date on which the Government made an advance payment of non-VAT own resources was 21 November. At that time the Commission was experiencing cash flow difficulties because most member states, including the United Kingdom, had not paid their contributions under the IGA. The Government were satisfied that the Commission's request for this advance —as for advances made earlier in the year—complied with article 10(2) of Council regulations 2891/77. All such requests are made simultaneously to all member states; none is singled out.

EEC (Expenditure)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total amount of the expenditure authorised in the EEC budget for the EEC's current financial year; what measures have been introduced to prevent the EEC from overspending its budget by means of seeking advance payments under regulation 2891/77 or in delaying payments to member states which would normally fall to be made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The 1988 budget, as amended, provides for expenditure of 43,820 mecu (around £29,213 million). In its amending letter to the 1989 preliminary draft budget the Commission estimates that there will be underspending of some 1,300 mecu (around £867 million) in 1988. Advance payments made under article 10(2) of regulation 2891/77 do not increase the total amount which the Community is authorised to spend in any given year. The Brussels European Council in February agreed on measures to improve budgetary management and to strengthen the principle of annuality.

Industrial and Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the level of (a) industrial investment and (b) manufacturing investment in each of the last 20 years, including the latest information for 1988, at current and at 1988 prices.

Mr. Major: The information requested is as follows. The latest figures produced by the DTI for investment at constant prices use 1985 as the base year.

Fixed capital expenditure—£ million current prices

	Industrial investment[2]	Manufacturing (including leased assets)[1]
1968	2,717	1,569
1970	3,550	2,090

Inflation

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average annual rate of inflation between March 1974 and May 1979 and for the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The average rate of retail price inflation between March 1974 and May 1979 was 15·5 per cent. per annum. Inflation between October 1983 and October 1988 has averaged 4·9 per cent. per annum.

Tobacco Tax

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if his Department will be supporting the clauses within the European Community draft directives on the approximation of taxes on cigarettes, to subject all tobacco products to excise levy; and if he will support amendments to exempt any specific categories of tobacco products which are currently subject to United Kingdom excise tax;

(2) what is his policy towards the implementation of the European Community draft directives on the approximation of taxes on cigarettes and manufactured tobacco other than cigarettes which would result in a reduction of the retail price of cigarettes and other tobacco products.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 2 December 1988]: We have made it clear that we do not consider the European Commission's proposals for the approximation of indirect taxes to be necessary for the completion of the internal market. As such changes require the unanimous agreement of the member states before becoming law, there is no question of these proposals being forced upon us.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on proposals by the European Commission to end value added tax zero rating on voluntary activities conducted in village halls.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 1 December 1988]: There is no value added tax zero rating for voluntary activities in village halls, as such. What I think my hon. Friend has in mind is the judgment of the European Court of Justice published on 21 June which found that certain of the United Kingdom's zero rates were not permissible under EC VAT law; this may affect goods and services bought by village halls. We have been consulting widely with interested parties, including representatives of village halls, about how best this judgment can be implemented. All the representations that we have received will be taken fully into consideration in reaching decisions. An announcement will be made in due course.

Family Income

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give figures showing the net incomes, including family credit, of a married man with two children aged four and six years, where the father's weekly earnings are £100, £150, £200, £250, £300, £400, £500, £750, £1,000 and £2,000, assuming no mortgage or superannuation tax reliefs and in each of the following circumstances (a) existing system, 1988-89, (b) child benefit abolished, £500 million of the savings on child benefit put into family credit and the rest used to finance a further cut in the standard rate of income tax, (c) child benefit abolished, £1,000 million of the savings put into family credit and the rest used to finance a further cut in the standard rate of income tax, and (d) ditto, but with all the savings from child benefit used to finance a further cut in the standard rate of income tax.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 30 November 1988]: The table below shows the net income of a married man with two children aged four and six at the various levels of gross earnings specified. The first column relates to the tax and benefit system in force in 1988-89; the second column reflects the position which would have arisen in 1988-89 if child benefit had been abolished and all of the savings had been used to finance a cut in the basic rate of tax.

I regret that it is not possible to provide comparable figures under the other two options requested since insufficient information has been provided about the way in which the family credit system would be changed.

Gross earnings £ per week	Net weekly income[1] (£ per week) Current tax and benefit regime	Child benefit abolished and basic rate of tax reduced
150	133·19	120·54
200	166·19	154·84
250	199·19	189·14

500	374·22	369·37
750	524·22	519·37
1,000	674·22	669·37
2,000	1,274·22	1,269·37

[1] Net weekly income equals gross earnings less income tax less national insurance contributions plus child benefit plus family credit plus housing benefits based on the assumption that the family are local authority tenants paying average rent and rates.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will adjust the weighting of private sector housing benefit claims to reflect the complexity of the liaison between the local authority and the rent office.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Discussions on the allocation of housing benefit administration costs subsidy for 1989-90 are currently taking place between the Department and the local authority associations. It has been agreed in those discussions that the weighting used for private sector housing benefit cases for 1989-90 should not be adjusted to take account of the new rent officer arrangements. For future years, the weighting used will be reconsidered in the light of data on the operation of the new arrangements.

Stolen Pension Books

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill, Official Report, 28 November, concerning stolen pension books, if he will now reinstate the urgent needs allowances for pensioners left destitute after their pension is stolen.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. A pensioner whose pension has been stolen and is unable to manage until his next payment of pension is due may apply for a crisis loan from the social fund in the same way as can any other person who has had money stolen and has insufficient means to meet their immediate needs.

Computerisation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the projected costs of the computer operational strategy; whether the costs conform to budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his Department's (a) original and (b) latest estimate of the cost of the operational strategy computerisation project;

(2) what are his Department's (a) latest and (b) original estimates of the annual savings from implementing the operational strategy computerisation project.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The 1982 publication "Social Security Operational Strategy: A Framework for the Future", a copy of which is in the Library, provided broad estimates that, at November 1981 prices, the operational strategy would cost £720 million and produce net savings of £1,160 million over the 20 years to 2001-20.

Our latest estimate, at 1987-88 prices, is that the Department's total investment will be in the order of £1,200 million. These costs have been, and are expected to be, contained within the moneys allocated to the Department annually and as shown in the Public Expenditure White Paper. The strategy is already producing small savings in administration costs and these are expected to rise to around £150 million per annum by 1993.

These estimates are not directly comparable because the original figures were calculated for a group of projects significantly different in scope and content from those now under development or in operation.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what contact has been made with those concerned with the supply to local Department of Social Security offices of computer equipment and software since the social fund was introduced; and what penalty payments manufacturers or suppliers have been required to make because of dissatisfaction with equipment and software.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department maintains regular contact with its suppliers by means of monthly contract meetings. The principal contractor has assigned staff to support the Department and they frequently attend at the development centre. Initial bedding-in problems are not uncommon with new systems and those experienced by the social fund computer systems are now being satisfactorily resolved. No circumstance has arisen in which it has been necessary to consider the imposition of penalty payments.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what complaints he has received from local Department of Social Security offices about the breakdown rate of computers; and how many complaints from Department of Social Security offices in Bradford have been received.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A number of complaints have been received from local offices about the social fund microcomputer system. These include instances of system non-availability due to software problems and malfunctions due to hardware faults which do not result in total system failure because of the availability of back-up computers. The release of new software in July 1988 has led to significant reductions in software difficulties.

Offices in Bradford have reported faults on the computer since April 1988 but none of these has resulted in a complete breakdown in the system.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what complaints he has received about difficulties experienced by local Department of Social Security offices about problems in inputting data about crisis loans into computer systems.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A number of complaints were received from local offices in the early stages of the new social fund microcomputer system. These related mainly to the unreliability of the early versions of software. There have been no specific complaints about inputting crisis loans data to the computer system.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, by type and system, microcomputer equipment issued to local Department of Social Security offices; what is the total cost, to date, of supplying such equipment; and in how many cases such equipment has been supplemented or replaced.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department uses British Telecom Merlin M4000 microcomputers in its local offices to help with the administration of the social fund and income support. Local offices also use a small number of microcomputers to provide general administrative support. The equipment was supplemented earlier this year to enable the systems to handle the newly introduced income support in place of supplementary benefit, its predecessor benefit. In addition, the part of the system which helps local office staff locate beneficiaries' casepapers is currently being upgraded to provide additional memory and other enhancements. The total costs of these systems to date is £27 million.

This investment has brought significant improvements in efficiency and has provided local offices with useful computer assistance whilst our mainframe computerisation programme has been under development.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the total expenditure on computer consultants in connection with the operational strategy computerisation project.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The total expenditure on computer consultants' fees, from April 1982 until March 1988, was £45·455 million.

Credit Transfer

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report the proportion of each of the main benefits paid to recipients by credit transfer over the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information required is shown in the following table:

Proportion of retirement pensioners and child benefit recipients paid by credit transfer

	Retirement Pension per cent.	Child Benefit per cent.
December 1984	8·63	2·57
December 1985	10·75	4·45
December 1986	12·95	6·30
December 1987	14·65	8·00
December 1988	17·30	11·11

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to promote credit transfer as opposed to post office counter transactions; what budget is allocated to the promotion of credit transfer; what recent representations he has received from the Post Office about the potential effect on the financial viability of rural sub-post offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: All existing retirement pensioners have been invited by letter to opt for payment by credit transfer. By February 1989 similar invitations will have been sent to all recipients of child benefit. New claimants to retirement pension and child benefit are offered a choice of payment by credit transfer or order book. No specific budget is allocated to the promotion of credit transfer. Any such costs are met from the social security publicity budget of £12·77 million for 1988-89. No representations have been received recently from the Post Office about the potential effect of credit transfer on the viability of rural sub post offices.

Disabled Persons (Lodgings)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security who will be responsible for meeting the care costs of disabled people in supported lodgings after April 1989.

Mr. Scott: From next April people in lodgings, including supported lodgers, will receive normal income support and housing benefit in place of the present special payments of income support which include help with accommodation costs. These changes will mean that many disabled people in supported lodgings will be better-off, after meeting charges for accommodation and the provision of care, than under existing benefit arrangements. Existing claimants who might otherwise lose benefit overall will be given cash protection whilst they remain in a supportive environment. The overall effect will be to provide an estimated £1 million extra for supported lodgers as a whole. There will thus be no overall reduction in the level of help to this group.

Family Credit

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list the reasons why the family credit unit requires audited accounts from self-employed applicants;

(2) if he has any plans to allow self-employed applicants for family credit to provide documentary evidence other than audited accounts as proof of income.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 19 October at columns 895-96. The Family Credit (General) Amendment No. 4 Regulations 1988 which were laid before Parliament on 14 November to come into force on 5 December remove the requirement that only audited accounts are acceptable. In respect of claims for family credit made on or after 5 December a profit and loss account which has not been audited will be acceptable provided that it covers a period of not less than six months and not more than 15 months and is for a period ending not more than 12 months prior to the date of claim.

Community Care

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the guidelines set down by his Department for consultation between Social Fund officers or his Department and local authority social services officers for the allocation of community care grants.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Guidelines on consultation between the Department and local authority social services and social work departments are contained in paragraphs 1046-1050 of the social fund manual. A copy of the manual is in the Library.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the procedure for social fund officers or his Department to make more community care grant provisions for people being transferred from health authority accommodation to local authority accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Guidance and directions for the award of community care grants appear in the social fund manual, a copy of which is in the Library.

The guidance makes it clear that community care grants may be awarded to people being resettled in the community but not to those moving from one form of residential care to another. It also emphasises the importance of liaison between the Department and local authorities.

Social Fund

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what manual checks are being made by local Department of Social Security offices on social fund expenditure; when such checks were introduced; and in how many local offices such checks are being made.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no prescribed manual checks of social fund expenditure.

Some local offices may maintain clerical records as an aid to local management but no information is available as to the extent of such unofficial record keeping.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about the reliability of social fund data; and what action he has taken to resolve doubts about the reliability of social fund data.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have received a small number of representations from hon. Members about the reliability of the social fund data. Major budgetary errors were corrected in version five of the social fund software which was issued in July. After release of version six of the software later this month we expect that in general statistical reports will accurately record the present month's figures. However, some cumulative year-to-date figures will continue to be unreliable because of problems in earlier months.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he proposes to announce next year's budgets for the social fund for each of his Department's local offices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We hope to make an announcement early in the new year.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the Audit Commission has expressed any concern or made representations about the reliability of social fund data.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Local Offices

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what information he has as to the reasons why amounts of community grants paid by local Department of Social Security offices in Bradford vary substantially;

(2) what examination he has undertaken into the apparent inconsistencies between local Department of Social Security offices in spending budgets allocated under the social fund, including between Department of Social Security offices serving the same district.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are a number of possible reasons for differences between the amounts of community care grants paid by the three Bradford offices. The total amounts paid will depend on the number of eligible applications, the purpose of the application, the amount applied for, the relative priorities of different applications and the discretion of social fund officers in deciding whether or not to award a payment.

We are monitoring expenditure by local offices on the social fund, and regional teams have been set up to monitor the quality of decision-making by social fund officers. Social fund officers are expected to exercise their discretion flexibly within the framework of the law and the Secretary of State's directions and having regard to the guidance in the social fund manual. As the social fund is a locally managed discretionary scheme, absolute consistency in spending between different local offices is therefore not feasible.

Pensioners

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Scottish pensioners who are in receipt of income support are in receipt of transitional addition; and what is the average level of transitional addition paid.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update the reply to Sir Brandon Rhys Williams, the former hon. Member for Kensington, Official Report, 14 July 1987, column 451, in respect of pensioners' gross weekly incomes other than the state basic pension.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 28 November 1988]: The table shows the number of pensioners with income other than retirement pension of any category at the levels specified.

Gross income excluding pension (£ per week at 1986 prices)	Single pensioners (thousands)	Married couples (thousands)
less than £5	480	120
5-10	370	120
10-15	490	200
15-20	550	200
20-30	1,000	300
30-40	340	250

over 500	¹	20
Total	4,160	2,330

The updated table shows a slight increase in the number of pensioner units in receipt of additional income.

Note: Pensioners are defined as individuals in a tax unit which receives some form of retirement pension. Figures are for single pensioners or for married couples where the husband is aged 65 or over.

DEFENCE

Challenger

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the value of work undertaken by each company supplying any components or undertaking assembly work for the Challenger I tank in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: This is a matter for the manufacturer and is commercial in confidence, but a significant proportion of the tank by value is understood to be "bought out".

Helicopter Crash (Falklands)

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates and format of official contact between the Royal Air Force or his Department and the dependants or next of kin of the seven airmen killed in the Chinook helicopter crash in the Falklands on 27 February 1987.

Mr. Freeman: It is not practicable to list here each individual official contact with each of the dependants and next of kin of the seven RAF personnel killed in the Chinook accident in the Falkland Islands in February 1987. It is the aim of the service, following the death of a member of the Royal Air Force, to provide to the next of kin as much moral and practical support as may be needed or requested. This aim has been met according to the circumstances, needs and wishes of each of the next of kin.

Initial contacts took the form of visits by senior officers, letters of condolence from both the Royal Air Force and the Air Force Department and consultation over the funeral arrangements.

As is customary, a serving RAF officer was appointed as visiting officer to each of the widows, to help in her care and support and to ensure that everything possible was done to help her to adjust to life without her husband. The fiancee of one of the casualties was afforded similar support. Assistance is still available if required.

From a practical financial standpoint, there has been considerable direct contact with the next of kin by the Department over pensions, gratuities, estates, probate and tax.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provision his Department has made for the continued education of the dependants of the seven airmen killed in the Chinook helicopter crash in the Falklands on 27 February 1987.

Mr. Freeman: No specific provision has been made, but a child's forces family pension is payable in respect of each eligible dependent child of the deceased until the child reaches the age of 17 or ceases full time education if later. It is not, however, a condition of payment that the pension should be used in respect of the child's education.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what review his Department has conducted of the air-safety of Chinook helicopters following the fatal air crash in the Falklands on 27 February 1987;

(2) what was the cause of the fatal Chinook helicopter crash in the Falklands on 27 February 1987.

Mr. Freeman: As the hon. Member is aware, the county coroner of Oxford is conducting an inquiry into this tragic accident. The Royal Air Force has in the usual way conducted its own inquiry, the results of which have been made known to the coroner. Measures identified by the board of inquiry to improve the safety of Chinook helicopters in service with the Royal Air Force have been taken. In accordance with the usual practice, I shall place a copy of the military aircraft accident summary in the Library of the House as soon as the inquest is completed.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects a compensation settlement to be granted to the widows and dependants of the airmen killed in the Chinook helicopter crash in the Falklands on 27 February 1987.

Mr. Freeman: Claims on behalf of the dependants of five of the Royal Air Force personnel who lost their lives on 27 February 1987 were commenced by solicitors acting on their behalf in August 1987. Since then, correspondence has continued between the solicitors and the Ministry of Defence's claims branch, who are awaiting the completion of all necessary inquiries into the incident, including an inquest by HM coroner. Once these have been concluded, it should be possible to come to a decision very quickly on any ex-gratia compensation which might be payable.

Service Personnel (Dependants)

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provision for financial support his Department has made for Royal Air Force personnel, killed whilst on duty, separate to that provided by the various service charities including the Royal Air Force Benevolent Fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Royal Air Force personnel killed whilst on duty are entitled to benefits under the armed forces pension scheme. The scheme makes provision for short term families' pensions, equal to the deceased service man's basic pay, to be awarded to widows and dependent children for periods ranging from three to nine months depending upon family circumstances. Subsequently, long term widows' and children's pensions are awarded to those eligible. These are index-linked and remain in payment in the case of the widow for life provided that she remains unmarried, and in that of the children until the age of 17 or completion of full-time education if later. In the case of those who are unmarried a lump sum gratuity is paid into the deceased service man's estate.

In addition to these provisions, widows may be entitled to benefits under the war widows scheme administered by the Department of Social Security.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the number and value of any compensation ex-gratia payments made by him to dependants of service personnel who fail to qualify under the provisions of the Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act 1987.

Mr. Freeman: One claim from the dependant of a decease service man has been settled, at a cost of approximately £130,000 on an ex-gratia basis as a result of an incident during the period between 8 December 1986, when the Government announced their intention to repeal section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947, and 15 May 1987, when the Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act 1987 became law. A number of such claims are still awaiting settlement, and are the subject of discussions between the Ministry of Defence and the claimants or their legal advisers.

Royal Navy (Tobacco)

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review the facility whereby male Royal Navy personnel are eligible to purchase specially produced low priced cigarettes and tobacco while serving in United Kingdom shore establishments.

Mr. Freeman: The Admiralty board has recently reviewed this concession—known as the "Blue Liner" concession. Mindful of its responsibility to promote the health and physical fitness of personnel in the Royal Navy, the board has concluded that in the light of medical evidence about the consequences of smoking, it would be inappropriate for the concession to continue. They have decided accordingly that the price of these "Blue Liners" should be increased progressively in order to discourage use of the concession which will be finally withdrawn at the end of 1991. The price will be increased first in April 1989, followed by two further increases in January 1990 and January 1991 to bring prices much closer to those charged for proprietary brands. The extra revenue realised by these price increases will be paid into the fleet amenities fund and will be used specifically to provide benefits for naval personnel.

Queen's Own Highlanders (HIV Tests)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the most recent tests for antibodies against the human immunodeficiency virus were performed on the men of the Queen's Own Highlanders, who returned to Scotland from Kenya in December 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: It is not my Department's policy to disclose specific details of medical cases, which are confidential. I can confirm that tests have been carried out in 1987 and 1988.

Research

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what sources of funding are available for research in veterinary schools.

Mr. Sainsbury: The MOD has funds available for research in support of the Defence research programme, including extramural research work at higher education institutions. At present there are no agreements placed with veterinary schools.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if classified research is carried out for his Department in British universities;

(2) what approximate proportion of the published results of research funded by his Department is classified;

(3) if the results of the research into aerobiology being undertaken by his Department at Bristol university will be shared with other nations;

(4) what are the research objectives of his Department in the field of aerobiology.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department's sole objective in carrying out research into aerobiology is to provide information which should assist in the provision of effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons might be used against the United Kingdom armed forces. Work carried out at universities is generally not classified and publication is a matter for the universities concerned.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the figures for funding of research by his Department in British universities over each of the past five years.

Mr. Sainsbury: Expenditure over each of the last five years on research with British universities and further education establishments is as follows:

	£ million
[1]1984-85	10
[1]1986-87	15

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total budget of his Department for research.

Mr. Sainsbury: In 1988-89 we expect to spend a net total of £403 million on research.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total current annual funding for research by his Department in British universities.

Mr. Sainsbury: In 1988-89, we expect to spend £16 million on research with British universities and further education establishments.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what projects in British universities his Department currently is funding in the field of aerobiology; and what further projects he expects to fund.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Chemical Defence Establishment has no projects currently placed with universities or other higher education institutions in the field of aerobiology. There is one proposal being considered.

Chieftain Tank (Replacement)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, in discussing bids tendered for the contract to replace the Chieftain tanks, he has considered the introduction of penalty clauses in relation to delivery dates and conformity with specification.

Mr. Sainsbury: All relevant factors are being considered.

Military Bases and Establishments (Scotland)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the Army bases and establishments in Scotland which are currently in use.

Mr. Freeman: The Army bases and establishments in Scotland which are currently in use are as follows:

Procurement

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of expenditure incurred by the procurement division of his Department is spent within Scotland.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Meriomnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 18 April at column 334. However it should be noted that this information is based on the billing addition of the main contractors and some or all of the work might be carried out by the companies subsidiaries and subcontractors in another region.

Expenditure

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of defence expenditure is currently being incurred within Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Defence expenditure is not accounted for on a regional basis.

Lance Missile (Warhead)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any decision has been taken by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation to deploy a new warhead for the Lance missile.

Mr. Freeman: The possible deployment of a follow-on to Lance is one of the matters under consideration by NATO as part of its current review of theatre nuclear forces; no decisions have been taken.

HEALTH

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all contracts for domestic services let by competitive tendering to outside operators within each of the regional health authorities in England and Wales, together with their annual costs, for the period 1 October 1985 to 30 September 1988, and the cost of provision for the same services in each case in the last year before competitive tendering was introduced.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold information centrally in the form requested. From 1 October 1985 to 30 September 1988 some 100 contracts for domestic services were awarded to outside contractors. Estimated annual net savings against previous costs, total around £12 million.

Information about Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Rights of the Child Convention

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make it his policy to implement recommendations of the forthcoming United Nations convention on the rights of the child in so far as they relate to his responsibilities.

Mr. Mellor: A working group, on which the United Kingdom is represented, began the second reading of the draft convention in Geneva on 28 November.

The draft covers a range of issues of interest to several Government Departments. The United Kingdom has played a leading part in discussions on the drafting of the convention and we hope to be in a position to ratify its recommendations on completion.

Civil Defence

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of the joint DHSS/MOD planning group guidance to regional health authorities on the reception and allocation arrangements for armed forces' casualties to the National Health Service in war.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 19 April at column 375. The answer is still no.

Retford Hospital

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will direct Trent regional health authority not to sanction the sale of land adjoining Retford hospital in the light of the terms of the conveyance dated 26 November 1928 which required the purchasers and their successors in title to hold, use and enjoy the same so long as may be desirable for the benefit of the inhabitants of the Retford and District hospital.

Mrs. Currie: No. It would be inappropriate to issue such a direction. The district health authority's legal advisers have examined the deeds of conveyance. Their advice is that the deeds do not contain any restriction preventing the sale of the land but they are complex and a search is being made by the Land Registry in order to resolve any doubt.

The proceeds from the sale of this surplus land will be used to maintain and improve the delivery of health care in Bassetlaw and the sale proceeds will bring significant benefit to the Retford community.

Residential Care

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response he has had from regional and district health authorities to circular HC(88)43; and if he will make a statement about his efforts to promote co-operation between authorities and organisations representing those in residential care.

Mrs. Currie: HC(88)43 entitled "Health Services Development—Resource assumptions and planning guidelines" provides health authorities with guidelines for their plans for 1989-90. Regional health authorities' proposals for that year are not due to arrive at the Department until February 1989. We have therefore had no substantive response from health authorities yet. The circular asks health authorities, in planning the care of people with mental handicaps, mental illness, physical or sensory disabilities, and the care of elderly people, to take the views of consumers and the voluntary organisations which represent them into account. Following Lady Wagner's report (Residential Care—A Positive Choice) we are considering ways of making residential care more responsive to consumer choice.

Health Authorities

Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list National Health Service capital expenditure projects costing more than £1 million which have been completed in the Oldham district health authority during the last 14 years and those projected in the next five years.

Mrs. Currie: We do not hold this information on small-scale developments centrally. The hon. Member may wish to pursue his inquiries with Mr. R. B. Martin QC, chairman of North Western regional health authority.

Ophthalmology

Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any information concerning the average waiting list times and numbers of patients currently on the waiting lists for ophthalmological procedures in (a) the Oldham health authority, (b) the health authorities covering the Greater Manchester area and (c) on average in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: The available information is given in the table. Questions about Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Ophthalmology Departments, NHS hospitals, England

	Number of patients[1] on in-patient waiting list at 31 March 1988	Median waiting time of patients treated[2] during quarter ending 31 March 1988
Oldham DHA	712	20 weeks
Greater Manchester area[3]	5,772	Not available
Average for the 152 DHAs in England which provide in-patient treatment	420 approx.	11 weeks

[1]On a comparable basis with previous statistics.
[2]In-patients and day cases.
[3]Aggregate of 12 DHAs.

General Medical Council

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set up an independent committee to investigate the way in which the General Medical Council deals with complaints against doctors and to make recommendations for the future; and if he will include on the committee representatives from his own Department, the Ombudsman's office, the Lord Chancellor's office, the Association of Community Health Councils, the Patients Association and the Consumers' Association.

Mr. Mellor: The GMC is an independent statutory body. In 1987 it established a working party to review the procedures of the council in relation to disciplinary cases in which it is alleged that a doctor has seriously neglected or disregarded his professional responsibilities to patients. The GMC sought evidence from organisations representing patients and the health professions.

We have no plan to set up a separate independent committee.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current membership of the General Medical Council; how many members are (a) elected doctors and (b) lay people; and if he will take steps to increase the number of lay people on the General Medical Council so that there is no majority of elected doctors.

Mr. Mellor: The GMC has 50 medically qualified elected members and 13 nominated members of which 11 are lay members. In addition there are 34 appointed members who are medically qualified.

The Medical Act 1983 provided that there should be a majority of elected members over other members. We have no plans to change the legislation.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to require the General Medical Council to deal with all complaints referred to it rather than rely on its present policy of first requiring a National Health Service investigation that establishes that there is a serious case.

Mr. Mellor: No. Under the provisions of the Medical Act 1983 the GMC is empowered to consider and determine cases of serious professional misconduct in whatever way it considers appropriate. I understand that the GMC has no general policy of referring complaints to the relevant NHS authority but that each case is looked at on its merits. However, where appropriate the council will advise complainants if a matter appears suitable for investigation by the NHS.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information about medical complaints made to the General Medical Council regarding doctors working in (a) private medicine, (b) the National Health Service, (c) the prison medical service, (d) the forces medical service, is routinely passed on to his Department; in the last year for which figures are available, how many such complaints were received by the General Medical Council; and how many were rejected by (i) General Medical Council staff, (ii) the preliminary screener, (iii) the preliminary proceedings committee, (iv) the professional conduct or health committees.

Mr. Mellor: Information at this level of detail is not routinely passed to the Department. The council publishes a summary of information in its annual report, copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will require the General Medical Council to adopt identical procedures for handling all the medical complaints it receives, regardless of whether they concern doctors operating in the National Health Service, in private medicine or in the prison or forces medical services.

Mr. Mellor: I understand that the General Medical Council adopts identical procedures in respect of all registered doctors.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that the General Medical Council involves lay people in every stage of its disciplinary procedures.

Mr. Mellor: It is for the General Medical Council to determine its procedures, but there are lay members on each General Medical Council committee which considers cases in which a question of serious professional misconduct arises.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that all complainants to the General Medical Council are kept fully informed of any action that is taken.

Mr. Mellor: I understand that the General Medical Council routinely informs complainants of the action taken to deal with their complaint.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that transcripts are made of all hearings before the professional conduct committee of the General Medical Council, and that these are made available to all interested parties at reasonable cost.

Mr. Mellor: The GMC is required to arrange that a shorthand writer is appointed to take notes of hearings before the professional conduct committee. The solicitor to the council is required to provide on request a transcript of those parts of the proceedings at which the parties are entitled to be present. The charges levied for such transcripts are a matter for the GMC.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that the General Medical Council treats the falsification of a patient's notes as a matter of serious misconduct.

Mr. Mellor: The 1987 annual report of the GMC refers to a statement approved by the council on this matter. The council considers deliberate falsification of case notes to be unethical and a doctor so doing is liable to disciplinary proceedings if reported to the council.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors with qualifications obtained only from other European Economic Community countries have been registered by the General Medical Council; what proportion this is of all registered doctors; and, in the past five years, what has been the rate of change of applications for registration from European Economic Community trained doctors.

Mr. Mellor: We have figures only for the period June 1976 to December 1987 in which the GMC registered 3,301 doctors who obtained their qualifications in other EC states. We do not have information on how many have taken up practice or remained on the register and this figure cannot be directly compared with the total of 136,959 doctors registered.

The figures for EC doctors registered in the past five years and the rates of change are given in the table.

	Registrations	[1]per cent.
1984	300	− 8
1985	332	+ 11
1986	443	+ 33
1987	995	+125

[1] Increase/decrease on previous year.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors with qualifications obtained only from countries outside the European Economic Community have been registered by the General Medical Council; what proportion this is of all registered doctors; and, in the past five years, what has been the rate of change of applications for registration from non-European Economic Community trained doctors.

Mr. Mellor: I regret that we do not have information on the total number of doctors on the medical register who qualified outside the European Community. Since 1980 a total of 21,596 such doctors have been registered. We do not have information on how many took up practice or remained on the register and this figure cannot be directly compared with the total of 136,959 doctors registered at the end of 1987.

The number of overseas doctors registered in the last five years and the rates of change are given in the table.

Year	Registrations	Percentage[1]
1983	1,996	−11
1984	2,052	+3
1985	1,991	−3
1986	1,955	−2
1987	2,151	+10

[1] Increase/decrease on previous year.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision there is for the General Medical Council or any other body to ensure that all doctors trained in other parts of the European Economic Community or in non-European Economic Community countries meet standards of professional training equivalent to those laid down by the royal colleges.

Mr. Mellor: Under the terms of the Medical Act 1983 the General Medical Council accepts for registration the primary qualifications laid down in EC directives for recognition within member states. The Act also specifies that doctors from non-EC countries must have qualifications which the council can accept as equivalent to those required for United Kingdom registration. The General Medical Council also has a general function to assess which postgraduate EC qualifications are equivalent to United Kingdom counterparts. There are no equivalent formal provisions for doctors who have obtained postgraduate qualifications in non EC-countries, but the medical royal colleges are considering ways of assessing the post graduate qualifications of non-EC doctors applying under their sponsorship schemes.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in the past five years, whether the General Medical Council has provided him with information regarding the cases that have come before their professional conduct committees; and whether any of these originated from an individual's complaint.

Mr. Mellor: The GMC routinely notifies the Department of those cases heard by the professional conduct committee which result in a sanction affecting the doctors registration.

The minutes of the professional conduct committee are published by the GMC and indicate whether a case originates from an individual complaint.

Doctors

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what procedures there are to ensure that practising doctors keep abreast with advances in medical knowledge; and to what extent these are controlled by his Department.

Mr. Mellor: Every registered medical practitioner is responsible for keeping up to date with medical knowledge appropriate to his or her chosen specialty. We allocate funds for the provision of courses and other educational activities and for the expenses of attending such activities. The content of educational activities is largely determined by the profession itself.

As the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" states (paragraph 3.48), we propose to introduce a new postgraduate education allowance payable to family doctors who maintain regular programmes of education and training throughout their careers.

Tonometry and Perimetry

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he proposes to discuss tonometry and perimetry with the professional organisations.

Mr. Mellor: We are seeking the views of the professional bodies on the duties to be placed on sight testers as part of our consultations on implementing the optical provisions of the Health and Medicines Act. We shall consider any proposals they may make for conducting an examination of the eye to detect injury, disease or abnormality.

Glaucoma

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, in addition to the arrangements he is making for blood relatives of those who have glaucoma to be identified and advised to have an eye test, he will provide for these tests to be free.

Mrs. Currie: Yes, the proposals on these arrangements which have been issued for consultation envisage that identified close relatives of those with glaucoma would be given a free eyesight test.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he anticipates any increase or decrease in the numbers of people suffering from glaucoma in the next five years; and which age groups will be most affected.

Mrs. Currie: The prevalence of glaucoma increases with age. Due to an increasingly aging population it is likely that the numbers of people suffering from glaucoma will increase in the next five years. The age group most affected will be those over 60.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of people who go blind from glaucoma as a result of failure to have the disease detected at an early stage.

Mrs. Currie: The figures giving the number of registrations due to blindness caused by glaucoma are collated only every 10 years.

In the year ending 31 March 1981, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 1,149 new blind registrations as a result of glaucoma. We do not have information on how many of these resulted from failure to detect the disease at an early stage. However, people with a close relative who has glaucoma who are themselves over the age of 40 should ensure that they have a regular eye check.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of new cases of glaucoma are detected by optometrists or ophthalmic medical practitioners.

Mrs. Currie: We do not hold this information centrally.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many new cases of glaucoma are detected each year on average;

(2) how many people suffer from glaucoma; and how many of them are being medically treated.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that we do not hold information centrally on the number of people suffering from glaucoma, or on the numbers detected each year on average.

The estimated total number of in-patient admissions treated in National Health Service hospitals in England for glaucoma in 1985, the latest year for which data are held centrally, was 13,510.

Sight Tests

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the effect of charges for sight tests on the numbers of people seeking these tests.

Mr. Mellor: The free NHS sight test will continue to be available to nearly 40 per cent. of the population, including those less well off and competition in the optical market should keep any private fees at modest levels. Opticians will determine the level of any fees for those not entitled to an NHS sight test. We believe that people will continue to have periodic sight tests as at present.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many eye sight tests are carried out each year under the National Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on 14 November 1988 at column 476 which lists the number of sight tests in the years 1978 to 1987.

Blindness

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the most common cause of blindness in Britain.

Mr. Mellor: The most common cause of registered blindness in England at all ages is degeneration of the macula and posterior pole. For children up to 15 years of age the most common cause is congenital abnormalities of the eye, and for the 16 to 64 group it is diabetic retinopathy.

Negligence Claims

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to review the system for dealing with negligence claims; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have no current plans to review the system for dealing with negligence claims. Negligence is determined in the courts. The civil justice review has examined court procedures. Its recommendations to speed up and to reduce the costs of litigation are under consideration.

Nurses

Mr. Fearn To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a list showing how nurses and midwives were regraded in each district health authority in the Merseyside region and the guidelines used in this regrading exercise; and if he will specify (a) the amount of finance allocated to Southport and Formby health authority and the national average sum allocated to health authorities and (b) the grades awarded to Southport and Formby health authority and those awarded nationally.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Mr. Knox) on 28 November 1988 and to the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle) on 2 December 1988.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of nurses employed within each regional health authority.

Mr. Mellor: The overall numbers of nursing and midwifery staff (including agency staff) in each regional health authority at 30 September 1987 are given in the table.

Nursing and midwifery staff (including agency staff[1]) England 30 September 1987

Regional health authority	Wholetime equivalent[2]
England	404,040
Northern	27,540
Yorkshire	30,390
Trent	37,970
East Anglian	15,980
North West Thames	27,790
North East Thames	34,320
South East Thames	30,780
South West Thames	23,930
Wessex	23,160
Oxford	17,180
South Western	27,430
West Midlands	43,180
Mersey	22,020
North Western	37,250
London Post Graduate Special Health Authorities	5,140

Source: Department of Health Annual Census of NHS Non-Medical Manpower.

[1] Includes all qualified registered and enrolled nurses, midwives, learners and unqualified nursing staff.

[2] Figures are independently rounded to nearest ten (10) wholetime equivalents.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what instructions have been issued by him to members of employing authorities who formally hear the appeals from nurses arising from the regrading exercise.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None, except that appeals should not be heard from staff who are not working normally so long as they continue their industrial action.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will specify for each region how many nurses have registered a formal appeal within the regional health authority since June:

(2) if he will specify for each of the last three years how many nurses lodged formal appeals within each region.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department is monitoring the regrading exercise for nurses, on the basis of racial or ethnic origins; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints of racism on the reallocation of the grades for nurses his Department has received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: None.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to meet staff side representatives to discuss the negotiations over nurses and midwives and to accept their requests for binding arbitration.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am meeting representatives of the Royal College of Nursing today and representatives of the Royal College of Midwives on 7 December. I am not prepared to meet representatives of those trades unions whose members are taking part in industrial action over the current regrading exercise while that industrial action continues.

I should also make it clear that negotiations over the terms and conditions of nurses' and midwives' employment are a matter for the relevant Whitley council. I cannot take over the role of the Whitley council management side and direct meetings between me and trade union leaders should not be seen as a substitute for Whitley council discussions. In any event, I see no scope for arbitration over the details of a regrading exercise which has now been satisfactorily completed after years of negotiation with trades unions which wanted a new grading structure.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when it is expected that a permanent scheme for testing for the presence of HIV-2 antibodies in blood samples will be introduced.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 2 December.

Cook-chill Catering

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what charge the public health laboratory service laboratory at Seacroft, Leeds, is proposing to make to the Wakefield health authority for monitoring its cook-chill catering;

(2) if he will list those members of staff of the Leeds public health laboratory service who advised the Yorkshire regional health authority on the safety of cook-chill catering.

Mrs. Currie: We do not hold the information requested. I suggest that the hon. Member writes to the chairman of the public health laboratory service board.

Listeria Monocytogenes (Conference)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if any representative of Her Majesty's Government or the public health laboratory service attended the major conference on listeria monocytogenes at Rohnert Park, California, between 2 and 5 October.

Mrs. Currie: No. However, representatives have attended other relevant international conferences.

Committee on Safety of Medicines

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the reports of suspected adverse reactions received by the Committee on Safety of Medicines during 1986 and 1987 were submitted by pharmaceutical companies.

Mr. Mellor: In 1986 around 1,700 and in 1987, 1,778.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give a breakdown of the £460,000 spent by the Committee on Safety of Medicines during 1987-88.

Mr. Mellor: The expenditure was as follows:

Members' fees and expenses	95,000
Communications with doctors: "Current Problems"	85,000

Viewdata	34,000
Follow-up of yellow cards	15,000
Other means	9,000
Other administrative expenses	25,000
Contingency Reserve—not spent	197,000
	460,000

Note: £29,000 of the reserve originally earmarked for the production costs of a video, "Help Make Medicines Safer"—to encourage doctors to report adverse reactions—was met from another DHSS budget. Reserves were also held in case an urgent safety warning to doctors had been needed.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on which dates during 1986 and 1987 the Committee on Safety of Medicines met; and how many members were present on each occasion.

Mr. Mellor: The committee met on the following dates in 1986 and 1987.

[1] For all or part of proceedings.
Note: The number in brackets is the number of those present who were appointed as temporary members for the meeting in question.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who is the present chairman of the Committee on Safety of Medicines; who is responsible for the appointment; what is the term of office of the chairman; and if it is renewable.

Mr. Mellor: Professor William Asscher BSc, MD, FRCP, dean of St. George's hospital medical school, London. The appointment was made by Health Ministers for a renewable period of three years which expires on 31 December 1989.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the current members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines are women; whether he has any plans to increase the number of women members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: One. Officials have invited a number of medical, pharmaceutical and other bodies including the Medical Women's Federation, the Women into Public Life Campaign and the Women's National Commission, to make suggestions for membership appointments to the committee, as well as to the Medicines Commission, Committee on Review of Medicines and Committee on Dental and Surgical Materials, to serve from January 1990. We will appoint the members we consider best qualified to carry out the committee's statutory functions. The letter inviting names for nomination includes the following:

"Ministers would be pleased to increase the proportion of women members on these bodies, so women with appropriate expertise and experience would be particularly welcome."

A copy of the letter has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide an attendance record for each of the members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines during 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Mellor: The names of the members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines in 1986 and 1987 (a new term of appointment began on 1 January 1987) and their attendance record are given in the table.

[2] 1987 only.
[3] Member in 1987; appointed for only one meeting in 1986.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to increase the budget of the Committee on Safety of Medicines.

Mr. Mellor: Budget allocations for 1988-89 are still under consideration.

Tranquilliser Addiction

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce legislation to enable him to fund local groups formed to combat tranquilliser addiction.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has powers under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 to make grants to voluntary organisations. These grants are usually made to national organisations for their headquarters costs rather than to local bodies.

Health authorities also have powers to make grants to voluntary organisations. They are responsible for the development of services locally, which may include funding voluntary organisations. We have allocated £9·5 million in the current financial year to regional health authorities specifically for the development of services for those experiencing problems with drugs, including prescribed drugs such as tranquillisers.

Hypothermia

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the estimated numbers of people dying from hypothermia and the number of other cold-related deaths for each year since 1980; and if he will outline the steps being taken by his Department to reduce the numbers of such deaths.

Mrs. Currie: The numbers of deaths where hypothermia is recorded on the death certificate, either as primary or secondary cause of death, for England and Wales, are as follows:

Year	Number of Deaths
1981	685
1982	664
1983	538
1984	555
1985	827
1986	837
1987	[1]559
1988	[2]363

[1] Provisional.
[2] Provisional figure, to end of November.

Many causes of death are cold-related, in that the number of deaths from them increases in winter. However, hypothermia is the only cause that can be directly identified as a cold-related disease from mortality statistics.

We have again this winter launched the "Keep Warm Keep Well" campaign, in co-operation with Age Concern, Help the Aged and Neighbourhood Energy Action to offer advice on sensible self-help and the help available from statutory and voluntary services. I have sent a copy of the campaign booklet to the hon. Member and placed copies in the Library. Further copies can be obtained by telephoning the winter warmth helpline on 0800 289404.

Midwives

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will meet representatives of midwives working in the Merseyside regional health authority's area to discuss their grievances concerning regrading.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall be meeting national representatives of the Royal College of Midwives, including the president and the general secretary, on Wednesday 7 December. I cannot intervene directly in individual grievances which can be resolved by employing authorities following the agreed appeal process. I suspect that much of the sense of grievance felt by some midwives in Merseyside is caused by misunderstanding of the basis of the grading exercise which the Royal College of Midwives and other trades unions agreed to.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any account was taken of length of service or clinical experience when regrading midwives by the Mersey regional health authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Health Service trades unions and management agreed that the grading of midwifery posts should be determined on the basis of the duties and responsibilities of postholders at 1 April 1988. The grading definitions reflect the different levels of clinical experience and responsibility called for in different posts and the grades allocated to midwives therefore take account of their clinical skills. Because the agreement entered into by the Royal College of Midwives and the other parties specified that posts and not individuals were being graded, length of service was not taken into account in determining grading.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deliveries were carried out by midwives in each of the last five years; and what percentage this is of the total number of deliveries.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account is taken when regrading midwives of the training and completion of a certificate in midwifery by practitioners.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: All holders of midwifery posts are required to possess the qualification of registered midwife (RM) and this is the only registrable qualification which is needed to practise as a midwife. Possession of this qualification entitles the holder of a midwifery post to be placed at least as grade D in the new grading structure —agreed by Health Service trade unions and management.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many years' experience a midwife needs before she achieves grade G.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Health Service trades unions and management have agreed that grading should be determined by the duties and responsibilities of the post held by the individual not by the number of years he or she may have spent in midwifery practice. Therefore the grading definitions do not prescribe periods of experience.

Organ Transplants

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest figures for organ transplants in the United Kingdom, organ by organ; and what has been the variation in availability of organs over the past five years.

Mrs. Currie: The latest figures provided by the United Kingdom Transplant Service of organ transplants in the United Kingdom from 1 January 1988 to 25 November 1988 are as follows:

	Organs
Kidneys	1,500
Hearts	255
Heart/Lung	93

	Organs
Lungs	16
Livers	219
Corneas	[1]1,336

[1] Estimated figure.

It is not possible to give precise figures for the variation in availability of organs. However, the number of kidney transplants roughly reflect the variation in donor organ availability. The full-year figures for kidney transplants for the last five years were:

Year	Kidneys
1984	1,443
1985	1,336
1987	1,485

From January 1989, health authorities will be asked to audit all deaths in intensive care in order to assess the number of potential organ donors.

Foreign Patients (Treatment)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Tottenham, Official Report, 30 November, which countries have arrangements which enable them to refer patients for free treatment in the United Kingdom under the National Health Service; what these arrangements are; and why these arrangements do not apply to British dependencies in the Caribbean.

Mr. Mellor: There are bilateral health agreements between the United Kingdom and 25 other signatories. Generally these provide only for immediately necessary treatment for conditions arising during the course of a visit. However, seven of these agreements allow for patients to be referred to the United Kingdom specifically for treatment free of charge. The grounds for allowing this vary:

for the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man, Malta and Gibraltar, the referral provision aims to achieve a balance of costs of providing health care to visitors on each side; similar considerations apply in the agreement with Yugoslavia; for the USSR, the provision is to enable patients from both countries to benefit from certain highly specialised care; for the Falkland Islands, the provision was made to take account of the particular difficulties faced by the islanders in obtaining specialist care following the conflict with Argentina.

We are not aware of similar considerations applying in the case of residents of the British territories in the Caribbean.

Mental Illness

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by health regions the mental hospitals which are scheduled to (a) open and (b) close in (i) the current and (ii) the next year.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 28 November]: The table lists the mental illness hospitals which are, so far as we are currently aware, scheduled to open or close in (i) 1988-89 and (ii) 1989-90.

Regional Health Authority	Open	Close
Yorkshire	—	Broadgate (ii)
Trent	—	St. John's Lincoln (ii)
North-East Thames	East Ham Memorial (ii)	—
South Western	Glenside (i)	Horton Road (i)
West Midlands	—	Powick (i)
Oxford	Campbell (ii)	—

(i) 1988-89.
(ii) 1989-90.

CIVIL SERVICE

Agency System

56. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service whether he can announce any further progress on the setting-up of the agency system.

Mr. Luce: Two agencies have been set up, about 30 more have been announced and more are in the pipeline. I shall be making a progress report to the House before too long.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Human Rights (China)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South of 28 November, Official Report, column 108, what cases of human rights in China were discussed with the Chinese Foreign Minister during his visit to the United Kingdom in March.

Mrs. Chalker: The question of human rights arose in the context of discussion on Tibet. Specific cases were not mentioned.

Health Services Review

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the terms of reference of the desk review of health services in the dependent territories; when he expects it to be completed; and if the House will be informed of the action to be taken in consequence of the review.

Mr. Chris Patten: The terms of reference of the desk review of health services in the Caribbean dependent territories are:

1. Assemble existing information including the current health plans and any readily available related statistical information from each of the four territories, WHO/PAHO reports, and reports by ODA medical advisers during 1983 to 1988, and other relevant information from ODA files. ODA medical advisers will provide guidance on the material to be examined and will provide oral briefing on the situation in the territories;
2. Write a preliminary report covering
   a. the evidence on the state of health of the population establishing and ranking the main health problems which need to be addressed and their main causes (nutrition, sanitation, health care services, etc);
   b. the extent to which these health problems are being addressed by current policies and programmes of health services, public and environmental health, and nutrition;
   c. the costs of providing the health and environmental services identified under b. and assessing their cost effectiveness and value for money; examining how the provision of these services is financed and identifying implications for quantity and quality of services supplied and demanded and for other factors relevant to the study;
   d. recommendations for future health and environmental services, and measures to improve nutrition, which optimally address the main health problems identified under a. These recommendations should cover:
      (i) appropriate levels of health care and other services;
      (ii) division of services between those provided on island and those provided off island;
      (iii) sources of finance for services;
      (iv) the means of delivering health and other services;
      (v) levels of staffing and equipment for on island services taking account of financial, medical, physical, institutional and manpower constraints in a manner which makes optimum use of the available resources; and where relevant to identify options where choices can be made.
   e. recommendations for future ODA-funded assistance, with particular attention to manpower, training and advisory services; an analysis of alternatives and recommendations for the administration of ODA programmes with particular attention to professional monitoring and supervision to the extent that existing information so permits.
3. Identify the main gaps in information;
4. Prepare a work plan and timetable for gathering the missing information and completing the work required by i. to v., with attention to the order of priority between countries, specify the inputs required for this work from the main professional disciplines;
5. Prepare an outline for the final report, covering the main chapter and section headings with notes on what is to be covered by each.

This desk study was completed last August. It was the first step, preliminary to a field study, in each of the Caribbean dependencies, for which consultants are at present being engaged. Their report should be available by about next spring; I shall keep the right hon. Member informed.

Nigeria

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about financial relations with Nigeria.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Nigerian Government's efforts to overcome the country's economic difficulties have been severely affected for some time by the fall in the oil price and its heavy debt burden. Foreign exchange earnings have fallen sharply. This has made it increasingly hard for Nigeria to meet its commitments and to rebuild its economy.

Nigeria is now embarking on a series of important adjustment measures. It has reached agreement with the managing director of the IMF on a new standby arrangement and is negotiating for new loans from the World Bank.

It will be seeking a further restructuring of its official debt in the Paris Club, to supplement the agreement already being negotiated with the commercial banks.

In addition to this, it is clear that Nigeria will require further bilateral assistance in 1989. This will require a concerted effort on the part of the international financial community. I have therefore decided, in consultation with my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, to offer a grant of US$100 million in 1989, on condition that the standby is approved and that other donors are prepared to make a substantial contribution.

Over two thirds of the cost of the United Kingdom share will come from the reserve and the balance from the existing agreed aid programme.

These arrangements demonstrate the strength of the United Kingdom's interest in the health of the Nigerian economy and our willingness to assist the Nigerian adjustment programme.

WALES

Elderly Initiative

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been allocated by his Department to the elderly initiative; and what projects have been financed by the elderly initiative in Wales, listing each project and the amount allocated thereto on a county basis.

Mr. Grist: £2,625,000 during the first two years. The projects funded so far, together with the amounts allocated to date, are:

Clwyd
Rhuddlan Elderly Mentally Ill Team	141,158
Special Project Workers: Community Care for Elderly People	22,500
Dyfed
Integrated Care Relief Scheme, Llanelli	27,878

Staying at Home Initiative	515,448
Good Care Campaign	20,948

Business Headquarters

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he proposes to take to encourage the presence of business headquarters in Wales in advance of the single European market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Since I became Secretary of State I have increased the Welsh Development Agency's provision by more than 50 per cent. so enabling WINvest to intensify its efforts in attracting new business, including headquarter operations, to Wales.

Health Authorities

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to increase the funding allocations to the health authorities in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: We will be making an announcement about the resources available to the NHS in Wales in 1989-90 very shortly. An announcement of the allocations to individual health authorities will be made early in the new year.

Free Food Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of foodstuffs distributed in the United Kingdom under the free food scheme is being made available to eligible applicants in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Designated organisations based in Wales have been authorised to withdraw 176 tonnes of butter and 332 tonnes of beef from intervention stores in 1988. These amounts represent 7·15 per cent. and 18·74 per cent., respectively, of the total withdrawals authorised in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to see that foodstuffs available free under the European Economic Community free food scheme are available to all eligible people in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Produce is being distributed within the rules of the scheme to eligible recipients in Wales by the organisations designated to carry out the distribution. Given the voluntary nature of the scheme it is not possible to ensure that foodstuffs are available to all eligible people.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will identify the distribution centres for free food in Wales; and how much of each product is being made available per centre.

Mr. Peter Walker: Local distribution arrangements are a matter for the designated organisations to determine within the rules of the scheme.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those voluntary organisations participating in the free food scheme.

Mr. Peter Walker: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food announced to the House on 21 April that 127 organisations had been designated to distribute surplus produce to the most needy. A list of those organisations was placed in the Library on that day.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Bleaches

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) whether he has plans to restrict the use of chlorine bleached pulp in disposable nappies;

(2) whether he has plans to restrict the use of coffee filters treated with dioxin producing bleaches.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 28 November, at column 96. I understand that the quantities of dioxin which may occur in these products are very small. I will consider the matter further when the expert advice from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the committee on toxicity at the Department of Health is available.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the present and projected levels of investment in manufacturing industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Investment in manufacturing industry, including leased assets, in the first three quarters of 1988 is provisionally estimated to have been £8,232 million in 1985 prices and seasonally adjusted. In his Autumn Statement, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer forecast that the volume of manufacturing investment in 1988 would be 18 per cent. higher than in 1987 and would rise by a further 10 per cent. in 1989.

VAT

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessments he has made as to the likely effect on (a) his Department's capital building programme and (b) the rent the Department will pay under occupational leases of implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on value added tax on non-domestic buildings.

Mr. Forth: Implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on VAT will have no effect on my Department's capital building programme since compensating adjustments have been made to the relevant expenditure provisions. At this stage, before landlords have decided whether to exercise their option to tax rents, it is not possible to offer meaningful estimates of the effects of the judgment on rental costs.

Society of British Aerospace Manufacturers

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met representatives of the Society of British Aerospace Manufacturers.

Mr. Atkins: I last met the president and representatives of the Society of British Aerospace Manufacturers in September 1988 during the Farnborough air show.

Elstree Film Studios

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assurances he has (a) sought and (b) received in relation to the continued use of Elstree film studios for film production following the recent deal for the disposal of the studio properties.

Mr. Atkins: No such assurances have been sought or received. It is the Government's view that the future use of the site is a matter for the new owners to determine, subject to any consents which may be required from the planning authorities.

Design Initiative

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will publish a table showing the design initiatives which have benefited from the design initiative and the amount of money committed to each initiative.

Mr. Forth: Reasons of commercial confidentiality preclude giving details of the assistance offered to individual companies. However, since 13 January 1988 over 700 assisted design consultancies have been completed, over 700 are in progress and about 600 are subject to agreement of terms of reference before proceeding. The average contribution made by the Department towards the cost of completed consultancies is currently £2,387.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many staff are employed on the design initiative.

Mr. Forth: Administration of the design initiative is contracted out to the Design Council. Within the Department, policy on and management of the design initiative forms part of the duties of five full-time staff. DTI regional office staff both help promote and receive applications for enterprise initiative consultancies, including the design initiative.

British Steel (Privatisation)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the cost of advertising (a) in the press, (b) on television, (c) on radio, (d) on posters and (e) by other means in relation to the privatisation of British Steel.

Mr. Atkins: The marketing costs of the British Steel flotation will be reported in due course in the usual way together with the other costs of the flotation.

EC Research Council

Mr. Curry: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress was made at the meeting of the Research Council of European Community Ministers on 17 November, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I represented Her Majesty's Government at the meeting of the Community's Council of Ministers (Research) in Brussels on 17 November.

The Council agreed common positions on three programmes within the overall provisions of the Community's 1987-91 framework programme for R and D:

ECLAIR, a programme covering agro-industrial technologies which is aimed at improving links between agriculture and industry with Community funding of 80 mecu (£53 million) over five years; SPES, a programme with Community funding of 6 mecu (£4 million) over four years, which is intended to promote European collaboration in economic science by improving the training, communications and mobility of economists within the Community and stimulate economics research networks at the European level; and the large facilities programme designed to facilitate wider access by European researchers to large-scale European scientific facilities.

The programme will provide Community funding of 30 mecu (£20 million) over four years for contributions to the operating costs of selected facilities, and, if necessary, to the costs of adaptations or enhancements needed to increase access together with expenditure incurred by visiting scientists.

The Council discussed a presidency paper on the technological gap between the developed and less developed regions of the Community. There was agreement that although Community R and D policy should take account of the need to strengthen the cohesion of the Community, the need for European industrial competitiveness and technical excellence should be the priority for EC R and D programmes.

The Council also received a Commission presentation on proposed Community involvement in European space development.

TRANSPORT

Motorway Maintenance

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is currently taking effectively to monitor the way that maintenance repair work is carried out on motorways so as to avoid unnecessary inconvenience being caused to motorists.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We avoid unnecessary inconvenience by the programming of essential maintenance work so as to minimise traffic disruption, by giving wide publicity to motorway lane closures, and by special measures such as lane rental schemes and mobile lane closures.

M69 (Roadworks)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what temporary road signs were erected prior to and including 5 November informing motorists approaching the M69 of the total closure of the south-west-bound carriageway on 5 November.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Temporary road signs were displayed on all approaches to the M69/M1 junction on 5 and 6 November advising motorists of the closure and to follow the diversion route indicated by a circle symbol. No signs were displayed prior to 5 November.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advance warning or notice was given to motorists advising them of the intention to close the whole of the south-west-bound carriageway of the M69 on 5 November.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department issued a press notice on 1 November giving full details of the proposed closures between the M1 near Leicester and the A5 at Hinckley.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why the policy of phasing motorway repair work was not followed on 5 November in respect of the south-west-bound carriageway of the M69 so that at least one lane was kept open to vehicular traffic.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The main works were being carried out on the two-lane section of the M69 near its junction with the M1. There was insufficient space to allow the safe passage of vehicles and provide a safe working environment for the workmen in accordance with the requirements of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. As the works were of short duration and there was a reasonable alternative route for the traffic volume involved, expensive contraflow traffic management could not be justified.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why the whole of the south-west-bound carriageway of the M69 was closed on 5 November.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It was closed to enable the removal and replacement of a cracked running surface close to the M1 junction. During the closure other routine maintenance works were carried out along the full length of the motorway between Leicester and Hinckley.

The resurfacing work required the removal and replacement of the wearing course to both traffic lanes close to the M1/M69 roundabout. Due to physical constraints it was not possible to use the hard shoulder as a running lane. The joint report by the Department of Transport and County Surveyors Society provides notes for guidance about the requirements of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 as they affect personnel required to undertake work on motorways and trunk roads (revised 1985). It requires that a safety zone is provided between the works and live traffic. On motorways this is normally 1·2 m wide.

On the two-lane section of the M69 it was not possible to carry out resurfacing works and provide a safety zone and therefore the decision was taken to close the motorway under a temporary traffic regulation order. The alternative of installing contraflow traffic management was not very practicable and would have been very expensive. Traffic flows on M69 are not as high as on other motorways, such as the M1, and therefore delays caused by diverting the traffic were not expected to be serious. The opportunity was taken to make the most of the closure by carrying out other works such as safety fence repairs, joint sealing, replacement of road studs and replacement of vehicle counting loops. Because there is limited access at junction 2 (A5070 at Hinckley) it was also necessary to close the section of motorway between junction 2 and junction 1 (A5 at Hinckley).

Manchester Airport (Singapore Flights)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the availability of adequate capacity for north-western travellers wishing to fly to Singapore and about being able to fly direct from Manchester airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have received a number of representations this year about the level of capacity being mounted on the route between Manchester and Singapore.

United Kingdom and Singapore aviation officials will be meeting early next year to review the possibilities for liberalising air services arrangements between our two countries. This will include arrangements on the Manchester-Singapore route.

M20

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he plans to make an examination of the capacity of the M20 to the west of Ashford to determine if it has sufficient reserve capacity to accommodate future growth beyond the opening of the Channel tunnel in 1993.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This will be done in the context of the current regular review of the national trunk road programme.

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the proposed starting date for the contracts to be placed late this year and in the spring of next year for the construction of the M20 between Hollingbourne and Ashford; and how long this will take.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The first contract is expected to start in January, the second about one month after the contract is let next spring. The contract periods are 27 and 24 months, respectively.

Rating Reform

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the use of the driver and vehicle licensing centre facilities at Swansea for the preparation of Scottish poll tax forms; and if he will give details of what consultations were undertaken with the driver and vehicle licensing centre unions and of who provided the manpower to operate the machinery and to load and transport the forms.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The supplier of DVLC's paper handling equipment asked to use one of the machines for 10 days to process community charge forms. The request was agreed as the machine was not needed for DVLC work at the time. The forms were processed by company staff, so that there was no reason to consult the DVLC trade unions.

Maritime Law

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek to change maritime law to provide for adequate compensation to structures damaged by ships.

Mr. Portillo: Under an international convention agreed in 1976, which came into operation under United Kingdom law on 1 December 1986, shipowners can limit their liability in respect of damage caused by ships. The International Maritime Organisation is to review the limits in the 1976 convention, and as part of that review we will be pressing for a significant increase in the present limits. Parliament decided on the liability regime to be applied to pilots and pilotage authorities as recently as 1987 with the passage of the Pilotage Act 1987.

M4 (Barrier Replacement)

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current progress on the programme of barrier replacement on the M4; and what information he has on the standard and quality of the original installations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In Wiltshire, the support posts for 10.6 km of safety barrier have already been replaced. A further 5.2 km is programmed for this financial year, and 3.4 km for next year. The remaining 26.8 km will be dealt with in subsequent years.

Inspections have shown the original safety fence nowhere to be below the standard current at the time it was installed.

Ports

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures the Government intend to introduce to ensure fair competition between British and foreign ports in 1992.

Mr. Portillo: We are pursuing the need for open and fair financial relations between public authorities and port undertakings within the European Community. The completion of the single European market will not worsen the competitive position of our ports.

Railways (Deaths)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by year from 1979 to date, including the total so far this year, the number of deaths that have occurred on the railways in Yorkshire in (a) accidents, (b) suicides and (c) trespassing; and, of that total, how many were railway staff.

Mr. Portillo: Information on a county basis is not readily available.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by year from 1979 to date the number of deaths that occurred on the United Kingdom railways in (a) accidents, (b) suicides and (c) trespassing incidents; how many have occurred to date in 1988; of the above totals, how many were railway staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The table gives the information requested in respect of railways in Great Britain. Details of accidents on Northern Ireland railways are not reported to the Department of Transport.

Deaths occurring on the railways of Great Britain—1979 to 1988:

1979	107 (43)	180	134
1980	69 (32)	220	140
1981	76 (27)	222	147
1982	57 (27)	166	130
1983	69 (28)	212	146
1984	76 (25)	193	146
1985	74 (25)	168	150
1986	72 (16)	163	162
1987	104 (16)	173	144
1988	55 (16)	97	[1]185

[1] Some may transfer to the suicides category when a coroner's verdict is received.

M25 (Traffic Growth)

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the steps he is taking, apart from the construction of a Dartford bridge crossing and the current widening of the western sector of the M25, to ensure that there is sufficient capacity on the M25 and other orbital roads around London to cater for expected traffic growth over the next decade.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The construction of the new Dartford-Thurrock bridge and the widening of the south-western sector of the M25 will relieve those sections of the motorway where congestion regularly occurs. A study into ways of widening the length between junctions 15 and 16 is under way.

Consultants are due to report on their review of the whole motorway early next year. Improvements to other London orbital routes are included in the national road programme.

A study is to begin shortly into orbital movements in the south-west quadrant of London.

Lancaster Canal

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the current cost of restoring navigation to the northern stretch of the Lancaster canal between Tewitfield and Kendal by constructing the creeps in the M6 motorway bridges as referred to during the Second Reading debate of the British Waterways Bill on 22 February 1965, Official Report, volume 707, columns 106 to 134, together with any other necessary expenses.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Several million pounds in construction and traffic disruption costs.

Plutonium

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what consultations he has had with British Nuclear Fuels Limited concerning the proposal to fly plutonium to and from Prestwick airport; and what action he is taking;

(2) what representations he has received from British Nuclear Fuels Limited concerning the proposal to fly plutonium fuel to and from Prestwick airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No decision has yet been made on whether to return reprocessed plutonium to Japan by air.

BNFL is developing a suitable container. When it is satisfied that this will meet all the regulatory provisions, the design will be submitted to the Department for assessment and approval.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Ex-President Marcos (Assets)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will request the United Kingdom banks to open private safe deposit boxes in order to facilitate the identification of assets fraudulently obtained by ex-President Marcos and his family.

Mr. Lilley: Well-established procedures are available to the courts to enable United Kingdom banks to provide assistance in appropriate circumstances.

Indirect Taxes (Harmonisation)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect he estimates the harmonisation of indirect taxes, as proposed by the European Economic Community Commissioners, would have on (a) the poorest and (b) the richest 10 per cent. of households.

Mr. Lilley: Insufficient detailed information is available for assessing reliably the effect of these proposals on expenditure patterns across income groups.

The Government have made it clear that they do not consider tax approximation to be necessary for the completion of the single market.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current ratio of public expenditure to gross domestic product: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The Autumn Statement gave a forecast of 39¼ per cent. for the ratio of general Government expenditure (excluding privatisation proceeds) to gross domestic product in 1988-89. This ratio has declined from a peak of nearly 47 per cent. in 1982-83 and is now at its lowest level since 1966-67. It is expected to decline further to just under 39 per cent. in 1991-92.

Cash Limits

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the difference between his forecast for cash-limited vote expenditure for the first half of 1988-89 and the outturn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Table 1.8 of the Winter Supplementary Estimates (HC 690) shows Departments' estimates of outturn for cash-limited vote expenditure in the first six months of 1988-89. The table also shows Departments' forecasts of expenditure in the first six months, prepared earlier in the year.

"Government Purchasing"

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress is being made in implementing the report, "Government Purchasing", of December 1984.

Mr. Brooke: A report by the central unit on purchasing on progress in 1987-88 is published today. It records that in 1987-88 central Government Departments (excluding the Ministry of Defence) reported value-for-money improvements in their purchasing totalling £252 million, equivalent to just under 4 per cent. of total purchasing expenditure and an increase of £84 million on the previous year. For 1988-89 Departments have set targets for value-for-money improvements totalling £337 million, equivalent to 5 per cent. of expenditure and an increase on 1987-88 of £85 million. Taking into account that in 1985-86, the first full year after the purchasing initiative was launched, Departments reported value-for-money improvements of only £70 million, these successive increases in the savings reported by Departments are encouraging. Nevertheless, the report emphasises the need for continuing action by Departments to further improve their organisation, systems and staffing for purchasing and supply, so that efficient procurement becomes a standard part of good management practice. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library of the House.

Employee Share Ownership

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to encourage wider share ownership through employee share ownership plans.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government remain firmly committed to supporting employee share ownership, as our record of legislation in nine out of the last 10 Budgets testifies. We shall continue to examine sympathetically the wide variety of proposals made for new initiatives or improvements in this area, to see how far they are capable of building on the impressive progress already achieved.

Income Tax

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what percentage from income tax will be paid by the top (a) 1 per cent. and (b) 5 per cent. of incomes in the current financial year compared to 1978-79; and what are the corresponding figures for income before tax;

(2) what percentage of the revenue from income tax will be paid by the top (a) 1 per cent. and (b) 5 per cent. of incomes in the current financial year compared to 1978-79; and what are the corresponding figures for income before tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 28 November 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 28 July at columns 488-92.

Inflation and Exchange Rates

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is, for each year since 1978, the average (a) rate of inflation in Japan, West Germany, the United States of America and the United Kingdom and (b) the average rate of exchange in £ sterling of the yen, the mark and the dollar.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 5 December 1988]: "OECD Economic Outlook", June 1988, (table R11), gives the average annual inflation rates on a non-standardised basis for all the countries in question. Economic Trends, monthly, gives annual averages of the sterling exchange rate against the yen, mark, and the dollar.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Grant Maintained Schools

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether grant maintained schools will be allocated the same amount of money per pupil as locally financially managed schools within the same authority;

(2) whether a grant maintained school will have its annual year-on-year budget altered in line with other schools which have local financial management in the same local education authority.

Mr. Butcher: The Department's circular 10/88 made clear that the maintenance grant for a grant-maintained school would be based on the funding which my right hon. Friend is satisfied fairly represents what the LEA would have been likely to have provided for the school had it continued to maintain it, including expenditure on services provided centrally by the LEA. Once formula funding is in operation for the authority as part of an approved scheme of local management, the formula will be applied to grant-maintained schools in the area in the same way as to LEA-maintained schools. The amounts will reflect the authority's decisions on funding of its schools, but will also include an allowance for centrally provided services which in the case of LEA-maintained schools will be excluded from the delegated budget determined by the formula.

Capital Building Projects

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what criteria will be used to assess applications for capital building projects in (a) grant maintained schools and (b) local education authority schools under local financial management within the same authority.

Mr. Butcher: Applications for capital building projects in grant-maintained schools will be judged in the light of the total resources available for capital building in all maintained schools; my right hon. Friend has made clear his intention to treat grant-maintained schools no more favourably than LEA-maintained schools. Initially this will be done on a case by case basis, but once numbers are large enough a national bidding system is expected to be introduced similar to that which now operates for voluntary-aided schools. Local authorities' allocations for prescribed expenditure are unhypothecated—that is, authorities are free to spend them on whatever projects they wish. The size of an authority's allocation in respect of county and controlled schools depends on the extents to which its overall plans coincide with my right hon. Friend's priorities which are currently:

i. committed expenditure up to a level previously indicated to the authority.
ii. basic need for additional school places in areas of population growth;
iii. the removal of surplus places as school rolls fall;
iv. the improvement or replacement of existing school buildings.

Allocations for major projects at aided and special arrangement schools relate to specific schemes and are determined according to the same priorities.

Retraining

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to encourage mid-career retraining for those who wish to become teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Courses of initial teacher training are available for all potential entrants to the profession—regardless of age and previous experience. We have encouraged the development of new courses to meet a range of needs, including those of people who want to switch to teaching in mid career. This year nearly 6,000 people aged 26 and over entered courses of initial teacher training—30 per cent. of the total. One of the main aims of our teacher recruitment activity through the teaching as a career unit (TASC) is to attract more older people from other careers into teaching.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to promote the education of children, teachers and parents as to the dangers of solvent abuse.

Mr. Butcher: The Department currently funds annual expenditure by local education authorities of £4·1 million for the in-service training of teachers in drugs issues (including solvent misuse) and for the employment of drugs education co-ordinators in every local authority in England. The Department is also funding research at Newcastle university into the role of parents and families in the treatment and rehabilitation of young people with substance misuse problems.

Teachers

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many teachers have been recruited from the following countries, within the last year, to fill vacancies in schools in London; (a) Ireland, (b) Australia, (c) Canada, (d) New Zealand and (e) South Africa; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many applications for qualified teacher status were considered under paragraph 2(b) of Schedule 5 to the Education (Teachers) Regulations 1982 (S.I., 1982 No. 106) between 1 October 1987 and 30 September 1988 in respect of teachers who had trained in Australia, New Zealand and South Africa; and how many were accepted.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 25 November 1988]: The information is not available in the form requested. Between 1 October 1987 and 30 September 1988 applications for qualified teacher status from teachers with qualifications gained in the countries referred to by the hon. Member were received as follows:

Country	Total number of applications	Number accepted	Number rejected
Republic of Ireland	327	13	314
Australia	585	155	430
Canada	52	4	48
New Zealand	359	230	129
South Africa	120	33	87

Violence in Schools

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department is currently conducting any studies on violence in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: An independent committee of inquiry into discipline in schools, under the chairmanship of Lord Elton, is currently considering what action might be taken to secure an orderly atmosphere in schools. Problems of violence form a part of the committee's remit. It aims to report around the end of this year.

ENERGY

Nuclear Material Exports

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what quantities of nuclear material produced from uranium have been exported to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In the five-year period ending 31 March 1988 some 3,000 tonnes of uranium in the form of natural uranium hexafluoride has been sent to the USSR for enrichment. The material exported was the property of the United Kingdom generating boards and various overseas utilities. It is all returned as product (enriched uranium) or tails (depleted uranium) to either the United Kingdom, or, in the case of overseas customers, a destination of their choice. All the material is subject to international safeguards.

Berkeley Power Station

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the tonnage of fuel (a) loaded into and (b) withdrawn from, reactor 1 at Berkeley power station between 4 April and 17 July; and what was the average burn-up per tonne of irradiated fuel withdrawn at this time.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have asked the chairman of the CEGB to write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Coal and Electricity Industries (Privatisation)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will shelve plans to proceed with the privatisation of the coal and electricity industries until the environmental problems of sulphur and carbon dioxide emissions have been satisfactorily dealt with and legislation is in place which will avoid further environmental consequences such as the greenhouse effect.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. Privatisation will make no difference to the Government's commitment to improving the environment. Environmental controls apply to private sector companies as they do to those in the public sector and will be strongly enforced when the electricity industry is privatised.

Nuclear Materials (Transport)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what international safeguard arrangements exist to cover the shipping of spent nuclear fuel and other material from (a) Torness, (b) Hunterston, (c) Dounreay and (d) Chapelcross, to reprocessing plants.

Mr. Michael Spicer: All nuclear material from Torness, Hunterston and Dounreay is subject to Euratom safeguards and the terms of the United Kingdom—Euratom—IAEA safeguards agreement. Nuclear fuel irradiated in Chapelcross is not subject to safeguards.

Nuclear Reactor Safety

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what international safeguard arrangements exist to cover the nuclear reactors at Torness and spent nuclear fuel from the Torness reactors; and what facility attachments and particular safeguard provisions exist for Torness.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Nuclear material in the reactors at Torness, and spent nuclear fuel from the reactors, is subject to Euratom safeguards and the terms of the United Kingdom—Euratom—IAEA safeguards agreement. The particular safeguard provisions for Torness are not yet in force with Euratom. There is no facility attachment in place for Torness since the IAEA has not designated the facility for routine inspection.

Mining Industry (Statistics)

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many men are employed in the mining industry, categorised in terms of (a) British Coal employees and (b) other contract companies.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that British Coal employed 86,760 men on colliery books on 12 November 1988. The other information requested is not available.

Heysham II

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list, on a year-by-year basis, the construction costs of Heysham II nuclear power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the CEGB and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Power Stations (Costs)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the operating costs for nuclear and fossil fuelled power stations in England and Wales for 1983 to 1987 on a year-by-year basis and in the same form as set out in the Central Electricity Generating Board's statistical year book for 1982-83.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the CEGB and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

DEFENCE

Procurement

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of the expenditure incurred by the procurement division of his Department is split (a) within the United Kingdom and (b) abroad.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the statement on the Defence Estimates 1988, Cmnd. 344-1, volume 1, page 37 paragraph 402, and page 49 figure 11.

Army Scholarship Scheme

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what has been the total cost in grants and tuition paid in respect of (a) boys and (b) girls receiving both grants and tuition in each year from 1979 to the present in respect of the Army scholarship scheme for children aged 15 and 16 years;

(2) if he will list the schools in respect of which tuition fees were paid and from whose headteachers, endorsements of candidatures were received and the numbers of (a) boys and (b) girls from each school who have received awards under the Army scholarship scheme for pupils aged 15 and 16 years in each of the years from 1979 to the present.

Mr. Freeman: The information is not available in the form requested. While references are obtained from headteachers, eligibility for the award of any Army scholarship does not rest on the headteacher's endorsement alone. Applicants are required to pass a test set by the Army, an interview and obtain good grades in seven GCSEs (or equivalents) including mathematics, English language and either a science or modern language. Girls have been eligible to apply for an award only since 1986.

Currently there are 91 scholars, including 10 girls. Since September 1983 a flat rate grant of £750 a year has been made to parents of scholars, irrespective of the school which the scholar attends.

Educational Allowances

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total sum paid to (a) officers and (b) other ranks in education allowances in the year 1986-87; what were the numbers of individuals receiving allowances in categories (a) and (b) above; and what is the average grossed up value of an allowance in each category.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

	Total Sum Paid In Educational Allowances	Numbers of Individuals In Receipt of Allowances	Average Allowance Per Child
	£ million		£[1] per annum
(a) Officers	58·840	8,071	4,701
(b) Other Ranks	34·761	6,357	3,964

Note [1]: This is the average allowance paid per child and takes into account the higher allowance paid for third and subsequent children and is inclusive of grossing up for income tax.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the approximate cost of a holiday visit passages paid in respect of children of defence service personnel in receipt of education allowances, for the latest year available.

Mr. Freeman: The information available does not allow the costs of school children's visits to be identified separately from the costs of other types of travel.

Burghfield Arms Factory

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the explosion on 2 December at Burghfield arms factory; and if he will state its proximity to the materials held for the polaris warheads.

Mr. Sainsbury: A minor explosion occurred at AWE Burghfield in the early hours of 2 December during routine burning of surplus conventional explosive. There was no personal injury and no danger to the work force or public at any time and, to the best of our knowledge, no damage was caused outside the establishment. It is not our policy to disclose the nature or location of nuclear weapons; however no radioactive material was involved in this incident.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Social Fund

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will announce the total sum available for payments from the discretionary part of the social fund in 1989-90.

Mr. Needham: The total sum available for payments in Northern Ireland for 1989-90 will be the same as for 1988-89. The budget for community care grants will be £7·2 million and the gross budget for loans will be £13·9 million.

Emission Controls (Crown Immunity)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will be seeking Crown immunity from prosecution for the institutions which are the responsibility of his Department when the anticipated new controls on emissions come into operation.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 30 November 1988]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 29 November 1988 at column 178.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how he proposes to finance the additional funds required for those nurses who will be regraded after appeal.

Mr. Needham: The funds allocated to boards which include £32 million as the assessed cost of the clinical grading review, are intended to cover all pay costs arising in the current financial year, including any costs arising from successful appeals about pay or grading.

Housing Associations

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much new capital expenditure has been authorised to be undertaken by housing associations in Northern Ireland in each of August, September and October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

August	456,325
September	894,224
October	660,222

The total of approximately £2·01 million compares with £2·34 million in the same period last year.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums remained unspent in the budgeted expenditure for housing associations in Northern Ireland at 31 October.

Mr. Needham: Of the £31·47 million available for capital expenditure by housing associations in Northern Ireland in 1988-89, £12·7 million was unspent at 31 October.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Women's Issues

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish the minutes of the meetings of the ministerial group on women's issues, from May 1986 to date; and whether he will place a copy of the equal opportunities proofing system and proofing checklist in the library.

Mr. John Patten: It is not the practice to publish the internal record of meetings of Ministers. A press release was made following the last meeting of the group. On the second part of her question, I refer the hon. Member to the reply to her question on 7 November at columns 10-11.

Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis; and what was discussed.

Mr. Hurd: I last met the Commissioner on 20 October at a lunch at New Scotland yard organised by the community involvement branch. It was an informal occasion, during which we discussed the work of the branch, and a number of other policing issues.

Prisoners (Condoms)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from medical organisations on prisoners' access to condoms.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received one letter from the British Medical Association on this subject.

Homosexuality and Drugs (Prisons)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why he refused an application for a research project, proposed by the prison department's AIDS advisory committee, into homosexuality and drug use in prison.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Because we considered that the methodology proposed was unlikely to lead to reliable results.

AIDS (Prisons)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to assess the risks of contracting HIV in prisons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The risk in prison, as elsewhere, is determined by personal behaviour. This is stressed in the educational material available to prisoners. No research to assess the rate of HIV infection, or spread of infection, in the prison population is currently being undertaken by the Department; but prisoners will, where appropriate, be included in future approved research programmes based on anonymous blood testing. A central record is kept for statistical and monitoring purposes of prisoners identified as HIV antibody positive in the course of the careful screening undertaken by Medical Officers.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has considered the World Health Organisation's recommendation that consideration should be given to allow prisoners access to condoms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have, as the World Health Organisation recommended, considered whether condoms should be made available to prisoners, but have concluded that we would not be justified in changing our policy that prisoners should not be allowed access to condoms.

Prisoners (Health Education)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what health education material is in preparation for prisoners; and when this will be available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: An AIDS resource pack comprising a video film, a user's guide and a companion leaflet is in an advanced state of development. A second leaflet for more general use is also in preparation. It is expected that these will be ready for use very early next year to supplement the material which is already available.

Personal Freedom

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to require all organisations, which maintain the names of people on lists without their knowledge and circulate the lists for a fee to others for employment and other purposes, to register with his Department; if he will investigate the procedure and role of such organisations; and if he will take steps to seek to ban those which interfere with personal freedom.

Mr. Renton: The Data Protection Act 1984 provides that data users holding personal data processed automatically shall register the fact and, interalia, the purpose for which the data are held and to whom they may be disclosed. My right hon. Friend has no plans to extend the registration requirement to manual files.

Prison Officers (London Weighting)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the number of prison officers who have been transferred from London prisons to other prisons outside London who are still in receipt of London weighting under the mark-time proposals of the fresh start arrangements; how many are currently serving in Her Majesty's prison, Ashwell; and what is the total cost to public funds on an annual basis of this arrangement;

(2) what is the number of prison officers who have been transferred from London prisons to other prisons outside London who are not still receiving London weighting under the mark-time proposals because their previous prison in London had not accepted fresh start; how many are currently serving in Her Majesty's prison, Ashwell; and what would be the total cost to public funds of extending the London weighting to those currently denied it.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: To provide the information in the form requested would require disproportionate cost because of the large number of variable factors in individual cases and the calculations involved in mark-time pay. Between July 1987 and November 1988, 187 prison officers were transferred from London prisons to other prisons outside London and retained London weighting on a mark-time basis. Of these four are serving at Her Majesty's prison, Ashwell.

In the same period, 145 prison officers were transferred from London prisons to prisons outside London and did not receive London weighting under the mark-time rules because the London prison from which they were transferred had not moved to fresh start pay. Of these four are in post at Her Majesty's prison, Ashwell.

Derbyshire County Council

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much section 11 grant, under the Local Government Act 1966, Derbyshire county council received in each of the last five financial years for which figures are available; and on what schemes this money was spent.

Mr. John Patten: The amount of grant paid to Derbyshire county council under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966, in respect of each of the last five years is shown in the table. The grant represents 75 per cent. of the eligible expenditure by the authority on posts addressing the special needs of ethnic minorities of Commonwealth origin.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information he has to the effect of the Intoxicating Substances (Supply) Act 1985 on the supply of such substances to children; and what measures are being taken by his Department to inform shopkeepers as to the law and to educate the public as to the dangers of solvent abuse;

(2) what information he has as to the action being taken by the police to enforce the provisions of the Intoxicating Substances (Supply) Act 1985.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In 1987 there were 11 successful prosecutions under the Intoxicating Substances (Supply) Act 1985.

As regards publicity and prevention, the lead is taken by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health, to whom my hon. Friend has addressed a similar question.

New Prison (Merseyside)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to measure public reaction to any proposals for the construction of a new prison in the Field lane area of Merseyside.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Any proposal to build a prison in the Field lane area would be subject to the normal planning procedures which require local publicity and the assessment by the planning authority of local opinion.

Broadcasting

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, following his White Paper, "Broadcasting in the '90s," it is his intention to require applicants for Channel 3 franchises to make specific commitments about the production and broadcasting of religious programmes.

Mr. Renton: No.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates he has of the market for (a) video rental and (b) pre-recorded video tapes referred to in paragraph 2.4 of his White Paper, "Broadcasting in the '90s," Cm. 517.

Mr. Renton: According to a study on subscription television commissioned by the Home Office from Communications Studies and Planning International Limited, published in May 1987, a total of between £550 million and £600 million was spent on video software in 1986. Two thirds of the expenditure was on pre-recorded software, while the remainder was spent on blank cassettes. This is the equivalent of each household with a VCR buying or renting about one cassette a week. The study estimated that the market for pre-recorded VCR software would expand from £470 million in 1987 to £625 million in 1990. The equivalent estimates for expenditure on VCR rentals were £667 million in 1987 and £772 million in 1990.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with manufacturers about the development of technology for pay-per-view subscription referred to in paragraph 2.4 of his White Paper, "Broadcasting in the '90s," Cm. 517; and whether those manufacturers are British.

Mr. Renton: The subject of pay-per-view technology is one of a number of issues which has been discussed in the Government's day-to-day contact with the electronics industry. The choice of manufacturers for reception equipment is one for the broadcasters themselves to make.

A variety of subscription and pay-per-view payment methods are being developed in Europe and the United States. Some satellite television services are expected to be subscription based, and British Satellite Broadcasting plans to introduce a pay-per-view system.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has commissioned any research into the production costs of (a) news, (b) current affairs, (c) dramas, (d) documentaries, (e) children's programmes, (f) religious programmes and (g) educational programmes in (i) BBC, (ii) ITV, (iii) independent production and (iv) other countries.

Mr. Renton: The study of subscription television prepared for the Home Office by Booz Allen and Hamilton and published in May 1987 contains information about production costs. Such information is also available to the Home Office from other sources.

Television Licences

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of those owning a television pay for (a) a colour licence and (b) a black and white licence.

Mr. Renton: It is estimated that about 92 per cent. of television owners obtain a television licence. About 82 per cent. pay for a colour licence, and about 10 per cent. pay for a black and white licence.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been (a) detected and (b) prosecuted for not having a television licence in each of the last 10 years; and at what cost.

Mr. Renton: The available data which have been supplied by the national television licence records office are given in the following table. Corresponding information on costs is not available.

Detections and prosecutions for TV licence evasion in the United Kingdom

1978-79	73·8	55·4

1987-88	288·9	158·2

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what he estimates will be (a) the cost and (b) the staffing implications of transferring responsibility for the collection of the British Broadcasting Corporation licence fee on to the British Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Renton: There should be no increase in the cost of collecting licence revenue, and the BBC will clearly have a strong incentive to reduce costs so far as is practicable consistent with the maximisation of licence revenue. It is likely that the transfer of responsibility will save in the order of two central Government staff posts.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are employed in collecting the BBC licence fee.

Mr. Renton: About 1,300, excluding Post Office counter staff who issue television licences and sell television licence savings stamps as part of their general duties.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present administrative cost of collecting the BBC licence fee.

Mr. Renton: A total of £59·6 million for the year 1987-88.

Animal Procedures Committee (Report)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received the first annual report of the Animal Procedures Committee; and when he intends to lay copies of the report before Parliament.

Mr. Hurd: I have now laid before Parliament copies of the report, which is published today by Her Majesty's Stationery Office as House of Commons Paper 36.

This report reflects the significant contribution which the Animal Procedures Committee has made in the first year of operation of the Animal (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. I am sure that it will continue its work for the protection of animals used in experimental or other scientific procedures.

I particularly welcome the report's conclusion that "the emerging system of control will match the high expectations of Parliament and the public".

Pub Bombings

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in considering representations about the case of the four persons convicted of offences arising from the bombing of public houses in Guildford and Woolwich in 1974.

Mr. Hurd: In April I received a report from the Chief Constable of the Avon and Somerset police on the results of inquiries made into certain matters raised with me since my statement of 20 January 1987 at columns 735-38. Since then, and in particular during October and November, I have received further representations about the case, both from the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster, and from firms of solicitors acting for the four persons convicted, some of which purport to disclose new evidence. I have been asked to take these further matters into account in reaching my decision on whether to refer the case to the Court of Appeal, in the exercise of my power under section 17 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968. I have agreed to do so. My decision should obviously be based on the fullest available information. Further inquiries are now being carried out by the police into some of the new matters which have been raised and I intend to reach a decision in January.

THE ARTS

Tax

Mr. Soames: To ask the Minister for the Arts if there have been any items accepted in lieu of tax or allocated since he last made an announcement on the subject to the House.

Mr. Luce: Since my announcement on 12 July, at column 101, I am pleased to announce that two items have been accepted in lieu of tax; a flower painting by Jacob Marrel and a print by William Blake, Frontispiece to the Book of Ahania. The tax liability satisfied was £61,369 and £19,658, respectively. The Blake print will go to the Fitzwilliam museum but a decision over the allocation of the Marrel painting has not yet been taken.

SCOTLAND

YTS

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if there are enough training places available under YTS for 16 to 17-year-olds in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Yes. There were 13,000 unfilled YTS places in Scotland on 5 December 1988.

"Curriculum and Assessment"

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number of responses he has received to the document, "Curriculum and Assessment", indicating the source in each case; and if he will make such responses available through publication.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Over 1,000 responses were received from a wide range of sources. All the responses were available for public inspection at West Register house, Edinburgh, between 4 October and 5 December.

Special Schools

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many special schools in each region and division recorded no head teacher in the schools census of 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of education authority special schools and the numbers with no head teacher at September 1987 are as follows:

(1)	(2) Total	(3) Number without a head teacher
Borders	1	1
Central	11	3
Dumfries and Galloway	1	0
Fife	12	1
Grampian	19	0
Highland	7	1
Lothian	22	1
Strathclyde	118	37
Tayside	8	2

Argyll and Bute	4	1
Ayr	25	13
Dunbarton	16	5
Glasgow (City)	45	12
Renfrew	10	3

In some cases recorded in column (3) above the post of head teacher will have been vacant at the time of the census; in others there will be no such post because of small size or because oversight is provided by an associated mainstream school. Responsibility for determining the complement of head teachers and for filling vacancies rests with regional and islands authorities.

TVEI

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report those schools in each region and division which are currently involved in TVEI schemes.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The schools within each region and division of Strathclyde currently participating in TVEI are as follows:

Forestry

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had from landowners, foresters and individuals engaged in wood processing industries about the Government's forestry policy; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 5 December 1988]: In the past two months, my right hon. and learned Friend has received nine letters from organisations and individuals about various aspects of the Government's forestry policy, including the support arrangements and the prospects for forestry. He has taken the opportunity to emphasise the Government's commitment to the continuing expansion of forestry.

PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon and Learned Member for Richmond, Yorks

Q47. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister why and in what particular respects experience of the Home Office was a factor in the nomination of the right hon. and learned Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan) as a European Commissioner.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 1 December 1988, at column 345.

Barnsley

Q159. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Barnsley, Dorset.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 6 December.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 6 December.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 6 December.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 6 December.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 6 December.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 6 December.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 6 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with the Prime Minister of Iceland. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

President Gorbachev (Visit)

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will request President Gorbachev, during his forthcoming visit, to return to the national treasuries of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania the gold reserves deposited by those countries with the Bank of England for safe keeping when still independent, which national reserves were handed over to the country which had invaded them by the United Kingdom Government in 1969.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 5 December 1988]: The gold of the former central banks of Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia held in the Bank of England was not transferred to the USSR but its value was taken into account in the practical settlement of claims arising from the incorporation of these states into the USSR, under the Anglo-Soviet claims agreement of 5 January 1968. The proceeds of the subsequent sale of gold were used to meet the compensation claims of British property holders and investors whose assets had been seized or became worthless. The Anglo-Soviet claims agreement did not, of course, affect our continued non-recognition de jure of the forcible incorporation of the Baltic states into the USSR.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Grain

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost to the European Economic Community for export restitution and other costs of the export of grain for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Ryder: In the 1987 calendar year the European Community's expenditure on exports of whole and processed cereals other than rice, including food aid but excluding monetary compensatory amounts, was 3,673 million ecu (£2,642 million).

Hedgerows

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the total loss of hedgerows in each year since 1983.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 1 December to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) at columns 1859-60.

Export Refund System

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what European Economic Community revisions to the export refund system have become operative since 1 January; and what effect this has had in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ryder: A new integrated Community customs tariff known as the combined nomenclature and based upon the international standard harmonised system came into force on 1 January. At the same time use for customs' purposes of the Community single administrative document started.

The effect of these two changes was to require traders and official bodies to modify databases and systems based on customs tariff nomenclature and to provide and use data in a different format. While the changes applied to all international trade, food and agriculture were particularly affected since a number of nomenclature-based systems, including the export refund system, are utilised under the CAP.

Free Food Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the total cost of the European Economic Community free food scheme in the United Kingdom in terms of (a) the cost of foodstuffs, (b) the administration and distribution costs incurred by the voluntary sector and (c) any other costs.

Mr. Ryder: A total of £10·4 million was allocated to the United Kingdom to operate the free food scheme in 1988. The figure of 2½ per cent. has been set aside to cover distribution costs and to reimburse the administration costs of designated organisations. The remainder has been released or will have been made available by the end of the year to designated organisations in the form of butter and beef. Other costs such as packing and canning will be met by payment in kind arrangements.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will estimate the number of people receiving food stuffs under the European Economic Community free food scheme;

(2) if he will estimate the number of people eligible in the United Kingdom to receive foodstuffs under the free food scheme.

Mr. Ryder: The Government have estimated that about 6 million people in the United Kingdom are eligible to receive food under the scheme. The designated organisations are responsible for the distribution arrangements, and they estimated early this year that about 1½ million people would benefit.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much of each of the surplus European Economic Community food products is being made available for distribution in Britain as part of the free food scheme.

Mr. Ryder: In the United Kingdom the designated organisations have been authorised to withdraw 2,463 tonnes of butter and 1,772 tonnes of beef.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the criteria for eligibility to the European Economic Community free food scheme.

Mr. Ryder: The Community legislation enables food from intervention stocks to be distributed to the most deprived persons in the Community. The Government have defined such persons as those in receipt of income support or family credit, and those of no fixed abode or living in welfare hostels.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those voluntary organisations participating in the free food scheme.

Mr. Ryder: There are 127 organisations designated to operate the scheme in the United Kingdom. A list of the organisations was deposited in the Library of the House on 21 April 1988.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to in what respect the British scheme of free food distribution differs from that in other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Ryder: No detailed up-to-date information is available but according to information gathered in March 1988, the various member states intended to operate the scheme as shown in the attached table.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what information he has concerning the incidence of BSE in other European Economic Community countries or other countries with trade in animal production with Britain;

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that animal products entering the United Kingdom for human consumption do not originate from BSE infected animals.

Mr. Donald Thompson: BSE has not been reported in other member states of the European Community or any other country with which the United Kingdom trades.

Dairy Quotas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many United Kingdom dairy farmers who participated in the milk non-marketing scheme or the dairy herd conversion scheme subsequently made an application for quotas to his Department between 31 March 1984 and 31 July 1988.

Mr. Donald Thompson: For the vast majority of producers, the dairy produce quotas regulations provided for applications for quota to be made between 24 July and 28 August 1984. In England and Wales, well over 20,000 valid applications were received. It would be disproportionately expensive to estimate the number of these which were received from farmers who had participated in the non-marketing or dairy herd conversion schemes.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the use of bovine somatotropin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have received a considerable number of letters from individuals and organisations expressing concern about the current field tests of bovine somatotropin.

Food Hygiene

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he will take to increase public awareness of the importance of sound food hygiene and handling practices.

Mr. Ryder: My Department in collaboration with the Department of Health, the Health Education Authority, The Institution of Environmental Health Officers and the public health laboratory service, has been preparing a major nationwide public food hygiene education campaign to be launched early in 1989. We commissioned a consumer survey in January 1988 which demonstrated a general lack of awareness of elementary food hygiene precautions in the home. As a result of this survey we decided to test an education leaflet in a pilot launch at five locations (Shrewsbury, Hull, Taunton, Maidstone and the London Borough of Wandsworth) between July and October 1988. The results have now been evaluated and, together with the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, I shall be launching a nationwide campaign early next year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Young Share Fishermen

99. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will bring forward proposals to restore the payment of unemployment benefit to share fishermen between the ages of 16 and 18 years who are prevented from working by adverse weather or sea conditions.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to make special arrangements for this group.

Unemployment Benefit

98. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will strengthen the requirements for potential unemployment pay beneficiaries to seek work.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to the announcement by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in the debate on the Loyal Address on 24 November at column 245. We propose to introduce a requirement that those claiming unemployment benefits must take active steps to find work.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has regarding the proportion of unemployment benefit disqualification cases in which disqualification was imposed for the maximum period (a) when the maximum was six weeks, (b) when it was 13 weeks and (c) since it was increased to 26 weeks.

Mr. Scott: There is no information available on the proportion of cases in which the maximum unemployment benefit disqualification period was imposed when that maximum was six weeks.

A very limited survey undertaken after the change in October 1986 showed that a maximum period of disqualification—13 weeks—was imposed in about 75 per cent. of cases. A copy of this survey was placed in the Library on 4 March 1988.

The effect of the increase in the maximum period to 26 weeks in April 1988 is being monitored and results should be available next year. An early examination by the chief adjudication officer of a small sample of decisions indicates that the maximum period of disqualification is now imposed in about 50 per cent. of cases.

Students

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his policy towards the future provision of (a) free dental treatment, (b) free prescriptions, (c) free eye checks and (d) assistance with the community charge, for students in full-time education in receipt of loans under Her Majesty's Government's recent proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Scott: I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 3.27 of the White Paper "Top-up Loans for Students" (Cm. 520). People receiving full-time education under 19 will continue to be exempt from dental and prescription charges and entitled to free NHS sight tests. Others on a low income will be able to get free prescriptions and full or partial help with the cost of dental treatment and sight tests depending on their circumstances. Students who are shown in the community charge register as undertaking a full-time course of education will continue to be liable to pay only one fifth of the personal community charge for which they would otherwise be liable.

Family Credit and Housing Benefit

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will publish a table showing the cut-off points in net and gross terms for families with children claiming family credit and housing benefit based on average rent and rates for families with one, two and three children aged under 11 years, broken down into one and two parent families;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the cut-off points in net and gross terms for families with children claiming family credit for families with one, two and three children aged under 11 years.

Mr. Scott: The information is set out in the table.

Married couple, three children under 11	156	122·65	80	74·09	78	72·54

Notes: Average local authority rent and rate figures for 1988 are:
For one child family: rent £18·60 per week; rates £7·70 per week
For two child family: rent £19·90 per week; rates £8·20 per week

Housing Benefit

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the numbers receiving housing benefit in each local authority.

Mr. Scott: The closing date for submission of statistical returns by local authorities was 16 November 1988. Some returns are still awaited and those received to date are being validated. The information will be made available when checking of all local authority returns is complete.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to review the cut in housing benefit experienced by hospital patients after six weeks in hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The downrating of housing benefit after six weeks in hospital was introduced as part of the reforms in April to achieve common rules for the treatment of patients in the main social security benefits. The system ensures that, after downrating, all claimants will have sufficient income to meet their eligible housing costs over and above the basic income support level.

We have undertaken to continue monitoring the effects of the reforms.

Benefits

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the budget for publicity and associated costs to increase the take-up of benefits, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Scott: Total Social Security expenditure on publicity and associated costs for each year since 1979 is as follows:

Year	£ million
1979-80	1·9
1980-81	1·7
1981-82	1·6
1982-83	2·6
1983-84	2·5
1984-85	4·3
1985-86	4·5
1986-87	12·6
1987-88	12·4
1988-89	[1]12·8

Students (Benefits)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimated savings will be made by his Department by the proposed withdrawal of students' rights to income support, unemployment and housing benefits.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to annex E of the White Paper "Top-up Loans For Students" (Cm. 520) which estimates the saving at £65 million in the academic year 1990-91.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons, aged between the years of two and five, are in receipt of attendance allowance; and if he will provide figures for the number of claimants aged two, three, four and five for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested. The information which is available is in the table.

Attendance allowance

	Number
Estimated number of allowances in payment for children aged 2 to 5 years at 31 March 1987	19,800
Number of claims decided in the year to September 1988 for children aged
2 to 4 years	8,666
5 to 9 years	4,637

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average length of time from the lodging of an appeal against the refusal of attendance allowance to the appeal decision, for the years 1985 to 1988.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The available information, which relates to applications for review made where a claim has been disallowed, where a lower-rate rather than a higher-rate allowance has been awarded or where the claimant believes the attendance allowance board should issue a certificate of attendance needs for a longer period, is in the table.

Attendance allowance: Average processing times of applications for review of attendance allowance board decisions 1985-1988

Year	Average processing time (weeks)
1988	19·0
1987	18·5
1986	14·0
1985	13·0

Family Credit

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the average lapse of time between applications being made for family credit and the determination thereof.

Mr. Scott: Just under 23 working days in respect of all cases cleared during November. Of this, less than seven working days was for work within the family credit branch. The other 16 days were taken up by waiting for responses to inquiries.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many local offices of the Department of Social Security have no staff or officials trained to answer questions from applicants for family credit; and if he will make it his intention to ensure that there is at least one in each local office.

Mr. Scott: All local offices have staff trained to answer inquiries about social security benefits, including family credit.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the change in the real-terms value of the pensioners' Christmas bonus for each year since 1972.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 21 July at columns 839-40.

Income Support

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will give, on the same basis as the tax/benefit tables, the total income support of an employed married man with children aged four and six, in December 1987, whose income was (a) £70 per week, (b) £120 per week and (c) £140 per week.

(2) if he will state, on the same basis as the tax/benefit model tables, the total income support of an employed married man with children aged three, eight and eleven, in December 1987, whose income was (a) £70 per week, (b) £120 per week and (c) £140 per week.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to the April 1987 tax benefit model tables, copies of which are held in the Library.

Tax/Benefit Model Tables

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how soon he expects to publish tax/benefit model tables for 1988.

Mr. Scott: We expect to publish these tables shortly.

HEALTH

Civil Defence

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific progress has been made during the last three years by his Department in establishing methods for stockpiling medical supplies in the event of a nuclear war.

Mrs. Currie: We have reviewed peacetime storage arrangements to make greater use of direct supply systems, and introduced large regional distribution systems backed by more local satellite stores. New control systems are being introduced which would facilitate rapid exchange and borrowing between health authorities, the NHS and industry, where required. This is preferable to tying up resources in large contingency stocks for emergency use. Further, more detailed planning is still in progress, and guidance will be issued once that work is completed.

Health Authorities

Mr. Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the level of funding available to the North Western regional health authority.

Mr. Mellor: Health authorities summarised accounts show that gross revenue expenditure in the North Western regional health authority has increased from £383 million in 1978-79 to some £1,003 million in 1987-88, an increase of 162 per cent. in cash and 28 per cent. in real terms. The region has received further increases this year totalling over 9 per cent. in cash or 3 per cent. in real terms.

We shall be announcing allocations for 1989-90 shortly.

Community Care

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the proposed primary care authorities in the light of the Griffiths report on community care; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement regarding his Department's proposals to set up primary care authorities.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle) on 29 November at column 198.

Prescriptions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for the last three financial years (a) the number and value of prescriptions in each National Health Service region and express these figures on a per thousand of population basis and (b) the number and value of prescriptions by the source of the prescription in each National Health Service region.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested can be provided only for calendar years and is set out in the following table:

	Number of prescriptions (million)	of which: dispensed by dispensing doctors (million)	Total number of prescriptions per population	Net ingredient cost (NIC) (£ million)	of which: dispensed by dispensing doctors (£ million)	NIC per thousand population (£)

Note: These figures relate to prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and dispensing doctors within the family practitioner service but do not include items personally administered by prescribing doctors. The vast majority of prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacies are written by prescribing general medical practitioners but they also include a small number of prescriptions written by dentists, hospital doctors for outpatients, service doctors and doctors on board ship. Prescribing by hospital doctors (except as specified above) is not included as this information is not available centrally.

Nurses (Grading)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the percentages of nurses in each grade at the theatre department at North Tees general hospital; and what are the comparable surgical gradings at other similar establishments in the region.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to consider requesting the information from the health authorities concerned.

Private Companies

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what contractual constraints exist to prevent National Health Service financial officers who negotiate contracts with private companies from subsequently joining these firms;

(2) if he will make it his policy to prevent by contract Health Service employees from leaving the service and taking immediate employment with private concerns with whom they were previously negotiating; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: It is for health authorities locally to determine such aspects in individual contracts of employment. We have no current plans to alter that position.

Waiting Lists

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are currently on National Health Service waiting lists for general surgery (a) in the Crewe and Nantwich district health authority and (b) nationally.

Mr. Mellor: The latest figures show that, at 31 March 1988, there were 1,157 patients on the inpatient waiting list for general surgery in Crewe district health authority. The corresponding figure for England was 133,079.

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the in-patient waiting list figures in March for the Trent regional health authority; and what were the figures for the previous year and 1979.

Mr. Mellor: The information is given in the table.

In-patient waiting lists, Trent regional health authority

	Total of all cases
March 1979	72,864
March 1987	57,111
[1]March 1988	54,894

[1]on a comparable basis with previous statistics.

Cook-chill Catering

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of National Health Service establishments currently using cook-chill catering; and if he will name each of the hospitals concerned.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that information on those hospitals which provide cook-chill catering is not held centrally.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the total public sector National Health Service investment in cook-chill catering to date;

(2) what is the total private sector National Health Service investment in cook-chill catering to date.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that we do not hold this information centrally.

Nurses' Pay

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by how much nurses' pay has increased in real terms since 1979; and what was the comparable increase in the period from 1974 to 1979.

Mr. Mellor: The average pay of nurses and midwives has increased by 45 per cent. in real terms since 1979 compared with a fall of 21 per cent. between 1974 and 1979.

Cyclists and Motor Cyclists (Casualties)

Mr. David Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what number and proportion of admissions to casualty units in London are (a) cyclists and (b) motor cyclists.

Mrs. Currie: We do not hold this information centrally.

Unleaded Petrol (Vehicle Conversion)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has had any discussions for all district health authorities concerning the conversion of their vehicles to the use of lead-free petrol; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Departmental officials have had preliminary discussions with appropriate staff in the National Health Service.

Lead-free petrol offers benefits in terms of running costs, better health and a cleaner environment. We will shortly be inviting health authorities to follow the example already set by Mersey regional health authority and introduce a programme for progressively switching over to running on lead-free petrol. Steps are being taken to secure favourable terms for conversion and purchase from major manufacturers and distributors and we shall be issuing an information pack to all authorities early in the new year.

Committee on Safety of Medicines

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those medical journals which are scanned by the Committee on Safety of Medicines and by his Department for reports on adverse reactions to medicines.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 5 December 1988]: Officials of the Department monitor reports of adverse drug reactions in the published literature by regularly scanning over 200 medical and scientific journals as well as using secondary abstracting sources to monitor other international publications. Regular searches of published literature are also carried out for reports relating to specific drugs. The Department also receives reports of adverse reactions in international scientific journals from pharmaceutical companies, from overseas regulatory authorities and from the World Health Organisation.

A wide range of sources of published information is available to the Committee on Safety of Medicines. It is not possible to produce a definitive list.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines indicating (a) their professional background, (b) whether their appointments are full-time or part-time and (c) their remuneration in each case.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 28 November 1988, c. 149-50]: The entry for Professor M. J. S. Langman, BSc, MD, FRCP should read "—Professor of Medicine, University of Birmingham."

Midwives

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many midwives in the Mersey regional health authority have been graded as D, E, F, G, H or I; how many of these midwives have appealed against their grade; and if he will list the number of years experience of each midwife at each grade.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 5 December 1988]: The numbers of midwives in the Mersey regional health authority transferred to each new clinical grade are given in the table. We do not hold centrally information on the number of appeals and on the length of service of individual midwives.

Clinical grades of midwives in Mersey regional health authority

Grade	Number in each grade (whole time equivalents)
D	44
F	201
G	390
I	48

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information can be taken into account by the appeal machinery considering appeals for midwives in respect of their allocated grades other than shown on the assessment forms as submitted.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Appeals panels can take account of any information which they consider relevant.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to licence mobile cancer screening units; and if he will list those regulations which currently govern their operation.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 25 November 1988]: The Department has asked health authorities to establish a breast cancer screening programme. It is for health authorities to decide whether this service would be provided most effectively by static centres, mobile units or a combination of the two. We do not propose to distinguish between these two types of NHS unit by requiring mobile units to be specially licensed.

The statutory regulations which govern the operation of mobile screening units are:

Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974

The Ionising Radiation Regulations 1985 (SI 1985 No. 1333)

The Ionising Radiation (Protection of Persons Undergoing Medical Examination or Treatment) Regulations 1988 (SI 1988 No. 778)

The Department's NHS procurement directorate has also issued guidance notes for health authorities on equipment requirements for breast cancer screening which includes comprehensive guidance on mobile breast cancer screening units including the constructional requirements of the trailer and its equipment.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to combat the problems of solvent abuse among young people.

Mr. Mellor: We have taken a number of steps to make solvent-based products harder to obtain by young people for the purpose of misuse; to educate young people about the dangers of misuse; and to help parents and those who work with young people to respond to the problem. Recent initiatives taken by the Department include funding a series of training seminars for residential care workers; contributing to the issue of advice to retailers, and the production of a video for parents; and funding an information officer post at the National Children's bureau.

Hospital Buildings

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest information he has as to the average age of hospital buildings.

Mrs. Currie: We are now collecting information about the age of hospital buildings as a part of the Körner requirement. This information should be available to health authorities from May 1989.

Teenage Pregnancies

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department plans to introduce a campaign aimed at reducing unwanted teenage pregnancies.

Mrs. Currie: We are currently funding three local projects on family planning and pregnancy counselling specifically aimed at young people under 25 in three health districts. The projects began last year, are being centrally evaluated, and will continue until March next year. We hope to use the projects to identify principles of good practice which can be commended to the Health Service as a whole.

Nurses

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will give the latest estimates of the nurses who return to nursing each year;

(2) what schemes his Department is currently operating to encourage nurses to return to nursing.

Mr. Mellor: We estimate that in the last year about 7,200 nurses and midwives returned to practice in the NHS in England.

Employing authorities locally are best placed to judge the opportunity and need for return to nursing campaigns. At national level we have helped by part-funding the Department of Health/Nursing Times "Recruit and Retain" campaign which has covered good practice on return to nursing and by analysing the professional register to identify inactive nurses by place of residence so that properly targeted local campaigns can be run. Next year, we plan to produce publicity and other material for use locally and are currently conducting a survey to identify the most useful types of material.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those district health authorities and Scottish health authorities which charge for a refresher course for those nurses wishing to return to nursing and those authorities which run free courses.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect this information for England. This is a matter for individual health authorities.

Information for Scotland is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Eye Tests

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many eye tests were paid for by the National Health Service in England and Wales for each year since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: The number of sight tests has been as follows:

	Millions
1979	8·6
1980	8·8
1981	8·9
1982	9·2
1984	10·3
1985	10·8
1986	11·1
1987	11·7

Dental Checks

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dental checks were paid for by the National Health Service in England and Wales for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is set out in the table, by calendar year up to 1985 and by financial year thereafter.

General dental services England and Wales
Dental examinations

Year	Number
1979	26,025,290
1980	27,428,770
1981	27,881,370
1982	28,838,890
1983	29,336,490
1984	29,798,070
1985	30,120,720
1986-87	30,606,430
1987-88	30,651,820

Hospital Beds

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when it was decided to stop collecting available bed figures broken down by specialty.

Mrs. Currie: This decision was announced in April 1984 by health circular HC(84)10, which set out the agreement between Ministers and regional chairmen on the implementation of the first report of the steering group on Health Services information (Körner).

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when the available bed figures for 1987 will be published;

(2) if he will make it his practice in future to publish available bed figures within six months of their collection.

Mrs. Currie: We publish information about beds in the National Health Service as soon as thorough validation on returns from all authorities has been completed. The available figures for 1987-88 will be published during January.

EMPLOYMENT

Self-employed People

13. Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the United Kingdom are currently self-employed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: In June 1988, the latest date for which estimates are available, there were 2,985,000 self-employed people in the United Kingdom.

VAT

14. Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of new registrations for value added tax in 1987-88.

Mr. Cope: In 1987, the latest year for which figures have been published, the number of VAT-registered businesses in the United Kingdom increased by 45,000, or nearly 900 a week on average. The indications are that the rate of increase during 1988 has been faster.

Child Care Facilities

15. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to introduce child care facilities for participants in Government training schemes.

Mr. Nicholls: Assistance with child care costs of up to £50 per week per child is already available to help all lone parents participating in employment training, the new programme for unemployed adults.

Labour Statistics

16. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the increase in the numbers of those employed in service industries in the last five years.

Mr. Lee: Between June 1983 and June 1988, there was a net increase of 2,205,000 in employment in the service industries in Great Britain.

17. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current level of unemployment in the south-west of England.

Mr. Nicholls: In October 1988 seasonally adjusted unemployment in the south-west region was 123,100, a fall of 36,600 over the last 12 months.

19. Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current unemployment levels in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Fowler: In October 1988 the level of seasonally adjusted unemployment in the United Kingdom was 2,160,200, the lowest for more than seven years. Unemployment has now fallen by 973,000 since July 1986, the longest and largest sustained fall on record.

20. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current level of employment.

Mr. Fowler: Between March 1983 and June 1988 the work force in employment in Great Britain increased by 2,177,000 to 25,174,000, the highest level on record. Employment has now been on a rising trend for more than five years.

21. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current trend of unemployment in Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Lee: In October 1988, seasonally adjusted unemployment in the Yorkshire and Humberside region was 214,800, a fall of 41,400 over the last 12 months.

22. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the level of unemployment in the London region.

Mr. Lee: In October 1988, the level of seasonally adjusted unemployment in the London region was 267,100, a fall of 66,700 over the last 12 months. We know from the surveys carried out during the summer that there are also around 150,000 vacancies in London.

24. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people under the age of 21 years are currently unemployed in Eccles.

Mr. Lee: Unemployment figures are not available for the requested age group. However, in October 1988 the number of unemployed claimants aged under 20 in the Eccles parliamentary constituency was 335.

41. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many local employment offices have unemployment under 4 per cent.; and in which standard planning regions these offices are located.

Mr. Lee: The information is not available in the form requested. The smallest area for which unemployment rates are calculated are travel-to-work areas. In October 1988, 27 of these had rates of unemployment of less than 4 per cent., expressed as a percentage of employees in employment plus the unemployed (south-east 19 travel-to-work areas, East Anglia, four, north two, south-west one and east midlands one).

43. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current levels of employment in the United Kingdom and other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Lee: Increases in the level of employment in the United Kingdom compare most favourably with those in the European Community. Since 1983 our level of civilian employment has grown by well over 2 million. Between 1983 and 1987 the increase in employment in the United Kingdom was greater than that for any other European Community member and was in fact approximately equal to that in the rest of the Community combined. Comparisons of the percentage of working age population in employment show that the United Kingdom is well ahead of our major European partners and second only to Denmark in the whole Community.

52. Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current level of unemployment in the east midlands.

Mr. Lee: In October 1988 seasonally adjusted unemployment in the east midlands region was 134,800, a fall of 30,900 over the last 12 months.

54. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of long-term unemployed in June 1983 and September 1988.

Mr. Lee: Unemployment figures are analysed by duration quarterly. In October 1988 the number of unemployed claimants who had been unemployed for one year or more in the United Kingdom was 885,504, compared with 1,050,487 in July 1983, a fall of 64,983 over the period. This comparison is slightly affected by changes in the coverage of the count as well as seasonal influences.

55. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to revise the basis for collecting unemployment statistics.

Mr. Lee: No.

61. Mr. Kenneth Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current levels of unemployment in Lancashire.

Mr. Lee: In October 1988 the number of unemployed claimants in the county of Lancashire was 48,347, or 9 per cent. of employees in employment plus the unemployed.

73. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current levels of unemployment in the north of England.

Mr. Lee: In October 1988 seasonally adjusted unemployment in the northern region was 165,700, a fall of 25,000 over the last 12 months.

77. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of people currently in employment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: Between March 1983 and June 1988 the work force in employment in the United Kingdom increased by 2,178,000 to 25,739,000, the highest level on record. This rising trend has now continued for more than five years. The figures have been adjusted for the effects of seasonal variations. The work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed, Her Majesty's forces, and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

93. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by how many, and as a percentage of those registered as unemployed, the unemployment figures have fallen for Lincolnshire over the past three years.

Mr. Lee: In October 1988, the number of unemployed claimants in the county of Lincolnshire was 17,775 compared with 26,964 in October 1985, a fall of 9,189 or 34 per cent. over the three-year period. The figures are affected by the change in the compilation of the count in March 1986 to reduce over-recording and by the change in the coverage from September 1988 due to new benefit regulations for young people aged under 18.

95. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of (a) men and (b) women, over the age of 50 years who are at present unemployed in the Greater London area.

Mr. Lee: On 13 October 1988, there were 39,695 male and 14,178 female unemployed claimants, aged 50 or over, in Greater London.

ACAS

18. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he plans to meet the chairman of the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service before 31 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no such plans. Ministers of the Department meet the chairman of ACAS from time to time to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Training

23. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the employment training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: Employment training is making very good progress indeed and interest amongst long-term unemployed people remains high. By 25 November there were already 91,500 people training with training managers.

34. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if any individual trade unions have expressed an interest in co-operating with employment training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: A number of trade unions and many individual trade unionists are helping to make employment training successful. I welcome this positive co-operation in helping longer-term unemployed people back into work.

40. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the number of places taken up on the employment training programme.

Mr. Nicholls: At 25 November there were 91,500 people training on employment training.

79. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the general secretary of the trades union council to discuss adult training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier to my hon. Friends the Members for Sheffield, Hallam (Mr. Patnick) and for Thurrock (Mr. Janman).

89. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inquiries the Training

Commission has received from the public about the employment training scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Training Agency has received a large number of inquiries about employment training. There has been considerable interest in the programme by unemployed people, and by 25 November 91,500 people were already training with training managers.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

26. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the future of the loan guarantee scheme.

Mr. Cope: The loan guarantee scheme is currently due to run to 31 March 1989. An announcement about the future of the scheme will be made as soon as possible.

Industry (Productivity)

27. Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his Department's report on productivity in British industry up to July.

Mr. Cope: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Small Businesses

28. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the British Venture Capital Association to discuss investment in small businesses.

Mr. Cope: I met Mr. John Nash, chairman of the British Venture Capital Association, when I opened the British Venture Capital Association financial forum on 1 December.

32. Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his proposals to improve the skills of entrepreneurs running small businesses.

Mr. Cope: The White Paper "Employment for the 1990s" published by my right hon. Friend describes new arrangements for delivering training, including that for entrepreneurs, and for the small firms service. This will lead to closer co-ordination of counselling and training for small firms. They are closely related activities and both will benefit.

38. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the new registrations for value added tax by small businesses in 1980 and 1987.

Mr. Cope: The figures for numbers of VAT-registered businesses, new registrations and deregistrations are as follows:

Business registrations, deregistrations and stocks in the United Kingdom: 1980-87

Thousand

	1980
Stock at start of year	1,289
Registrations	158
Deregistrations	142
Net change	16
Stock at end of year	1,305

Note: The pattern of registrations and deregistrations may have been affected by disturbances in the regular processing of register amendments because of industrial action in 1979.

51. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many small firms were registered for value added tax on 31 December 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: It is estimated that approximately 1,513,000 businesses were registered for VAT on 31 December 1987, and that some 96 per cent. of these firms are small.

91. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the director-general of the Institute of Directors to discuss the development of small businesses.

Mr. Cope: Both my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I meet the director-general of the Institute of Directors frequently.

Older Workers

29. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to encourage employers to recruit older workers into jobs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend and I have emphasised through public media the need for employers to recognise fully the potential contribution of older workers, particularly in view of the declining numbers of young people, and we will continue to do so. Jobcentres, where appropriate, raise with employers the need for age restrictions in vacancies they notify. We will keep under review how best to put the message across.

Enterprise Agencies

30. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many enterprise agencies are currently operating in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: We know of 427 local enterprise agencies operating in the United Kingdom. Of these, 387 are approved under provisions of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 (previously under provisions of the Finance Act 1982), which allow business sector sponsors tax relief on their contributions to such bodies.

Long-term Unemployment (London)

31. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received following the publication of his Department's survey on long-term unemployed in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I have not received any representations following the publication of the surveys of vacancies and longer-term unemployed people in London. The surveys reveal that although there are nearly 300,000 people unemployed in the capital there are also 150,000 vacancies and there is scope for a substantial reduction in unemployment.

At least a third of the vacancies on offer require no special qualifications or experience. But in any case many of London's longer-term unemployed have academic or vocational qualifications, including nearly one in 10 who have degrees. Many of them also have experience in management or skilled jobs. They therefore already have the background which employers are seeking.

A quarter of the longer-term unemployed people interviewed had not looked for work in the last week. Furthermore, many of those who said they were actively looking for a job did not do so using the methods which employers use to fill vacancies.

Some unemployed people in London clearly need the opportunity to retrain in up-to-date skills, and we now have employment training for them. But others need to look more intensively for the available jobs for which they are already well suited. The surveys also underline the importance of the measures the Government are taking to ensure that benefit is drawn only by those who are genuinely unemployed.

Trade Union Officials

33. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of hours taken off work by trade union officials for union business in 1987-88.

Mr. Nicholls: Statistics on this subject are not collected. These matters are determined between employers and union officials within the legal framework provided.

Portsmouth

35. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to visit Portsmouth in the near future.

Mr. Fowler: I have no plans to visit Portsmouth in the immediate future.

Young People (Working Hours)

36. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department has conducted research into the possible effects on the physical and mental health of 16-year-olds of working hours considerably in excess of 48 per week without properly regulated rest periods.

Mr. Nicholls: The Department has not conducted any such research as there is no medical evidence to suggest that young people are less capable of working extended hours than adults.

Tourism (Far East and Japan)

37. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the Government's proposals to encourage visitors to the United Kingdom from the far east and Japan.

Mr. Lee: The far east and Japan are increasingly important tourism markets, and the British Tourist Authority has developed a number of marketing initiatives specifically to increase visitor numbers from these areas. There were some 320,000 visitors to the United Kingdom from the region in the first six months of 1988, an increase of 24 per cent. over the same period in 1987.

Self-employment (Report)

39. Mr. Richard Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received following the publication of the Training Commission's report on the self-employed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Women

42. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he takes to ensure that current Government policies will enable women in sufficient numbers to join the work force in the next decade.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has taken, and will continue to take, steps to enable women to join the work force through deregulatory measures which free women to compete equally with men for jobs; and positive action to help women obtain the necessary training for employment.

Nearly 1·5 million more women joined the labour force in the five years to March 1988.

In addition, all Government policies are now equal opportunity-proofed so that their effect on women can be assessed. My own Department has equal opportunity-proofed new policies and programmes since 1985.

87. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received on the increase of employment of women following the publication of the Training Commission report 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government place great importance on the contribution that women can make to meeting skill needs in the Labour market. In developing its training programmes the Government has listened carefully to the advice it has received from numerous organisations with an interest in the economic development of women.

Disabled People

44. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of disabled people of working age are employed; and what action he is taking to increase job opportunities for disabled people.

Mr. Lee: The latest information relating to disability and employment is that provided by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in the recently published report on the financial circumstances of disabled adults living in private households, based on a survey in 1985. The survey estimated that 31 per cent. of all people of working age, who met the definition of disability used in that survey, were in employment. However, the survey information published to date does not make it possible to establish the proportion of those not in employment who would have been available for work.

For answer to the second part of the question I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe).

59. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his proposals to further improve the employment opportunities for the disabled.

Mr. Lee: My Department maintains a comprehensive network of services to help people with disabilities find and retain jobs through advice, assessment, rehabilitation and training; and in the case of people with severe disabilities, support in the form of sheltered employment. My officers are continuing to give all possible help through the application of these services and are doing so against a background of increasing employment opportunities. The range of services and help supported by my Department are the subject of an internal review, set up in March, work on which is now well advanced.

Small Firms (Report)

45. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations has he received following the publication of the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General on the Department of Employment and Training Commission report on small firms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I am not aware of any representations following the representations following the report. The Public Accounts Committee took evidence on it on 14 November.

Job Clubs

46. Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the progress of job clubs.

Mr. Lee: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Martin) on Wednesday 30 November, at column 274.

British Tourist Board (Annual Report)

47. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received in response to the publication of the 1987 British Tourist Board's annual report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend has not received any representations in response to the British Tourist Authority's annual report for 1987-88.

Tourism

48. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's proportion of the world tourist market.

Mr. Lee: It is provisionally estimated that in 1987 receipts from international tourism in the United Kingdom accounted for about 7 per cent. of the world total.

62. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has taken steps to assess the efficiency of the operation of the section 4 financial assistance for tourist projects of the Development of Tourism Act 1969; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The efficiency and effectivemess of the section 4 scheme is being examined as part of the review of tourism policy announced by my right hon. Friend on 18 July.

64. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the contribution of overseas tourists to invisible earnings in 1987.

Mr. Lee: Overseas tourists contributed £6·2 billion (8 per cent.) to total invisible earnings of £80 billion in 1987.

80. Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many tourists visited the United Kingdom in 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Overseas residents made an estimated 15·4 million visits to the United Kingdom in 1987.

School Leavers (Statistics)

49. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many summer 1988 school leavers have yet to find either employment or a place on the YTS.

Mr. Cope: This information is not available.

Textile Operatives (Skill Levels)

50. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress he is making in improving the level of skill of textile operatives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Textile employers have the responsibility for determining and meeting the skill and training needs of operatives in their industry. The training agency has a close working relationship with the textile industry training organisations and is supporting projects run by them to develop standards of competence and to improve the level of skill of textile operatives. It is also currently funding over 900 YTS places in textile manufacturing.

I hope that employers will seize the opportunity which the Government's employment training programme affords them to improve recruitment and training in the industry.

Training Commission.

53. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his plans for the Training Commission.

Mr. Cope: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made to the House yesterday in which he announced the publication of the White Paper "Employment for the 1990s"; and to the Employment Bill.

Skill Shortages

56. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement about proposals to deal with skill shortages.

Mr. Cope: I refer my hon. Friend to the chapter on training in the White Paper "Employment in the 1990s," published by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State yesterday.

TVEI

57. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the technical and vocational education initiative.

Mr. Cope: All education authorities in Great Britain are now participating in the technical and vocation initiative and 48 of them have begun to extend the initiative to all their secondary schools and colleges. Students in some 1,400 schools and colleges are benefiting from the enriched curriculum provided by TVEI, and the education of virtually all 14 to 18-year-olds in Great Britain will become more relevant to working life as the extension programme develops within the overall framework of the Government's education policies.

Dock Labour Scheme

58. Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the future of the national dock labour scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government are fully aware of views expressed about the drawbacks of the scheme. However, as was made clear in the previous parliamentary Session there are no current plans to change its operation.

Health and Safety Executive

60. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide additional resources for the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: Yes. The gross supply provision for 1988-89 is £109 million and the previously planned provision for 1989-90 is £112 million. This will now be increased following the outcome of PES discussions, and consideration is being given as to the amount.

YTS

63. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the progress of two-year YTS.

Mr. Cope: At the end of October 1988 there were 435,200 young people training on YTS and, since the launch of YTS in 1983, 2 million young people have joined the scheme.

66. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to improve the level of safety for YTS trainees; and if he will make a statement.

74. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to improve the level of safety for YTS trainees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Health and safety remain of paramount importance in YTS. YTS is fully covered by health and safety legislation. There is a contractual requirement on all managing agents to comply with the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act both in work placements and off-the-job training. In addition, positive commitment to health and safety is one of 10 criteria a training organisation now has to satisfy before achieving approved training organisation status.

We have in hand improved safety training packages both for young people and trainers.

75. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 and 17-year-olds have accepted training places in YTS.

Mr. Cope: At the end of October 1988 YTS records show 435,000 young people in training on YTS. A total of 252,000 young people entered YTS for the first time between 1 April 1988 and 31 October 1988—the majority of these entrants were 16 and 17-year-olds.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report figures to show the categories of training and numbers of trainees on each, undertaken by females on YTS schemes (a) nationally and (b) in Durham, North-West constituency.

Mr. Cope: At the end of October 1988 there were 169,500 females in training on YTS nationally. The occupational breakdown of these trainees is shown in the following table.

Information is not available for trainees in Durham, North-West constituency. However information on the numbers of females in training by training occupation for the Training Agency Durham area is available, but not immediately to hand. I will write to the hon. Member shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Occupational breakdown of females on YTS schemes, 31 October 1988

Occupations	Number of females in training
Administrative and clerical occupations	56,500
Creative and educational and recreational service occupations	3,700
Health, community and personal service occupations	44,600
Selling and storage occupations	27,900
Scientific occupations	700
Catering and food preparation and processing occupations	8,400
Agricultural and related occupations	5,100
Fishing occupations	[1]
Transport operating occupations	500
Construction and civil engineering occupations	1,600
Mining, oil extraction and quarrying occupations	[1]
Electrical and electronic engineering occupations	700
Mechanical engineering and metal production and processing occupations	1,400
Motor vehicle repair and maintenance occupations	800
Non-metal processing occupations	900
Printing occupations	700
Clothing and textiles manufacturing occupations	10,200
Security service occupations	[1]
Others	5,700
TOTAL	169,500

[1] Less than 50 trainees.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the vacancy factor on YTS schemes (a) nationally, (b) in the northern region and (c) in the Durham, North-West constituency.

Mr. Cope: At 31 October there were around 120,000 YTS places unfilled nationally, about 7,000 in the northern region and 395 in the local authority districts of Derwentside and Wear valley. It is not possible to provide separate figures for the constituency of north-west Durham.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number and proportion of YTS trainees who are of black or Asian origin.

Mr. Cope: Of the 396,100 young people in training on YTS at 31 March 1988, the latest available date, the number of young people who identified themselves as of black or Asian origin was 10,966 (2·8 per cent.). Number and participant rates for ethnic minority trainees on employment training is not yet available.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number and proportion of YTS trainees who are female.

Mr. Cope: Of the 435,200 young people in training on YTS at 31 October, 169,500 (39 per cent.) were female.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many and what percentage of YTS participants in (a) the northern region, (b) Durham, North-West constituency and (c) nationally moved into full-time employment at the conclusion of their training for each of the last available five years.

Mr. Cope: The information is not available in the form requested. Results for leavers from the northern region, the county of Durham and Great Britain, where available, are shown in the attached table. A substantial number of the remainder go into full-time education or training (16 per cent. in the northern region 1987-88).

EC (Labour Statistics)

65. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet his European Economic Community counterparts to discuss the levels of unemployment in the Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The next meeting of the Council of Employment Ministers will be on 16 December. The main agenda items are in the area of health and safety at work. We will, of course, be taking every opportunity to raise employment issues and the contribution that the single market can make to employment growth.

Training Opportunities

67. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department will undertake a survey of the training opportunities for those who enter employment at the age of 16 years.

96. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department will undertake a survey of the training opportunities for those who enter employment at the age of 16 years.

Mr. Cope: This Department already collects information from a variety of sources on the training opportunities for young people who enter employment at 16. The principal sources at national level are the surveys undertaken through the youth cohort study and specifically commissioned research into vocational training standards in particular occupations.

The best local source of information is from the local authority careers service.

Apprenticeships

68. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to increase the number of apprenticeships; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: It is for employers primarily to ensure the level of apprenticeship training that their industry needs. The Government encourage them to adopt cost-effective practices, in particular training to standards instead of wasteful timeserving, and also make a substantial contribution to support apprenticeship training through YTS.

The extension of YTS to a two-year scheme has increased the opportunities for all 16 and 17-year-old school leavers to benefit from the structured training and work experience previously only available to those undertaking formal apprenticeships.

European Social Fund

69. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements his Department is making for applications to the European social fund as part of the reformed European structural funds; and what action he proposes to take in regard to consultations with local authorities in drawing up the plans to be submitted to Brussels by 30 June 1989.

Mr. Cope: The European Commission is currently consulting member states about how best to implement the objectives of the reformed structural funds, including the European social fund. In the light of these consultations my Department is considering the arrangements which will need to be made and guidance will be issued as soon as possible to all the parties concerned, including local authorities.

Women (Technical Training Courses)

70. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any proposals to increase the number of women school leavers who enter technical training courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The Government give priority to ensuring that school-leavers have equal opportunities to enter technician training or other training courses in Technical or Information technology subjects. The training agency policies reflect this, including YTS special women-only courses, reserved place schemes, Local action plans and new initial training arrangements to help young women to enter training which is unconventional to their gender.

The technical and vocational education initiative which is not being extended across all education authorities will also enable girls aged 14 to 18 to experience technology, and encourage them to obtain skills and qualifications of more direct relevance to working life, while still at school or college.

Short-stay and Tourist Breaks

71. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to encourage English cities to promote short-stay and tourist breaks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: As part of the Government's action for cities campaign, my Department is supporting the English Tourist Board's inner city initiative, whose aim is to encourage the development of inner-city tourism potential. The board has also supported the great English city breaks promotion, which has so far led to the sale of 75,700 bed-nights in the 14 cities involved.

Strikes (Lost Days)

72. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many work days were lost through strikes in October 1978 and October 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The number of working days lost through stoppages of work due to industrial disputes in October 1978 was 1,857,000. The most recently available figure relates to September 1988, for which it is provisionally estimated that 1,210,000 working days were lost; the October 1988 figure will be published on Thursday 15 December in the labour market statistics press notice.

Tourism and Hospitality Projects

76. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current capital investment in new tourism and hospitality projects.

Mr. Lee: The English Tourist Board's tourism investment report shows total investment in construction projects with a capital value of over £500,000 for the period January to June 1988 amounted to £1,984 million. This represents an increase of 60 per cent. over the same period in 1987.

Manufacturing (North-West)

78. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in 1979 in manufacturing industry in the north west; and what is the comparable figure for the latest date available.

Mr. Lee: In September 1979 there were 970,000 employees in employment in manufacturing industry in the north-west region. In September 1988 the latest date for which regional figures are available, there were 601,000.

Job Vacancies (London)

81. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current number of job vacancies in the Greater London area.

Mr. Lee: In October 1988 the number of unfilled vacancies registered at jobcentres in the Greater London region, seasonally adjusted, was 29,000. This figure does not include all vacancies in the economy. A survey conducted in June 1988 showed that there were around 150,000 vacancies in total in Greater London, around four and a half times the level of vacancies recorded at the jobcentres at that time.

Redundancy Fund

82. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to enable employees of an insolvent business to obtain payments from the redundancy fund without first obtaining a certificate from the receiver or liquidator; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has it in mind to amend the provisions so as to clarify the circumstances in which the Department may pay an employee direct without being obliged to seek first a statement of the amount due from the relevant officer. The proposal will be included in the forthcoming Employment Bill.

Restart Interviews

83. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information has been sought by Peat Marwick McClintock, as advisers to the Department of Environment on housing action trusts in Lambeth, about facts disclosed in job restart interviews.

Mr. Lee: Peat Marwick McClintock sought general statistical information from the employment service about unemployed people living in proposed housing action trust areas. No individual details disclosed at restart interviews have been retained by the consultants.

92. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been interviewed for the restart scheme at the latest available date.

Mr. Lee: Between 1 July 1986 and 28 October 1988, 4,814,000 restart interviews have taken place.

Youth Training Allowance

84. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will consider increasing the youth training allowance.

Mr. Cope: The weekly allowance for first-year YTS trainees was increased to £29·50 in July 1988. There are no plans at present to further increase YTS allowances.

Tourism (Review)

85. Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress he has made on his tourism review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The review team has seen a wide range of people in the tourism industry and received many written representations. I expect to receive its report at the end of the year.

National Community Service

86. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce a programme of national community service.

Mr. Cope: We have no plans to introduce a programme of national community service. Community benefit is taken into account, where appropriate, in the choice of training projects under employment training.

Training Commission

88. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met the chairman of the Training Commission; and what subjects they discussed.

Mr. Nicholls: Ministers of this Department meet the chairman regularly to discuss the performance of the Training Agency's (formerly Training Commission) functions.

Regional Cost of Living (Survey)

90. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has received any representations following the publication of the Reward group's September survey on cost of living in the regions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend has received no representations.

Disabled Workers

94. Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he intends to take to improve the job opportunities for registered disabled workers, following the recent report of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Mr. Lee: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe).

The recently published information in the report by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, on the financial circumstances of disabled adults living in private households, does not provide sufficiently precise information about the employment needs of people with disabilities. My Department has recently commissioned a survey to provide such information, the results of which will be available in the second half of next year.

Mr. Martin Davies (Compensation Claim)

97. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will review the case of Mr. Martin Davies, of 14 March way, Coventry, and his claims for compensation against the Training Commission, then the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Lee: No. A full investigation into Mr. Davies's case was held by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration in 1980. I am not aware of any developments since then which would warrant a further review of Mr. Davies's claims.

Youth Statistics

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number and proportion of 16 and 17-year-olds in (a) northern region and (b) Durham, North-West constituency who are currently (i) in full-time employment, (ii) on recognised training schemes and (iii) unemployed.

Mr. Cope: The number of young people in training on YTS in the northern region on 31 October, the latest available date, was 33,200 and in Derwentside and Wear valley (the nearest approximation to north-west Durham constituency) 952. Comparable information at that date for 16 and 17-year-olds in full-time employment is not available.

There are now hardly any under 18-year-olds recorded as unemployed.

Industry-linked Schemes

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the numbers of school students currently participating in school industry-linked compact schemes.

Mr. Cope: My Department is currently assisting partnerships of employers and education authorities in 30 inner-city areas to develop plans to establish compacts in 1989. Applications for operational funding are due to be submitted early in the new year. Until then it will not be possible to provide any estimate of the numbers of young people who will be participating.

Household Income

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average weekly household income for (a) the United Kingdom as a whole, (b) the northern region and (c) Durham, North-West constituency for each of the last available five years.

Mr. Lee: Information on average weekly household income is available from the family expenditure survey, but estimates are not available below regional level. Also, because of the relatively small sample size, estimates for some regions, including the northern region, are based on two years' data.

The figures for 1984-85 and 1985-86 are as follows:

Gross normal average weekly household income

	1984-85 £	1985-86 £
United Kingdom	207·06	225·37
Northern Region	170·78	187·72

Because of the introduction of the housing benefit scheme in November 1982, figures for earlier years are not available on a comparable basis.

West Midlands

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current levels of unemployment in the west midlands.

Mr. Lee: In October 1988 seasonally adjusted unemployment in the west midlands region was 212,200, a fall of 61,400 over the last 12 months.

Training Programme

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the estimated number of people who have been transferred from the community programme to the employment training programme in (a) Great Britain, (b) Scotland, (c) the Lothian region and (d) Edinburgh.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 5 December]: No community programme participants have been transferred to employment training. However, most community programme participants are eligible to join employment training and many have chosen to take up the worthwhile training opportunities that are available.

Young People (Derbyshire)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people in Derbyshire are currently employed, unemployed and on YTS schemes.

Mr. Cope: The number of young people in training on YTS in Derbyshire on 2 December 1988, the latest available date, was 8,280. Comparable information at that date for the number of young people in full-time employment is not available.

With the guarantee of the offer of a YTS place to all 16 and 17-year-olds who apply for one and who are not in full-time education or employment, there are now hardly any under 18-year-olds recorded as unemployed.

ENVIRONMENT

Charitable Housing Associations

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has consulted the Charity Commission about the vires of charitable housing associations entering into mixed funding schemes and taking over council housing under the provisions of the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Trippier: My Department is in regular contact with the Charity Commission. The precise form in which the objects of charitable housing associations are expressed varies, and the compatibility of any particular proposed action with those objects will depend on all the circumstances of the case.

Council Houses (Devon)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much cash received by district councils from the sale of council housing is at present frozen (a) in total and (b) within each district council of Devon.

Mr. Trippier: Under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, a local authority may in any year use 20 per cent. of its accumulated and in-year receipts from the sale of council houses for prescribed expenditure as defined by schedule 12 to the Act and regulations made under it. It may also at its discretion use receipts to redeem debt or to finance expenditure which is not prescribed expenditure but which is properly chargeable to capital account.

Disabled People

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how much has been allocated by the Housing Corporation to individual Merseyside housing associations for adaptations to properties tenanted by disabled people; if he will list the associations' bids; and what were the comparable figures for 1987-88;

(2) how much the Housing Corporation has allocated throughout the United Kingdom for adaptations for the disabled; and what were the comparable figures for 1987-88.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not held by the Department. The Housing Corporation is responsible for allocating its capital programme for grants and loans to individual housing associations and types of scheme within the broad framework agreed annually with Ministers. I have therefore asked the chairman of the corporation to provide the information requested to the hon. Member direct.

House of Commons (Lighting)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what level of illumination was recorded from the pre-1941 lighting in the Chamber of the House; and what are the current levels.

Mr. Chope: I have no information pre-1941.

For details of the current levels I refer the hon. Member to the answer to his question of 1 December at column 362.

Mortgages

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the effects on PRC house reinstatements of the move to disallow for tax relief interest payments on mortgages required for loans to carry out reinstatements.

Mr. Trippier: We have received very few representations urging the removal of mortgage tax relief on loans where designated PRC houses are being reinstated. Decisions on changes to the tax system are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Housing Subsidies

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total cost to the Treasury of housing subsidies to local authorities in each of the last nine years.

Mr. Trippier: The annual cost of housing subsidies from 1979-80 onwards can be found in successive White Papers beginning with "The Government's Expenditure Plans, 1985-86 to 1987-88".

Housing Co-operatives (Review)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how far the review of housing co-operatives has progressed; whether in this review, he is taking special notice of the needs of ethnic minorities; and whether he will be initiating legislation to give recognition to co-operative tenure.

Mr. Trippier: The co-ops review is making good progress. Its remit is to look at all aspects of co-op promotion and support, and it is currently addressing the many issues raised in the written responses received from co-ops and other interested parties, including those mentioned by the hon. Member.

English House Conditions Survey

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the reasons for the delay in the publication of the 1986 English house conditions survey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The report was produced as soon as the analysis was complete.

Vacant Council Houses

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if his figure for national council house vacancies included the number of houses vacant due to major repairs and modernisation;

(2) how he calculates the length of time council house vacancies exist; and how average figures for this are calculated.

Mr. Trippier: Local authorities report the number of council-owned dwellings empty at 1 April in their annual housing investment programme returns. They also provide a breakdown of this total according to the length of time that the dwellings have been empty (six months or less, over six months up to one year, over one year up to two years, and over two years) and the reasons why, including the number which are awaiting or undergoing major works of repair or modernisation.

The Department is currently undertaking a more detailed survey of empty local authority dwellings at 1 October 1988, which will also include information about the types of dwellings which are empty, and the average time dwellings let between 1 April and 30 September 1988 were empty.

Council of Environment Ministers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions he has personally attended the European Economic Community Council of Environment Ministers.

Mr. Ridley: I have delegated the leadership of the United Kingdom delegation to this Council to the Minister responsible for the environment, currently my noble Friend the Minister for Housing, Environment and Countryside and previously my noble Friend the Minister for the Environment, Countryside and Water, and the Minister for the Environment, Countryside and Planning. They have all performed with outstanding success.

Planning Application, Torquay

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether English Heritage has been informed of the planning application for housing development at Steps Cross Field, Torquay (SX9167).

Mr. Chope: Yes. This is not a matter before the Secretary of State but I understand that Devon county council notified English Heritage of this application.

VAT

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made as to the likely effect on (a) his Department's capital building programme and (b) the rent the Department will pay under occupational leases, of implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on value added tax on non domestic buildings.

Mr. Ridley: Implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on VAT will have no effect on my Department's capital building programme, since compensating adjustments have been made to the relevant expenditure provisions. At this stage, before landlords have decided whether to exercise their option to tax rents, it is not possible to offer meaningful estimates of the effects of the judgment on rental costs.

Rating Reform

Mr. Allen Mckay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to bring in regulations to provide for his Department or any other Government Department to deliver to each household an estimate of the amount of poll tax to be paid by that household.

Mr. Gummer: No. But there will of course be regulations to enable the charging authority to provide each person liable to pay the community charge with details of the amount due and the payment arrangements.

Calderdale (Homelessness)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he intends to take to avoid further homelessness in Calderdale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 1 December 1988]: A review of legislation relating to the subject of homelessness is under way. It is not possible to say when the review will be complete, but efforts are being made to bring it to a speedy conclusion. The Secretary of State has no plans to make a statement at present.

Urban Programme

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment under what circumstances a local authority withholds any moneys approved by him under the urban programme; and what action he will take to ensure that moneys approved by him under the urban programme are paid within a reasonable period.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 28 November 1988]: Urban programme grant from my Department reimburses a local authority for expenditure it has incurred on approved urban programme projects. It is therefore the authority's decision whether to fund a new urban programme project, once it has been approved by my Department. I would normally expect a local authority to continue to pay urban programme moneys for an ongoing approved project provided it was satisfied that the moneys are being properly spent.

Right to Buy

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the number of appeals against right-to-buy valuations made in each London borough during the current financial year, indicating the numbers upheld by the district valuer.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 5 December 1988]: The latest available information (at 1 December 1988) is as follows:

	Appeals made to the district valuer	Valuations provided to date by the district valuer	Original valuations upheld

Note: The figures for Lewisham include those for Bromley.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is to happen to sewage agency agreements between local authorities and present water authorities following privatisation of the water industry.

Mr. Moynihan: Paragraph 15 of schedule 23 to the Water Bill provides that existing sewerage agency agreements between water authorities and local authorities will continue to have effect after the privatisation of the water authorities. The agreements will be terminable by either party giving reasonable notice to the other. However, sewerage undertakers will not be able to give notice which expires before 1 April 1992. If agencies are terminated then local authority staff engaged on the sewerage work will be protected by the termination provisions in existing agreements.

CFCs

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to change the arrangements for recovering CFCs from scrap refrigeration equipment: and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Officials of the Department of the Environment and of the Department of Trade and Industry are discussing with representatives of the refrigeration and rigid foam industries and of the CFC manufacturers possibilities for recovery of CFCs from scrap refrigeration equipment and their subsequent recycling or destruction with a view to developing advice on the matter. There are at present a number of economic, technical and logistical problems to overcome.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 7 December 1988

DEFENCE

United States Chemical Munitions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what United States chemical munitions or components of chemical munitions are (a) stored, (b) transported or (c) deployed within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: None.

Argentina

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United Kingdom defence contracts have been concluded with Argentina since June 1982; and when export sales organisations of his Department resumed their efforts to promote the sale of military equipment to Argentina.

Mr. Sainsbury: No United Kingdom defence contracts have been concluded with Argentina since June 1982, and currently there continues to be no promotion of defence equipment sales to that country by my Department.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there have been any British nuclear tests in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Procurement

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the annual procurement costs within his Department; and what proportion of this is obtained from (a) Wales and (b) south-east England.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on Tuesday 29 November at columns 570-71 and the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 18 April at column 334.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many persons are employed in the procurement division of his Department who are legally qualified.

Mr. Sainsbury: I will write to the hon. Member.

Staff Dispersal

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration is being given to the relocation of Ministry of Defence procurement staff away from central London.

Mr. Sainsbury: Studies are already in hand into how best to rationalise the location of staff in the sea systems controllerate of the Procurement Executive, most of whom already work at sites in the south-west. Initial studies are now being launched into the feasibility of relocating the work of the land and air systems controllerates, which together employ over 3,000 people, the bulk of them in central London. As has already been said, Ministers are currently considering the results of an investment appraisal concerning the future location of the directorate general of defence quality assurance.

VAT

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessments he has made as to the likely effect on (a) his Department's capital building programme and (b) the rent the Department will pay under occupational leases, of implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on value added tax on non-domestic buildings.

Mr. Freeman: Implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on VAT will have no effect on my Department's capital building programme, since compensating adjustments have been made to the relevant expenditure provisions. At this stage, before landlords have decided whether to exercise their option to tax rents, it is not possible to offer meaningful estimates of the effects of the judgment on rental costs.

Aldermaston and Burghfield

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many projects were examined in the independent programme audit of the capital works programme at Aldermaston and Burghfield carried out by British Nuclear Fuels; what was the number of staff engaged to carry out this audit; and what was the total cost of the audit.

Mr. Sainsbury: The BNFL programme audit reviewed four major projects and was carried out by a seven-man team representing 218 man days' effort. It is not the practice to reveal the details of individual contract costs for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Trident

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how long a delay in a Trident-related programme must be before it is considered significant enough to report to the Defence Committee in the course of its annual examination of the Trident programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is the MOD's aim to provide the Select Committee on Defence with information concerning the progress of all significant aspects of the project. In reaching a judgment as to the significance of a projected delay in a part of the programme the MOD will consider aspects such as prospects for recovery and possible consequences of any overruns. Judgments are then made on a case-by-case basis.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where those elements of the Trident warheads that are purchased from the United States will be serviced and maintained.

Mr. Sainsbury: Servicing and maintenance of the British warhead for Trident will be undertaken in this country, regardless of the source of any particular elements.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the proportion of non-fissile elements in the Trident warhead that will be produced in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to reveal detailed information of this nature, for security reasons. I would, however, refer the hon. Member to the broad indications given in the recent report of the Defence Committee (third report, Session 1987-88, page 22, Q26).

Non-nuclear Defence Research Establishments

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to finish his considerations of the conclusions and recommendations of the report of the defence research study team into the feasibility of establishing the non-nuclear defence research establishments as an executive agency.

Mr. Sainsbury: Shortly.

Defence Statistics Organisation

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends to order a feasibility study into the potential for using the private sector in the work of the Defence Statistics Organisation.

Mr. Sainsbury: I am still considering what action should be taken on the report on the potential for using the private sector in the Defence Statistics Organisation.

Contractors

Mr. Menzies-Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contractual arrangements his Department makes when placing orders with defence contractors to ensure that deliveries are made on time and up to specification.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 6 December 1988]: The Ministry's policy is to negotiate taut contract terms and conditions which define the requirements in terms of specification and delivery and which enable redress to be sought where appropriate.

TRANSPORT

Lorries

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce regulations to control the shedding of stones and gravel from lorries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Effective legislation for enforcement already exists in the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations, as supplemented by the Department's code of practice on the safety of loads on vehicles.

Road Accident Statistics

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many children under the age of five years have been killed in traffic accidents in which the vehicle driver was found to be intoxicated with alcohol.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 1986, two children under the age of five years were killed in accidents where at least one of the drivers involved had a blood or breath alcohol content above the legal limit. In 1987, three children under five years were killed in accidents where a driver involved failed a roadside breath test. The accidents where a driver was killed and found to have a high blood alcohol content have not yet been completely indentified for 1987.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fatalities and serious injuries concerning children under five years travelling in vehicles involved in traffic accidents took place in the years 1980 to 1988; and how many of these children were travelling in car safety seats.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The table shows the numbers of children under five years who suffered fatal or serious injuries in road accidents while they were travelling in cars or other motor vehicles. It also shows the percentage of these child casualties who were recorded as using a child restraint or seat belt.

Casualties (fatal and serious) among children aged 0-4 travelling in motor vehicles: Great Britain: 1980-1987

Year	Vehicle type		Percentage of (a) restrained
	(a) Cars	(b) Other motor vehicles
1980	329	39	6
1981	306	48	9
1982	330	36	11
1983	310	34	15
1984	381	33	19
1985	357	33	15
1986	390	30	19
1987	403	28	20

It is obvious that the numbers are influenced by the spreading family use of cars and the percentage by the growing installation and use of restraints by child passengers.

Motor Cycles

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many motor cycle accidents there have been in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Too many. The trend is downwards.

The table attached shows the number of motor cycles involved in accidents in Great Britain between 1977 and 1987. The total number of motor cycle accidents is lower, since some accidents involve more than one motor cycle.

Motor cylce involved in accidents: Great Britain: 1977-1987

Year	All Severities
1977	73,676
1978	71,382
1979	69,173
1980	73,054
1981	70,949

Year	All Severities
1982	73,033
1983	65,962
1984	65,340
1985	57,822
1986	53,562
1987	47,024

Motor cycles include all two-wheeled motor vehicles.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is considering restricting the power of motor cycles bought for road use in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are existing and proposed limitations on the size of motor cycles that some riders may use. Motor cycle importers follow a voluntary maximum limit of 125 bhp for motor cycles brought into this country for use on the road.

The 1981 Transport Act restricted learner riders to machines of 125cc. Research indicates that this has reduced learner rider casualties by one quarter. The move up from a 125cc motor cycle to a large high performance machine can be too big a step for newly qualified riders. I therefore announced in February that we propose to introduce a new licence category for motor cycles in excess of 400cc. Progress to these larger machines will be linked to two years riding experience on a full licence. This will bring us into line with the relevant European proposals for harmonisation of driving licences. We have no plans to restrict the power of motor cycles sold in this country.

Road Signs

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report the locations on motorways and trunk roads of variable message signs, the number of signs currently in use on each road, the costs involved in installing them and details of their running costs; and if he will make a statement about his future intentions to extend the use of this type of sign and give details of the roads on which they will be installed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The detailed information requested is not readily available. I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Roads and Pavements (Reinstatement)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure the reinstatement of roads and pavements to their original standard by the utilities following work undertaken by them.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The breaking open and reinstatement of streets by public utilities is regulated by a general code in the Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950. Reinstatement is either carried out entirely by the utility, or the highway authority may elect to do all or certain portions of it themselves. In cases where the highway authority does not elect to reinstate a street, the utility is under an obligation to carry out the reinstatement in accordance with any reasonable requirements of the highway authority and to reinstate openings up to the original surface level.

We accepted in our response to the Horne report on the review of the Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950 that new primary legislation is required. It is proposed that utilities should be made entirely responsible for reinstating the highway following their excavation work. They would have to comply with new national specifications for reinstatement and meet objective standards of performance for the repaired road surface. Work to prepare these specifications and standards is well advanced. Utilities would be required to make good, at their expense, any reinstatements which fell outside these standards during a warranty period.

Legislation will be introduced as soon as a suitable opportunity can be found.

Manchester Airport

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of the talks, involving representatives of his Department and of the United States Government, on the licence applications for Manchester routes by three United States airlines; and if there is any further action he will be taking.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The two sides explored a number of new ideas from which an appropriate basis for agreement may be found. A further round of negotiations will be held this month or early in January. Precise dates are currently being considered.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Patrick Ryan

Mr. Gow: To ask the Attorney-General whether he is satisfied that the request for extradition of Mr. Patrick Ryan from Belgium was accompanied by the appropriate legal documents prepared properly in accordance with Belgium law; what information he has as to the grounds on which that request was refused; and what steps he is taking to secure the extradition of Mr. Ryan from the Irish Republic.

The Attorney-General: I am satisfied that the documents were prepared properly to meet the requirements of Belgian law. The advice of the Belgian prosecuting authorities themselves was sought, given and followed in the preparation of the extradition request.

The request was refused by the Belgium Government on the grounds that:

"it would appear from examination of the case that the imprecise charges contained in arrest warrants delivered by the British legal authorities and retained by executing order of the chamber of indictments and investigation of the Appeal Court do not constitute the necessary elements for the offence of conspiracy in Belgian law, the only grounds on which, according to the executing order, extradition to the United Kingdom could have been agreed by Belgium".

The court of first instance and the Court of Appeal of Brussels had both upheld the extradition request in relation to the conspiracy charges.

As regards the steps taken to secure Ryan's extradition from the Republic of Ireland, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the private notice question tabled by the right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris) on 1 December. The Irish Attorney-General's Office sent to my Office in the late afternoon of 1 December a letter requesting clarification and further information on certain matters set out in the statements of facts and law sent to him on 25 November. A full response answering all the questions was transmitted to the Irish Attorney-General's Office during the afternoon of 2 December.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministers (Public Statements)

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will take action to discourage Ministers from making public statements outside the remit of their own Department.

The Prime Minister: Ministers will continue to speak on Government policy as appropriate.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Prime Minister whether the duty of making public statements concerning the safety of agricultural produce for human consumption reposes in Ministers of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, or in the Department of Health.

The Prime Minister: The safety of foodstuffs consumed in this country is a matter for Health and Agriculture Ministers acting jointly. By arrangement, the Department of Health leads on matters concerning food hygiene and microbiological contamination of food which are likely to pose public health risks whereas Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food leads on all other food issues and associated health risks. In either case there is close liaison between Health and Agriculture Departments and consultation with relevant outside interests.

WALES

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to alter the operation of the Welsh Development Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 26 October 1988, at column 224.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress he is making in reducing hospital waiting lists in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Responsibility for the management of waiting lists in Wales rests with district health authorities within their allocated financial resources which (in terms of recurrent revenue provision and after taking account of inflation) have risen by 34 per cent. in the period 1978-79 to 1988-89. As part of the Department's efforts to reduce waiting times, £1 million of additional moneys have been made available to health authorities in each financial year from 1986-87 to 1988-89 to tackle specific problem lists. In 1988-89 this extra help should generate an estimated additional throughput of 10,300 new out-patients and 1,400 in-patients.

The Welsh Office is keeping the activities of DHAs under close scrutiny. In addition to the annual reviews of health authorities' performance, which include their efforts to tackle waiting lists, officials have recently completed a round of meetings with all authorities to discuss their plans for reducing waiting times.

At March 1988 72 per cent. of urgent in-patient waiting lists 61 per cent. of non-urgent in-patient waiting lists and 46 per cent. of out-patient waiting lists were within the waiting times targets. I am none the less concerned that many patients have to wait over-long for treatment, and the drive to reduce waiting times will continue.

Health Service (Grading)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will indicate the date on which he first received grading projections from each health authority on the new clinical structure for nurses, midwives and health visitors.

Mr. Grist: Provisional returns for Welsh district health authorities were received by the Department during the first two weeks of September 1988.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a breakdown of the new grading structure for nurses, midwives and health visitors broken down by grade, type of hospital including psychiatric, geriatric and acute, by district and region.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Sir R. Gower) on 30 November, at columns 244-46, and 1 December at columns 349-50. Information by area of work is not available centrally.

Cervical Smear Tests

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average time taken by each Welsh health authority to process cervical smear tests and provide the results for the patient and her general practitioner; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 14 June 1988, at column 85, which contains the latest comprehensive information available centrally.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Free School Transport

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to review the free transport limits for school pupils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has no such plans at present.

Disabled Persons (Staff)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of his Department's staff are classed as disabled.

Mrs. Rumbold: 2·5 per cent. of the Department's staff are registered disabled persons.

It is the Department's policy to encourage applications from disabled people. All those who apply with the necessary qualifications, or pass the alternative written test, are invited for an interview.

VAT

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessments he has made as to the likely effect on (a) his Department's capital building programme and (b) the rent the Department will pay under occupational leases, of implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on value added tax on non-domestic buildings.

Mrs. Rumbold: Implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on VAT will have no effect on my Department's capital building programme, since compensating adjustments have been made to the relevant expenditure provisions. At this stage, before landlords have decided whether to exercise their option to tax rents, it is not possible to offer meaningful estimates of the effects of the judgment on rental costs.

Teachers

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the salaries of grades of teachers comparable to those in the United Kingdom in each member state of the European Community.

Mrs. Rumbold: Some information on European Community teachers' salaries in 1985 is published in a detailed research report "The Conditions of Service of Teachers in the European Community", published by the European Commission in 1988 (pages 133 to 160). A copy is available in the Library.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to ensure that the pay of supply teachers takes account of their length of service and experience.

Mrs. Rumbold: The schools teachers' pay and conditions document 1988 already provides for local education authorities when determining the pay of a supply teacher to have regard to any qualifications or experience which they consider to be of value in the performance of his duties.

Science and Engineering Research Council

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received the annual report of the Science and Engineering Research Council for 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The annual report of the Science and Engineering Research Council for 1987-88 has been submitted to me under the requirements of the Science and Technology Act 1965, and a copy is being laid before the House today.

I was most interested to study the report on what has obviously been an exciting year for the council in fields ranging from fundamental work in astronomy to areas of great potential for future exploitation. I was particularly encouraged to note:

(i) the increase in the proportion of the council's expenditure applied to grants for core sciences and engineering research in higher education institutions—from 30·9 per cent. in 1986-87 to 33·5 per cent. in the year under review;

(ii) the development of the interdisciplinary research centre (IRC) concept, with the announcement of the first four centres during the year, at a cost of £25·7 million over six years;

(iii) the rapid response of the council and its academic and industrial committees to the fast-moving developments in high temperature superconductivity—including the choice of this subject for the first of the council's IRCs and in addition the allocation of some £700,000 in grant awards, with the later commitment of a further £2 million early in the 1988-89 session;

(iv) the council's participation, jointly with the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI), in the first collaborative LINK programmes in molecular electronics; advanced semiconductor devices; eukaryotic genetic engineering; and industrial measurements systems—the total SERC contribution to these programmes totalling £14·3 million over five years; and

(v) the deployment for high quality research by British scientists of sophisticated equipment such as the Liverpool university electron microscope capable of beam control over atomic dimensions; the high brightness lattice on the synchrotron radiation source at the council's Daresbury laboratory; transputer equipment at the national and regional centres, jointly funded with the DTI; and the 4·2 million William Herschel optical telescope on La Palma.

I look forward to seeing what progress has been achieved with these new initiatives and equipment in next year's report.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Inner-city Task Forces

1. Mr. Knowles: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what further progress has been made in the 16 inner-city task forces.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress achieved by his Department's inner-city task forces.

Mr. Newton: Since the task forces first began their work in 1986, they have supported over 1,000 projects, committing over £33 million of Government funds to stimulate the regeneration of their areas.

At the last count, as I indicated in my answer to my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) on 26 October, task forces projects have been approved that are expected to generate or safeguard at least 4,000 jobs, and to facilitate more than 20,000 training places. Over 400 companies have been involved in the task forces' work.

55. Mr. Favell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress of the inner-city task forces in the north-west.

Mr. Forth: The inner-city task forces are central to the Government's action for cities programme. Their objectives are to secure more jobs for local people, to improve their employability, to encourage and facilitate local enterprise and to support environmental and crime prevention initiatives which also contribute to these objectives.

All three inner-city task forces in the north-west have made excellent progress towards achieving these aims. To date, the Moss Side and Hulme (Manchester), Preston and Rochdale task forces have supported 141 projects which, among other things, have helped to create or safeguard 214 jobs and 1,315 training places.

All three have established development funds in co-operation with private sector institutions to help the start-up or strengthening of small businesses. They have sought to improve residents' employability by, for example, sponsoring courses in English as a second language, with particular reference to job-seeking skills. Training courses in skills relevant to industries such as textile and knitting, construction, computing and the banking and finance sectors have also been established.

Takeovers

19. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the value of takeovers by overseas companies in the United Kingdom for the latest convenient period; and what was the corresponding figure for overseas takeovers by United Kingdom companies.

Mr. Maude: The value of cross-border acquisition and mergers by overseas companies in the United Kingdom in the 12 months to September 1988 was £5·8 billion. The corresponding figure for cross-border acquisitions and mergers by United Kingdom companies was £11·7 billion.

25. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to discuss takeover policy.

Mr. Maude: I have no plans at present to meet the chairman of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to discuss merger policy. The chairman of the Commission meets my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and myself from time to time to discuss matters relevant to the work of the commission.

29. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he is taking to ensure a level playing field for takeover bids within the European Economic Community.

Mr. Maude: The Government raised the issue of barriers to takeovers in Europe at the Internal Market Council on 18 November.

60. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current level of company spending on takeovers.

Mr. Maude: In the 12 months to September 1988 United Kingdom industrial and commercial companies' expenditure on acquisitions of United Kingdom companies was about £20 billion and their expenditure on acquisitions of overseas companies was about £6 billion. Further information is published in Business Monitor MQ7 "Acquisitions and mergers by industrial and commercial companies".

EC (Trade Balance)

21. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what he expects the impact of 1992 to be on the trade balance with other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Alan Clark: The single European market will create opportunities for increased trade with the European Community as the barriers are removed. Realising the potential gains to the economy, including improved competitiveness against third countries, will depend on the flexibility of United Kingdom firms in responding to the new opportunities and challenges.

33. Mr. McAvoy To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what he expects the impact of 1992 to be on the trade balance with other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Alan Clark: The single European market will create opportunities for increased trade with the European Community as the barriers are removed. Realising the potential gains to the economy, including improved competitiveness against third countries, will depend on the flexibility of United Kingdom firms in responding to the new opportunities and challenges.

Information Technology (Research)

22. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what he is doing to encourage collaboration between universities and industry in the field of information technology research.

Mr. Forth: The Alvey programme successfully brings together industry and universities in collaborative IT research, and will continue until 1991-92. Support for collaboration between industry and universities will continue through further national and European IT research programmes, particularly Esprit and our new advanced technology programme, launched by my predecessor in July 1988, to which there has already been a most encouraging response.

Civil Research and Development

23. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the level of expenditure by British industry on civil research and development.

Mr. Forth: Expenditure by United Kingdom industry on industrial research and development amounted to about 1 per cent. of GDP in 1986, just slightly above the proportion for 1985. The economic climate established by Her Majesty's Government should encourage United Kingdom industry to raise its level of R and D expenditure further.

Competitiveness

24. Mr. Meale: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which measures of competitiveness have shown an improvement since 1979; and which have shown a deterioration.

Mr. Newton: The two main measures of international competitiveness are relative unit labour costs and share of world trade. Compared with our major competitors United Kingdom relative unit labour costs for manufactured goods fell by 5·8 per cent. between 1979 and 1987. Our share of the volume of world trade in manufactures has been broadly stable since 1981, after many years of decline. The signs are that our non-price competitiveness, which covers factors such as quality, reliability and after-sales service has also improved.

Departmental Official History

26. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will commission Sir Brian Hayes to write the official history of his Department for the period 1985 to 1986.

Mr. Newton: "Shoes and Ships and Sealing Wax", a history of the Department published in 1986, covered the period from 1786 to 1986. A copy was placed in the Library.

CBI

27. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the Confederation of British Industry; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Newton: I last met the CBI on 24 November when I spoke at its conference "Business Opportunities in Urban Regeneration".

Company Headquarters

28. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many of the headquarters of Britain's top 100 companies are outside the south-east; and if he will give comparable figures for 10 and 20 years ago.

Mr. Atkins: I regret that this information is not available.

EC (Trade Deficit)

30. Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster with which European Economic Community countries Britain is running a trade deficit.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the 12 months to October the United Kingdom had deficits on visible trade with Belgium/Luxembourg, Denmark, Federal Republic of Germany, France, Italy, the Netherlands and Portugal.

EC (Research and Development)

31. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the future of the European Community framework programme of research and development.

Mr. Forth: There has been welcome progress in implementing specific research programmes within the current framework programme. The Commission is itself conducting a review and is expected to put forward its own ideas for the future of Community research next year. At this stage it is not possible to anticipate what its conclusions may be. The United Kingdom will play an active part in the subsequent discussions. We shall, however, insist that any proposals for revision of existing Community research activity must be fully justified.

Barlow Clowes

32. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met representatives of Barlow Clowes investors.

65. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met representatives of the Barlow Clowes investors.

Mr. Maude: I met representatives of the Barlow Clowes Investors Group on 24 November.

58. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a further statement on the Barlow Clowes affair.

Mr. Maude: Copies of Sir Godfray Le Quesne's report were passed to a number of regulatory and professional bodies. Action being taken by the Securities and Investments Board and the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association was set out in my answer of 10 November at column 261. The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales has set up a team to examine the work of the auditors involved in the case, which has been asked to report by the end of the year.

I understand that the joint liquidators of Barlow Clowes International and Barlow Clowes Gilt Managers continue to make progress on recovery of investors' funds and towards distribution of recovered funds, as described by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in his statement on 20 October.

Contract Industrial Research

34. Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimates he has made of the growth of the contract industrial research market in the United Kingdom and worldwide.

Mr. Forth: Figures published in the 1988 annual review of Government-funded research and development show a rising trend of expenditure on extramural contract research and development by United Kingdom industry. In 1985 the figure was £332 million rising from £464 million in 1986. Independent forecasts suggest that this trend is likely to continue and that contract research and development expenditure is growing faster than intramural expenditure, the latter growing appoximately in line with GDP. There are no published worldwide figures.

Action for Cities Campaign

35. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how the private sector is responding to his Department's action for cities campaign; and how he plans to increase its involvement.

Mr. Newton: The private sector response has been excellent. Our series of seven breakfast presentations, completed in the east midlands on 6 December, has already led to over 300 offers of help or expressions of interest in urban regeneration from local business people. Chambers of commerce are becoming increasingly involved in planning the renewal of their cities. At national level the CBI, Business in the Community and Phoenix have joined in a forum to promote and assist the development of local business leadership. Above all, the growth of activity and investment in inner cities shows that the private sector is taking the business opportunities which action for cities is helping to generate.

The £3,000 million that the Government are spending on inner cities this year will do much to encourage more businesses to become involved in the inner cities. We shall also continue to make clear the commercial benefits of doing business in inner cities.

Merger Policy

36. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to meet Sir Gordon Borrie, Director General of Fair Trading to discuss merger policy.

Mr. Maude: I have no plans at present to meet Sir Gordon Borrie to discuss merger policy. Sir Gordon meets my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, and myself from time to time to discuss matters of mutual interest including mergers policy.

Manufacturing Industry (Output)

37. Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the figures in constant value of the output in manufacturing industries in the north-west (a) in 1979 and (b) at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Maude: Gross value added, at constant (1980) prices, for manufacturing industry in the north-west is estimated to have been £9,171 million and £7,453 million in 1979 and 1986 repectively.

43. Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the latest figures for the output of manufacturing industry; and what was the comparable figure one year ago.

Mr. Maude: In the third quarter of 1988 manufacturing output was at a level of 115·8, based on 1985 equal to 100. This is 7 per cent. higher than the level of 108·3 for third quarter of 1987. Manufacturing output is at its highest ever level.

56. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his forecast for the growth of manufacturing output in 1988.

Mr. Maude: In his Autumn Statement, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer forecast that manufacturing output would be 7 per cent. higher in 1988 than in 1987.

Single Market

38. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if any attempt has been made to monitor the effectiveness of the advertising campaign of 1992 and the completion of the single market.

51. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what monitoring he has undertaken of the level of awareness among business men of the single European market achieved by his Department's Europe Open for Business campaign.

Mr. Maude: DTI has a substantial evaluation exercise to monitor the effectiveness of the campaign and the level of business response. This includes a detailed survey of 100 different companies each week.

59. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what response there has been to his Department's Europe Open for Business campaign.

Mr. Maude: The response has been enormous. DTI has received more than 160,000 requests for information since March, including over 105,000 calls to our 1992 hotline. DTI Ministers and officials are speaking at some 500 conferences and seminars on the single market in the second half of this year.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what response has been made by firms in (a) south Yorkshire and (b) the Doncaster area to the campaign on the single European market; what particular action has been taken by his Department to bring this awareness to firms in south Yorkshire so that this area benefits equally as other parts of Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Since DTI's Europe Open for Business campaign opened in March, we have recorded more than 2,220 individual inquiries from the south Yorkshire area, including 345 from Doncaster. More than 200 senior business representatives attended DTI's regional conference held in Sheffield on 15 November.

DTI's regional office is active throughout the Yorkshire and Humberside region in arranging and supporting conferences and seminars. Staff from the regional office have been involved in 16 such events in south Yorkshire since 1 September.

British Coal (Accounts)

39. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will use his powers under section 11 of the Competition Act 1980 to order an independent investigation by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission of British Coal's accounts with special reference to payments for coalmining subsidence.

Mr. Maude: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission has recently completed an inquiry under section 11 of the Competition Act 1980 into British Coal's investment programme. I also understand that the recommendations of the Waddilove committee which examined the corporation's subsidence compensation arrangements are still being followed through. I therefore see no present case for a further section 11 inquiry.

EC (Anti-dumping Powers)

40. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the recent decisions of the European Economic Community to impose levies under its anti-dumping powers; and what representations he has received from United Kingdom firms on the issue.

Mr. Alan Clark: Since 1 April 1988, six investigations by the European Commission into the alleged injury to Community producers caused by the dumping of goods in the Community have been formally closed with the imposition of definitive anti-dumping duties. Provisional anti-dumping duties have been imposed by the Commission in a further six investigations in the same period.

Ministers receive representations from time to time both from firms supporting dumping complaints and from those likely to be affected by anti-dumping duties on goods they import.

USSR

41. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the latest annual figures of the value of exports to and imports from the USSR.

Mr. Alan Clark: For the 12 months ended December 1987 exports to the USSR were £491·6 million and imports £875·4 million.

Interest Rates

42. Mr. Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the estimated cost to industry of the rise in interest rates since 9 May.

Mr. Newton: Bank base rates fell from 8 per cent. to 7½ per cent. on 18 May and have since risen in stages. The cost to industrial and commercial companies to date compared with the cost if base rates had remained at 8 per cent. since 9 May is estimated at about £700 million. The hon. Member should bear in mind that a 1 per cent. interest rate increase, even if sustained for a full year, costs industrial and commercial companies far less than a one percentage point increase in pay settlements.

Takeovers and Mergers

44. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any proposals to change the criteria upon which takeover bids and mergers are referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Maude: No. As recently as March this year we published the results of a thorough review of mergers policy and we have no plans for a further review. We concluded that the potential effect on competition should remain the chief criterion for referring mergers and proposed mergers to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Hotol

45. Mr. Wood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions he has had with the aerospace industry about Hotol.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has continuing contacts with industry on this issue.

Japanese Liquor Tax System

46. Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on progress being made towards the reform of the Japanese liquor tax system as it affects the Scotch whisky industry.

Mr. Alan Clark: The intentions of the Japanese authorities to introduce a single rate of tax for all whiskies is well on course for implementation on 1 April 1989.

Staff Dispersal

47. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his Department's policy on dispersing staff to the regions; and what proportion of his staff now work outside London.

Mr. Newton: The Government's policy is that Civil Service work should be located where it can be done most cost-effectively and provide the best service to the public. The Government's urban and regional policies are taken into account at an early stage when considering each possible relocation, in consultation with territorial departments and my Department's regional offices.

The Department has some 12,550 staff in post and about half of them will be working outside central London when the laboratory of the Government chemist completes the move to Teddington which is currently in hand.

We have taken decisions on moving about a thousand more jobs out of central London. We are also carrying out a thorough review to assess the extent to which other units of the Department may operate more cost-effectively out of London.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

48. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the chairman of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State and I met the chairman of the commission in the course of the year and have discussed matters relevant to the work of the commission.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he will take to stop companies who make bids which are referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission buying further shares in the market.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. and noble Friend has already made clear that in future cases, where mergers are referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission and in the past he would have sought undertakings regarding further share purchases, voting or other matters, he proposes to safeguard the conduct of the inquiry by making an appropriate order to come into effect when the reference is announced.

However, this entails making a new order on each occasion. As the prohibition on further purchases of shares by the bidder is to apply in all appropriate cases, it is proposed to put the prohibition on a permanent footing. It is therefore our intention to include such a prohibition among the provisions relating to mergers in the forthcoming companies legislation.

Steel Industry

49. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next expects to meet the Trades Union Congress to discuss the future of the British steel industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have no plans at present for such a meeting.

Latin America and the Caribbean

50. Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he has recently taken to promote trade between the United Kingdom and Latin America and the Caribbean; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: We should like to see a substantial increase of trade with the region and my Department's full range of export services is available to help United Kingdom companies to export there. In the past 12 months we have supported 23 outward trade missions to, three inward trade missions from and seven exhibitions in, the area. We also give financial support to the Latin American trade advisory group and the Caribbean trade advisory group, which are two of the Department's area advisory groups and do valuable work in promoting United Kingdom exports to Latin America and the Caribbean.

Small Businesses

52. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many new small businesses have started up in each of the past five years; how many people they employ in (a) Ealing and (b) in total; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The latest available estimates provided by the Department of Employment in respect of the numbers of new businesses first registered for VAT are:

Year	United Kingdom	Ealing
1983	180,000	929
1984	182,000	1,090
1985	182,000	1,057
1986	191,000	1,131
1987	205,000	1,311

Although most of the new businesses are likely to be small the numbers of people they employ is not recorded. Over the period the total numbers of businesses registered in the United Kingdom increased by 11 per cent., while for those registered in Ealing the increase was 38 per cent.

Consumer Protection

53. Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans for seeking to extend consumer protection.

Mr. Forth: Part III of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 comes into force on 1 March 1989 making it an offence to give misleading price indications. We shall be making regulations under part III governing price indications at bureaux de change and the resale of electricity and gas by landlords. An order will be introduced under the Prices Act 1974 to implement EC directives on unit pricing and price marking of food and non-food products.

We plan to amend the law on the sale and supply of goods following the Law Commission's report and to amend the Consumer Credit Act and related legislation as detailed in the recent White Paper "Releasing Enterprise" (Cm 512). We shall also introduce revised regulations on pyramid selling.

In the field of consumer safety, we shall soon be introducing regulations with strict requirements for domestic gas cookers. Regulations on toy safety are being prepared to implement and EC directive. Safety standards for a wide range of consumer products are being updated for the purposes of the general safety requirement in the Consumer Protection Act 1987.

Car Market

54. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the change in the United Kingdom share of the British car market so far in 1988.

Mr. Atkins: In the first 11 months of 1988 the United Kingdom share of the British car market was 43 per cent., compared with 48 per cent. in the same period of 1987.

North-west (Investment)

57. Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the role and extent of foreign investment in the economy of the north-west.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) in the House on 13 July this year.

Manufacturing Industry

61. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the latest figure for the balance of trade in manufactured goods; and what was the comparable figure in 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: Figures for trade in manufactures on a balance of payments basis and seasonally adjusted are:

£ billion

	Exports	Imports	Balance
12 months to October 1988	64·5	78·3	−13·8
1979 Year	30·9	28·3	+2·7

Post Office (Letter Monopoly)

62. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what examination has been undertaken of the Post Office monopoly on the delivery of letters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The last public review of the future of the Post Office monopoly on the delivery of letters took place in 1980 and resulted in the suspension of the monopoly until 2006 in respect of letters carried for a charge of not less than £1. We naturally keep the issue of the letter monopoly under review but have no present plans for further change.

EC (Merger Directives)

63. Mr. Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his policy towards the formulation in the European Economic Community of merger directives.

Mr. Maude: The Government have reserved their position with regard to the EC Commission's proposals for a merger control regulation. The United Kingdom continues to participate constructively in discussions on the proposal.

Overseas Companies

64. Mr. Maples: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many overseas companies have set up operations in Britain; and what is his estimate of how many jobs such overseas investment has created and is sustaining.

Mr. Alan Clark: Since my Department's Invest in Britain Bureau started formally recording individual investment projects in 1979, there have been 2,463. These include the establishment of a new business, the expansion or acquisition of an existing business, and involvement in joint venture. Altogether, from the information provided by the companies themselves, these have been responsible for the creation of over 185,000 jobs and, since 1983, are known to have safeguarded some 95,000 others.

European Community (Monopolies, Mergers and Restrictive Practices)

66. Sir David Price: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress is being made in the Council of Ministers of the European Community in determining and then implementing a common policy towards monopolies, mergers and restrictive practices.

Mr. Maude: A European policy towards monopolies and restrictive practices is already in place. Discussions on the European Community Commission's proposals for a European merger control regulation were held at the Internal Market Council on 18 November. Some progress was made, but much still remains to be decided. Further discussions will be held at the Internal Market Council on 21 December.

British Petroleum (Kuwait Investment Office)

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plan to review his decision that the Kuwait Investment Office should sell its shares in British Petroleum, which amount to more than 9·9 per cent. of the company, within 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission recommended that the Government of Kuwait should be required to reduce their shareholding in British Petroleum over a period of some 12 months. However, in order to promote an orderly disposal of the shareholding, the report also recommended that this period should be subject to some flexibility in the light of market conditions. My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State accordingly asked the Director General of Fair Trading to consult the Kuwait Investment Office on this basis with a view to obtaining undertakings to reduce the shareholding in British Petroleum to not more than 9·9 per cent. and to advise him further on the appropriate time scale for divestment.

Disabled Persons (Staff)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of the Department of Trade and Industry's staff are classed as disabled.

Mr. Forth: The percentage of the Department's staff who are known to be disabled is 1·7 per cent. This figure includes both registered and unregistered disabled officers.

Data Protection Act

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster why members of his Department are on the interdepartmental group looking at the workings of the Data Protection Act; and whether he will define the concerns of his Department in respect of the Data Protection Act.

Mr. Forth: The Department of Trade and Industry's several concerns in the Data Protection Act are reflected by including in the group reviewing its working officials from the market division for the information technology industry, the division responsible for the protection of consumer interests in domestic and trade policy, and the enterprise and deregulation unit which co-ordinates action across Government to remove unnecessary burdens on business.

Companies Act 1985

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made on investigations into alleged offences under the Companies Act 1985 in respect of Messrs. Lewis and Tucker of 16 Hanover square, London W1.

Mr. Maude: I am not aware of any Companies Act offences committed by Lewis and Tucker but I shall consider any information the hon. Member may have.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what progress has been made on investigations into alleged offences under the Companies Act 1985 in respect of Wisland Investment Group Ltd.;

(2) what progress has been made on investigations into alleged offences under the Companies Act 1985 in respect of Bestwood Property Ltd.;

(3) what progress has been made on investigations into alleged offences under the Companies Act 1985 in respect of Chelwood Holdings Ltd.

Mr. Maude: Wisland Property Group Ltd., Bestwood Property Ltd. and Chelwood Holdings Ltd., are overseas registered companies and not subject to United Kingdom company law.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made on investigations into alleged offences under the Companies Act 1985 in respect of Royel Investments.

Mr. Maude: When Royel Investments Ltd. was incorporated in the style of Growish Ltd. it used the trading name Royel Investments and I refer the hon. Member to my reply yesterday to his question about Growish Ltd.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made on investigations into alleged offences under the Companies Act 1985 in respect of Platemede Ltd.

Mr. Maude: There is no United Kingdom company registered as Platemede Ltd., but I will consider any information the hon. Member may have.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made on investigations into alleged offences under the Companies Act 1985 in respect of Cemetery Assets UK.

Mr. Maude: I assume the hon. Member refers to Cemetery Assets UK Ltd. which is currently in default in filing annual accounts and returns. The Registrar of Companies is taking action to strike the company off the register.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made on investigations into alleged offences under the Companies Act 1985 in respect of Clive Warren Lewis of Lewis and Tucker, 16 Hanover square, London W1.

Mr. Maude: I am not aware of any Companies Act offences committed by Mr. Clive Warren Lewis but I shall consider any information the hon. Member may have.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress is being made in the negotiations to renew the bilateral trade agreement with China under the terms of the multi-fibre arrangement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Negotiations were still in progress in Brussels this morning. They may conclude this afternoon.

Nissan Vehicles

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will hold urgent talks with his Spanish counterpart concerning delays at the docks in Spain affecting imports of United Kingdom manufactured Nissan motor vehicles.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. and noble Friend is pursuing this matter vigorously with the European Commission and the Spanish Minister concerned. We are determined to see the rules of the treaty respected.

Shares (Disclosure of Interests)

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he proposes any changes to the law on disclosure of interests in shares following the recent consultation by the Government.

Mr. Maude: The Government intend to make two major changes to the law on disclosure of interests in shares, which will be included in this Session's Companies Bill. The level at which interests in shares of companies have to be disclosed will be reduced from 5 per cent. to 3 per cent. The deadline for such disclosure will be shortened from five days to two days.

I believe that the changes we propose to make will significantly improve market transparency, and will in particular give investors an early indication when a potential offeror purchases a large interest in a company. The Government's policy is to leave merger decisions to the market unless they raise overriding issues of public interest. It is, therefore, important that adequate information should be publicly available as a basis for the market's assessments and decisions. The changes will enable the market to make a fully informed assessment, especially during the vital period prior to the launching of a formal offer. The Government believe that relying on the operation of the market mechanism to assess the merits of takeovers is in the best interests of industry. It is no part of our policy to afford extra protection to the management of companies which are the subjects of takeover offers.

A further improvement to disclosure would be a change to certain stock exchange rules. These rules limit the ability of companies to restrict the rights of shares when inquiries into share ownership are frustrated. Our consultation has shown that there is significant support for a relaxation of the constraints in this respect that the stock exchange places upon listed companies. I am in sympathy with that view. I, therefore, welcome the fact that the stock exchange has agreed to consider changing its rules. The exchange has assured me that it will make an announcement as soon as it has completed its own consultations with interested parties.

Pirate Radio

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received concerning interference with independent local radio broadcasts by pirate radio operators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 6 December 1988]: Several recent representations have been received concerning interference to one independent local radio broadcast station in London.

My Department's radio investigation service has already acted to remove the source of interference causing a particular problem and it will continue to act vigorously to clear the radio frequencies of unlicensed broadcasters that cause interference, though they always give first priority to dealing with interference to radio systems upon which emergency services depend.

CIVIL SERVICE

Non-departmental Bodies

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many non-departmental bodies are currently in existence; and when the annual list of such bodies will be published.

Mr. Luce: On 1 April 1988 there were 1,648 non-departmental public bodies. This represents a net increase of five over the previous year, although there are 519 bodies fewer than in 1979. The bodies are listed in "Public Bodies 1988" published today. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

As the Prime Minister announced on 28 January 1988 at column 313-14, the Government will continue to resist proposals for new non-departmental public bodies unless it can be clearly demonstrated that they are the most appropriate and cost-effective solution, and will keep existing bodies under review.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for family credit have now been granted since the inception of the scheme; and how many applications are currently awaiting determination.

Mr. Scott: By 2 December, 280,986 claims for family credit had resulted in awards and a further 47,925 claims were awaiting determination. In addition, 206,279 family income supplement recipients were awarded family credit without having to make a claim.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals claim family credit from each of his Department's offices in Nottingham; and how many individuals are entitled to claim family credit in Nottingham.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Family credit claims are dealt with centrally and information is not available on a local basis.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average length of time it takes to process a family credit claim from a self-employed applicant.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 2 December]: Just under 34 working days in respect of self-employed cases cleared during November. Of this, less than 11 working days was for work within the family credit branch. The other 23 days were taken up by waiting for responses to inquiries.

Social Fund Officers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many social fund officers he has nominated under section 32(10) of the Social Security Act 1986; and for what areas;

(2) what matters relating to the social fund he has specified as matters about which the social fund officer nominated for an area may issue general guidance to other social fund officers in the area.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A total of 454 officers have been nominated under this section. These are the managers or temporary managers of local offices, excluding national insurance offices, who are authorised to issue guidance to other social fund officers on the nature, extent and urgency of the needs in the areas served by their local offices.

Pensions

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to abolish the earnings rule for retirement pensions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will identify those countries in which annual increments are paid to United Kingdom pensioners without a reciprocal social security agreement existing between the United Kingdom and the country concerned.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Outside the European Community and Sark, pension uprating increases are paid to United Kingdom pensioners only in those countries with which we have a social security agreement that specifically provides for such increases to be paid. Pensions payable to EC nationals living in the Community are uprated by virtue of Community rules. Pensions payable in Sark are increased in line with United Kingdom rates by virtue of a separate provision of the Social Security Benefit (Persons Abroad) Regulations 1975.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the benefits in cash and kind received by pensioners in the United Kingdom and in each country of the European Community.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the tables of social benefit systems in the European Communities, a copy of which is in the Library. The tables set out, for the principal schemes, the rates payable from 1 January 1988. Comparative statistics on benefits in kind are not available.

Allowances and Grants

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report the expenditure and number of claimants for each of the years 1978 to 1987 for (i) widow's allowance, (ii) widowed mother's allowance, (iii) death grant and (iv) maternity grant.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 1 December 1988]: The information requested is as follows:

[2] Records of expenditure on widowed mothers allowance include amounts of additional Pension payable.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the most recent figures for numbers of claimants and levels of expenditure, (b) the anticipated end of the year outturn on numbers of claimants and levels of expenditure and (c) the anticipated numbers of claimants and levels of expenditure for 1988-89 for (i) widow's payment, (ii) widowed mother's allowance, (iii) death grant and (iv) maternity grant.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 1 December]: The information is as follows:

	Most recent figures available, 1987-88		Anticipated end of year 1988-89 figures
	Number of awards	Levels of expenditure (£ million)	Number of awards	Levels of expenditure (£ million)

[1] Widow's payment was introduced in April 1988.
[2] Records of expenditure on widowed mother's allowance include amounts of additional pension payable.
[3] The expenditure on death grant in 1987-88 represents awards for people who died before then but that were paid in the 1987-88 financial year.
[4] Both maternity grant and death grant were abolished from April 1987.

HEALTH

Pharmaceutical Industry

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the annual return on the pharmaceutical industry's average historic capital employed on National Health Service business in 1987; and what comparable figures he has for the average for United Kingdom private sector industry.

Mr. Mellor: I have written to my hon. Friend.

Hypothermia

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of cases where hypothermia was mentioned on the death certificate for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and how many of each annual total were people aged (a) 65 years and over and (b) 80 years and over.

Mrs. Currie: The table shows the number of death registrations which contained any mention of hypothermia, by year of registration.

Number of death registrations with any mention of hypothermia on the death certificate, all ages, aged 65 and over, and aged 80 and over, 1978 to 30 November 1988 England and Wales

Congenital Abnormalities

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make available figures comparing the number of babies suffering from congenital abnormalities born to girls under 16 years of age at the date of delivery with those born to women between the ages of 18 and 35 years.

Mrs. Currie: The information is shown in the table for the latest years available. Figures are derived from a voluntary system of notification of congenital malformations observed at birth or up to seven days after birth. They are therefore likely to be an incomplete measure of the total number of affected babies.

Number of babies notified as being born with congenital malformations by age of mother, England and Wales, 1978-87

Elderly People (Deaths)

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of deaths among those aged (a) 60 to 69 years, (b) 70 to 79 years and (c) 80 years and over for each complete six-monthly period from 1 April 1978 to 31 March 1988 for England and Wales.

Mrs. Currie: The information is shown in the table.

Nurses

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next plans to meet representatives of all the nursing unions to discuss the regrading of nurses' pay.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to meet representatives of the nursing profession to discuss the issue of staff regrading.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Members to the reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health on 5 December at column 82.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many appeals have so far been heard by region, district health authority, and nationally against gradings issued to nurses; how many have succeeded; and how many have failed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not hold information on the numbers of appeals heard at health authority level centrally. No appeals against gradings issued as a consequence of the clinical grading exercise have yet been heard at regional appeals committee or Whitley council level.

VAT

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessments he has made as to the likely effect on (a) his Department's capital building programme and (b) the rent the Department will pay under occupational leases of implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on value added tax on non-domestic buildings.

Mrs. Currie: Implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment, on VAT will have no effect on the Department's capital building programme, since compensating adjustments have been made to the relevant expenditure provisions. At this stage, before landlords have decided whether to exercise their option to tax rents, we cannot offer estimates of the effects of the judgment on rental costs.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will request his Department's Social Services inspectorate to carry out a study of the arrangements for health care in non-statutory residential care homes similar to its review of arrangements for health care in local authority residential homes for elderly people carried out in 1986.

Mr. Mellor: The social services inspectorate carried out an exercise to examine the use made by local authorities of guidance issued by the Department some years ago. Such guidance has not been formally issued to non-statutory homes and we therefore have no plans to carry out a similar exercise there. We are now considering, in the light of the report on local authority homes, what further action we need to take to ensure good standards of health care in all residential care homes, including those in the non-statutory sector.

Resources (West Midlands)

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, following the publication of the National Health Service management board review of the national allocation formula in July, he intends to implement the resources allocation working party formula such as to reduce future allocations to the west midlands region by approximately £23 million; and if he will made a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Government are considering the recommendations of the National Health Service management board's review of the resource allocation working party formula in the wider context of the National Health Service review.

Dentists

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will give the figures for the number of practising dentists (a) joining and (b) leaving the dental lists of family practitioner committees in the latest available five-year period;

(2) what information he has on the number of general dental practitioners who have left the National Health Service for private dentistry during the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: The number of general dental practitioners in England and Wales who joined or left the lists of family practitioner committees in the 12 months up to 30 September of each of the last five years are as follows:

We do not hold information on the number of practitioners who withdrew from an FPC list to practise privately.

Horticultural Therapy

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial and others steps he is taking to encourage horticultural therapy; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The Department has grant-aided the Society for Horticultural Therapy since 1984. The current grant of £52,000 a year towards the society's project advice and training services was awarded in April 1988 and supports a range of activity including the promotion and dissemination of good practice in the therapeutic rehabilitation of hospital patients.

NHS Staff (Pay)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will indicate the date on which he first received grading projections from each health authority on the new clinical structure for nurses, midwives and health visitors.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I first received preliminary and provisional projections during the first two weeks of September.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a breakdown of the new grading structure for nurses, midwives and health visitors broken down by grade, types of hospital including psychiatric, geriatric and acute, by district and region.

Mr. Mellor: For the grading breakdown by district and by region, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Mr. Knox) on 28 November at column 147-48. We do not hold information on the outcome by type of hospital centrally.

Salmonella

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of salmonella poisoning caused by infected eggs have been reported in each month of 1988; and what percentage of total egg sales these figures represent.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Reports of food poisoning do not normally identify the food stuff causing the illness. However, in England and Wales, there were 46 outbreaks involving 1,141 people in the first 10 months of 1988 in which the most likely source of infection was uncooked or partially cooked eggs. Recent studies indicate that some sporadic cases of salmonellosis have also been caused by eggs. We also have reason to believe that these figures underestimate the total number of people affected. The monthly breakdown of 1,141 cases is as follows:

	Number
January	27
February	—
March	—
April	60
May	302
June	159
July	207
August	145
September	114
October	127

Figures of egg sales are not available but the number of eggs produced each year in the United Kingdom is between 12,000-13,000 million. The percentage of reported cases to egg sales is clearly very small.

Although the risk of harm to any healthy individual from consuming a single raw or partially cooked egg is small, it is advisable for vulnerable people such as the elderly, the sick, babies and pregnant women to consume only eggs which have been cooked until the white and yolk are solid.

General Practice Finance Corporation

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Government intends to invite offers for the purchase of the General Practice Finance Corporation.

Mr. Mellor: Hambros Bank, on behalf of the Government, will tomorrow issue an information memorandum to those financial institutions and others who have expressed an interest in acquiring the operating business of the General Practice Finance Corporation. The GPFC provides family doctors with a source of funds for the purchase, construction and improvement of their surgery premises in the form of fixed and variable rate loans and acquisition and lease finance.

An agreement has been reached with the general medical services committee of the British Medical Association providing for its participation in the management of the successor company to the corporation once it is transferred into the private sector. The object is to preserve the ethos of the existing business, maintain its sensitivity to the needs of family doctors, and ensure the operational integrity of the new company in its early years within any group of which it might become part.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Disabled Persons (Staff)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of his Department's staff are classed as disabled.

Mrs. Chalker: In the diplomatic wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office 0·3 per cent. of staff are registered disabled people. In the aid wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office 1·4 per cent. of staff are registered disabled people.

Viacheslav Uspensky

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise with the Soviet authorities the case of Viacheslav Uspensky, on hunger strike in protest against the refusal of the Soviet Government to grant a visa for himself and his parents to emigrate; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We regularly make representations to the Soviet authorities on behalf of those, such as Viacheslav Uspensky, who are refused permission to leave the Soviet Union. We last raised the case of the Uspensky family at the bilateral consultations in Moscow on 23 June. We shall continue to raise this case at every suitable opportunity including during Mr. Gorbachev's forthcoming visit.

VAT

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessments he has made as to the likely effect on (a) his Department's capital building programme and (b) the rent the Department will pay under occupational leases, of implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on value added tax on non-domestic buildings.

Mrs. Chalker: Implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on VAT will have no effect on the Department's capital building programme, since compensating adjustments have been made to the relevant expenditure provisions. At this stage, before landlords have decided whether to exercise their option to tax rents, it is not possible to offer meaningful estimates of the effects of the judgment on rental costs.

Gibraltar

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will announce the details of the agreement reached on 1 December with the Chief Minister of Gibraltar on the future of the Gibraltar social insurance fund.

Mrs. Chalker: Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Gibraltar have established that the state of the social insurance fund is such that it is no longer financially viable. Payments will continue to all beneficiaries at existing cash levels for a further five years. At the end of that time, the fund will be dissolved, and the balance paid out to all past and present contributors, taking account of their accrued rights. Under these arrangements, all beneficiaries will be treated in an equitable and non-discriminatory manner. Her Majesty's Government have agreed to make available the necessary funds to make up any shortfall in the SIF for the duration of these arrangements. The details of dissolution and distribution will now be worked out on the basis of a thorough analysis of the fund's contribution records.

Internal Market (EC)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list the measures required to complete the internal market for 1992;

(2) if he will list those of the items identified by the European Commission as being essential to complete the internal market in Europe which have to date been incorporated in (a) European Community and (b) United Kingdom law;

(3) if he will list those items identified by the European Commission as essential to complete the internal market where agreement has not yet been reached.

Mr. Maude: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-East (Mr. Leighton) at column 440. Since then the following measures have also been agreed by the Council of Ministers:

Control of Goods

Directive amending Directive 77/93 on protective measures concerning entry into Member States or organisms harmful to plants or plant products. [adopted]

Removal of Technical Barriers

Food for particular nutritional use (amendment). [common position]

Food labelling (amendment). [common position]

Two (concerning proprietary and immunological medicinal products) of a package of four proposals on the extension of directives to medicinal products not already included. [common position]

The following measures are either currently in force in the United Kingdom or legislation has been made or administrative action taken to bring them into force by the required implementation dates.

Control of Goods

Duty-free admission of fuel contained in the fuel tanks of commercial motor vehicles: lorries and coaches*.

Single Administrative document (SAD) third country aspects.

Simplification of Community transit procedure: amendment to Reg 222/77.

Abolition of customs presentation charges.

Elimination of customs formalities in the framework of the TIR Convention and the Introduction of common border posts—"banalisation".

Live animals of the bovine species: amended eradication directives to provide for final eradication of brucellosis, tuberculosis and leukosis.

Eradication of classical swine fever in the Community as a whole and swine fever.

Hormone growth promoters.

Medical examination of Personnel.

Antibiotic residues.

Control of residues.

Swine fever.

Control of foot and mouth disease.

Amendment to Directive 77/93 (plant health).

Maximum levels for pesticide residues in cereals and foodstuffs of animal origin.

Amendment of Directive 79/117/EEC on the prohibition of certain plant protection products (ethylene oxide).

Proposal for Directive on the fixing of guidelines for the evaluation of additives used in animal foodstuffs.

Modification of Directive 72/461 on health problems affecting Intra-Community trade in fresh meat and Directive 72/462 on health and veterinary inspection problems upon importation of bovine animals and swine and fresh meat from 3rd countries.

Acceptance for breeding purposes of purebred breeding animals of the bovine species.

Amendment to Directive 80/215 on animal health problems affecting Intra-Community trade in meat products.

Amendment to Directive 74/63 on undesirable substances and products in animal nutrition (maximum pesticide residues in animal feeding-stuffs).

Semen of animals.

Control of Individuals

Sixth Directive relative to exemptions in international travel: increase to 350 ECUs.

Tax reliefs to be allowed on the importation of goods in small consignments of a non-commercial character.

The Removal of Technical Barriers

Proposal for the extension of information procedures on standards and technical rules (amendment to Directive 83/189)

Type approval of motor vehicles and their trailers, Directive 70/156

Directive on the approximation of laws relating to weights and dimensions of certain motor vehicles
Modification of tractors framework Directive 74/150
General Directive on sampling and methods of analysis
Emulsifiers (modification)
Coffee extracts chicory extracts (modification)
Proposal for Directive concerning the placing on the market of high-technology medicinal products including those derived from biotechnology
Proposal amending Directive 75/318/EEC concerning the testing of medical specialities
Proposal amending Directive 81/852/EEC concerning veterinary medicinal products
Proposal for a Council Directive amending Directive 65/65/EEC concerning medical specialities
Council Directive relating to restrictions on the marketing and use of PCB's (polychlorinated biphenyls)
Council Directive relating to "Restrictions on the marketing and use of asbestos"
Non-ionic detergents (modification of existing Directive)
Tyre pressure gauge
Hydraulic diggers (noise)
Good laboratory practices—non-clinical testing of chemicals

Free Movement for Labour and the Professions
Comparability of vocational training qualifications
Co-operation between higher education and industry for advanced training relating to new technologies (COMETT)
Co-ordination of provisions in respect of certain activities in the field of pharmacy
Mutual recognition of diplomas in pharmacy

Common Market for Services
Collective investment undertakings for transferable securities UCITS Directive: special measures concerning certain investments.

Transport
Fares for scheduled air services.
Air transport: sharing of passenger capacity and market access
Air transport: application of Articles 85 and 86 (rules of competition).
Maritime transport:
1. freedom to provide services in the sea transport sector: between Member States and between Member States and third countries.
2. application of Articles 85 and 86 of Rome Treaty to maritime transport.
3. unfair pricing practices.
4. co-ordinated action to safeguard free access to cargoes in oceanic trades.
Road transport: organisation of the market (Community quota) for the carriage of goods by road between Member States: transitional and final stages [except in so far as all Community quotas and bilateral quotas between Member States will not be abolished until 1 January 1993].

Capital Movements
Liberalisation of units in collective investment undertakings for transferrable securities.
Liberalisation of operations such as transactions in securities not dealt in on a Stock Exchange, admission of securities of the capital market and long-term commercial credits.
Liberalisation of capital movements

Other Areas
Legal protection of micro circuits.

Fiscal Measures
13th VAT Directive concerning tax refunds to persons not established in the Community.
17th VAT Directive concerning the temporary importation of goods other than means of transport.
In addition the following measures do not require implementation by the United Kingdom because they are recommendations, or action is for other Member States or the Commission.

Control of Goods
Live animals of the porcine species: eradication of African swine fever in Portugal.
Live animals of the porcine species: eradication of African swine fever in Spain.

The removal of technical barriers
Proposals for a Council Recommendation concerning tests relating to the placing on the Market of medical specialties.
Membership of the European Pharmacopeia
Membership of the European Agreement on detergents
Protection of hotels against fire

New technologies and services
Recommendation on a European Code of Conduct relating to electronic payment (relations between financial institutions, traders and service establishments and consumers).
Establishment at Community level of a policy and plan of priority action for the development of an information services market.

Fiscal measures
Harmonisation of the structure of excise duties on alcoholic drinks (FOD Rum)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those items in the internal market programme which he intends to oppose in the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Maude: I have been asked to reply.

The Government strongly supports the aim of completing the Single Market. We attach priority to many of the proposals made by the European Commission, but have difficulties with some others—as do other Member States. Many measures in the Single Market Programme are complex and all involve detailed negotiation. It would not therefore be possible to present the information in the form requested.

ENERGY

Nuclear Reactors (Decommissioning)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress he has made towards the production of safety specification guidelines for the decommissioning and disposal of British nuclear reactors operated by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority in the event that such decommissioning and disposal becomes necessary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority determines the need for the decommissioning of its reactors as part of its overall technical programme and addresses the safety of such operations within well established procedures for safety management.

Mr. Angelo Casfikis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list details of the occasions when he, or other Ministers in his Department, met Mr. Angelo Casfikis to discuss the reopening of Central Electricity Generating Board coal-fired power stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Mr. Casfikis has met Ministers here on five occasions:
10 February 1987, 19 January 1988, 17 March 1988, 15 April 1988, and 30 September 1988.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all communications made by his Department to the Central Electricity Generating Board concerning the proposal by Mr. Angelo Casfikis and the I.P.E. Company to generate electricity under the terms of the Energy Act 1983.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department has been in regular touch with the CEGB, in particular in response to points raised by the hon. Member.

Coal-fired Power Stations

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he has taken to vary the environmental conditions required to operate new or reopened coal-fired power stations and to encourage other responsible bodies to vary these.

Mr. Michael Spicer: None. It is the responsibility of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to determine the level of atmospheric emission control equipment to be fitted to such stations.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the proportion of the future supply of electricity he expects to be generated under the terms of the Energy Act 1983 in (a) 1990, (b) 1995 and (c) 2000.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department does not publish such estimates. Experience of the energy market has shown that changes in the future composition of energy production cannot be forecast with any certainty.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will consider amending the Energy Act 1983 to ensure the appropriate firm safeguards are required of future aspirant power generating companies to provide (a) security of the power supply, (b) high standards of pollution control and (c) financial security and propriety.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Clause 15 of the Electricity Bill will impose an obligation to supply on the public electricity suppliers, instead of the generators as now. Privatisation will make no difference to the environmental standards which the electricity industry has to meet. It will be required to meet United Kingdom emissions standards and will be subject to an amenity obligation similar to section 37 of the 1957 Electricity Act. Clause 3 of the Electricity Bill gives the Secretary of State and Director General of Electricity Supply a duty to secure that licence holders are able to finance the carrying on of the activities which they are authorised by their licences to carry on.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the approaches that have been made by his Department in (a) 1986, (b) 1987 and (c) 1988 to the Central Electricity Generating Board to encourage the implementation of competition in electricity generation as envisaged in the Energy Act 1983.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The CEGB is fully aware of its statutory responsibilities under the 1983 Energy Act.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the number of new electricity generating units that (a) have been introduced or (b) are planned to be introduced as a consequence of the Energy Act 1983.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The number of private generators selling to area boards has almost doubled from 59 to 103 since the 1983 Energy Act. We are aware of some 16 new proposed private generation projects which would total over 6GW of new capacity; most of these have come forward since the Government's intention to privatise the industry was announced.

Electricity Transmission

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has received the Central Electricity Generating Board's second response to the report by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on the efficiency and costs of transmission of electricity.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Central Electricity Generating Board has sent me its second response to the report which was published on 26 June 1987. Copies of the response have been placed in the Library.

The board's response summarises the action which the board has taken and is continuing to take. Of the five areas identified by the commission requiring priority action, progress has been made as follows:

1) Clear Definition of Board Responsibilities

The board will continue to ensure that the responsibilities of executive board members are clearly defined and understood up to the vesting of the CEGB's successor bodies. The CEGB has also identified the senior management of the successor bodies. It is important, particularly in view of the period of change that the industry is presently undergoing, that board members' responsibilities remain clearly defined.

2) Future Management of the Five Centre Grid Control Project

The board announced in June 1988 that it had awarded the contract for its five centre grid control project to Control Data Corporation. The CDC system will provide a single fully integrated computer system to support the operation and control of the high voltage grid transmission system. When operational the system will continuously collect, display and calculate information about power flowing through the network and the state of the network itself. The system will provide an effective mechanism with which to manage the grid.

3) Year to Year Changes in Transmission Plans, and

4) Fluctuations in estimated Plant and Equipment Requirements

Initial work on reviewing the board's last five transmission plans is expected to be complete by the end of this year. My Department will keep in touch with the progress of the review.

5) Approach to Budget Setting

The board has introduced a new project appraisal system which ensures that all projects are carefully analysed and re-examined. To ensure compliance with tight financial disciplines the board has increased the size of its audit function.

The board has responded positively to the recommendations made by the MMC and has made good progress in the fields of system operation and planning. I welcome the board's response and the progress it is making towards meeting the recommendations of the commission.

Since the board's first response the Government have announced their proposals to privatise the electricity supply industry, under which the board's transmission system will be managed by a new transmission company. These proposals represent major changes in the organisational structure of the industry, including the management of the transmission system, and the board's second response takes account of these proposed changes. In view of these impending changes it is unlikely that the board will be called upon to produce a third response although my Department will keep in touch with the board on progress towards meeting the MMC recommendations.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Plastic Bullets

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many plastic bullets have been fired each year since they first came into use in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Since the introduction of plastic baton rounds in 1973, the security forces have fired 54,234 (to 31 October 1988). The annual figures are:

Numbers of plastic baton rounds fired

Year	Number
1973	42
1974	216
1975	3,556
1976	3,464
1977	1,490
1978	1,743
1979	1,271
1980	1,231
1981	29,695
1982	500
1983	661
1984	1,768
1985	1,172
1986	1,785
1987	2,575
1988[1]	3,065
	54,234

[1] to 31 October 1988

Rathlin Island

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to provide mains electricity to Rathlin Island; whether the survey report prepared by Northern Ireland Electricity is available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: Northern Ireland Electricity has been evaluating methods of supply for Rathlin and is presently studying the results of a hydrographic survey, the implications of which, when known, will be discussed with representatives of the islanders.

Prisons

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what staff and medical care facilities would be required for an industrial or commercial business of comparable size and work force to that of each of Northern Ireland's prisons; and how far short of that level are the staffing and facilities of each of those prisons.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Regulations made under the Health and Safety at Work (NI) Order 1978, require employers to provide certain minimum levels of first aid facilities for employees who are injured or become ill at work. The first aid facilities provided in each of Northern Ireland's prisons exceed the minimum requirements.

Business Plans

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the names of accountancy firms in Northern Ireland which have submitted business plans or proposals in each of the last three years to the Local Employment Development Unit and the Industrial Development Board on behalf of clients.

Mr. Viggers: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could only be compiled at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Peter Clifford

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what explosive substances were found in the car in which Peter Clifford was a passenger on 8 November; and what checks were made on his clothes;

(2) why Peter Clifford was arrested near Long Kesh on 8 November; what charges were made against him; and for how many hours he was detained;

(3) what happened to the finger-prints taken from Peter Clifford in Gough barracks on 8 November; and what records are kept of his arrest and interrogation;

(4) what questions were asked of Peter Clifford during interrogation at Gough barracks; and what documents he signed.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answers 25 November 1988]: A routine Army patrol operating close to Her Majesty's prison Maze near Lisburn, on 8 November stopped and searched a vehicle in which Mr. Clifford was a passenger. Traces of what was thought to be an explosive substance were found in the vehicle. The vehicle's occupants were subsequently arrested and the vehicle was taken for further examination. Following forensic examination of the vehicle and Mr. Clifford's clothing, it was established that the material discovered was not an explosive substance.

Mr. Clifford was initially detained under section 14 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 for a period of four hours and subsequently arrested under section 12 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984.

He was detained at 1409 hours on 8 November and released at 1300 hours on 9 November and therefore remained in custody for just under 24 hours. He was released without charge.

Whilst he was in custody, Mr. Clifford's fingerprints were taken and in accordance with normal procedure these have now been destroyed. Procedural records of his arrest and detention have been retained. During police interview Mr. Clifford was asked a number of questions about the substance found, his identity and the reasons for this presence in that particular area. Before his release Mr. Clifford signed a number of official forms relating to his detention. I now understand that Mr. Clifford has lodged a formal complaint in relation to his detention and this is being investigated by the police.

ENVIRONMENT

Radon

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many households in Yorkshire have been recorded as being over the recommended safety limit in respect of radon; and if he will list their locations;

(2) if he will list any sites in Yorkshire that have been identified as being over the safety limit in respect of radon; and what radiation levels were recorded.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The National Radiological Protection Board surveys in the three Yorkshire counties have led to the discovery of one house, in west Yorkshire, with a radon concentration at the action level at 400 bequerels per cubic metre. In the county as a whole, concentrations are almost exactly the national average.

Pollution Control (Self-Regulation)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to allow private industry to self regulate pollution control methods; how he would monitor such voluntary actions; and whether he will consider the application of stricter legislative controls on environmentally hazardous emissions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Legislative controls over hazardous emissions already exist. Where monitoring is undertaken by industry as part of the control system, it is policed by the pollution control authority. Proposals currently being developed on an integrated system for controlling industrial pollution will make this framework more efficient and effective.

Radioactivity

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the premises in Nottingham which are authorised under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960.

Mrs. Bottomley: A list of all premises in England and Wales authorised under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 was published by the Department in April 1988 and a copy was placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the function of the RIMNET station at Watnall, Nottingham.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The function of the RIMNET station of Watnall is to measure gamma dose rate.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether RIMNET stations can detect (a) particulate radioactivity, (b) gaseous radionuclides and (c) radionuclides with short half-lives.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The RIMNET monitors detect particulate and gaseous radionuclides which emit gamma radiation. They are able to detect both short and long-life radionuclides.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the monitoring equipment used by RIMNET; and if he will make a statement on the future of RIMNET.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: RIMNET sites are currently equipped with Geiger-Muller gamma dose rate monitors. The proposals for the development of RIMNET are set out in the DOE booklet "Nuclear Accidents Overseas—The National Response Plan and Radioactive Incident Monitoring Network (RIMNET). A Statement of Proposals", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sites where his Department conducts random monitoring for radioactivity in Nottingham other than at premises authorised under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Nottingham's drinking water is monitored regularly by HM inspectorate of pollution under the national environmental radioactivity monitoring programme. The effects of all liquid discharges in the Nottingham area are monitored by sampling the river Trent. No other monitoring for radioactivity is warranted.

Homelessness

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new proposals he has developed to tackle homelessness.

Mr. Trippier: A review of the current homelessness legislation is under way. As yet, it is too early to say whether this will result in any new, national initiatives.

Single Market

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has to give advice and guidelines to local authorities on the implications for them of the introduction of the single European market in 1992; and if he would make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department will shortly be discussing this matter with representatives of the local authority associations.

Global Developments

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish an annual progress report on how his Department's policies, programmes and spending are directed towards global sustainable developments.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) on 30 November 1988 at column 283.

Planning Appeals (Hampshire)

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning appeals relating to Hampshire were made to his Department in 1987; how many were determined; how many were allowed; and what has happened to those not determined.

Mr. Howard: A total of 1,124 planning appeals relating to Hampshire were lodged in 1987, but 186 of these have been withdrawn. Of the remainder, 351 were allowed, 570 were dismissed and 17 are still to be determined. Those appeals still to be decided are either in abeyance (at the request of the parties) or are in the final stages of processing.

Clay Pigeon Shooting

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will annul the General Development Order 1988 to ration permitted days use of land for clay pigeon shooting to 28.

Mr. Chope: The General Development Order 1988 came into operation on 5 December. We intend to consult shortly on whether to amend it so as to increase from 14 to 28 the maximum number of days in a year on which land may be used for clay pigeon shooting without planning permission.

Rating Reform

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress on his consultations regarding the draft poll tax regulations.

Mr. Gummer: We are currently consulting the local authority associations and other bodies on draft regulations covering the administration and enforcement of community charges. Consultation on further regulations will follow shortly.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the most recent figures he has for the number of dwellings owned by (a) the London residuary body, (b) the Inner London education authority, (c) central Government Departments and (d) housing associations, which are unlawfully occupied in each London borough.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not held by the Department.

Sewage Works

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is yet in a position to make a further statement on his policies for improving the performance of sewage treatment works in England and Wales.

Mr. Howard: Yes. There will be capital programmes involving expenditure of £900 million to £1,000 million designed to bring substandard works into compliance with their legal limits by March 1992. But in some cases, because of the scale of the design and construction work which is necessary, it will not be possible to complete the work by this date. In those cases, completion will be achieved as soon as practically possible thereafter. The Government will be discussing with water authorities the detailed timetables for their programmes.

Applications for temporary variations in consent conditions will be considered in cases where improvement works are programmed for completion by March 1992. This is the best way of securing rapid completion of major investment programmes while protecting river quality.

Upper tier conditions in time-limited consents will also be introduced as a new maximum limit for effluent standards. These will be set at levels which ensure the protection of the receiving waters against excessive discharges. Water authorities exceeding their limits will be at risk of prosecution.

Direct Labour Organisations

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amendments he will be seeking to make to the regulations made under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 relating to direct labour organisations, in the light of consultation.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and Wales have now decided, in the light of a consultation exercise carried out earlier this year, that all building and maintenance work other than highways and sewerage work should be subject to competition from October of next year and that the present exemption for direct labour organisations with not more than 30 employees should be reduced to 15 employees.

We are also prohibiting authorities from renewing maintenance contracts with their direct labour organisations without first going out to tender. We are examining the scope for restricting the kinds of emergency work which can be carried out by direct labour organisations without open competition.

The present regulations, made under part III of the Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980, have been in force since 1983 and the Government feel that there is no longer a case for any competition-free allowance for this work. Some authorities already expose all their maintenance and minor construction work to competition.

We estimate that an extra £400 million of work would be exposed to compulsory competition each year. A 30-employee de minimis threshold no longer seems justified. This could allow an authority to carry out work worth £600,000 a year without competition.

Local Authority Rents

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing average local authority rents at 1987-88 prices, for each year since 1967-68.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 6 December 1988]: Average weekly unrebated rents for English local authorities, revalued to 1987-88 prices using the retail prices index, are as follows:

	£ per week
1967-68	11·23

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fish (Contamination)

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures his Department is taking to monitor the level of contamination of fish landed at British ports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Scientists from my Department carry out a regular monitoring programme to assess the quality of fish and shellfish in terms of contaminant concentrations. Results of this programme are published at regular intervals in aquatic environment monitoring reports which are available in the Library of the House.

The information gathered over almost 20 years has shown that levels of contaminants are low and that the quality of our fish complies fully with European Community environmental quality standards and national guidelines.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what EEC funding for the buying up of fishing vessels is available under regulation 4028/86; how many British vessels have been able to take advantage of this; and what proposals he has for allowing more British fishing vessels to do so.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Commission has allocated 100 mecu (£65 million) over a five-year period from 1987 to 1991 under regulation 4028/86 for the buying up (decommissioning) of fishing vessels. The United Kingdom has not implemented this particular measure and at present we have no plans to do so.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many Spanish-owned vessels are currently on the register of British fishing vessels; what ports they fish from; and in which quota sectors they operate.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There are at present approximately 150 fishing vessels on the British register which are believed to be beneficially Spanish owned. Of these 97 are licensed to fish for stocks subject to quotas.

The vessels operate mainly in Western waters (ICES areas VI, Vb, VII and VIII) taking substantial quantities of hake, megrim and anglerfish. They also catch significant quantities of haddock and saithe from areas VII and VIII plus some whiting from area VII (exc VIIa), cod VII (exc VIIa) and VIII and sole VIIfg.

Whilst the majority of the vessels are nominally based in the ports of Milford haven, Plymouth or Fleetwood, the majority of their catches are landed and sold at ports in Northern Spain.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reduction of number of fishing vessels and what proportion of the reduction has been secured to date in the multi annual guidance programmes for fishing for (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Denmark, (c) France and (d) Holland.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is only readily available as follows:

Potato Marketing Board

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the overall response to his consultation paper regarding the Potato Marketing Board; and whether he proposes to accept the majority or minority views expressed on the options suggested.

Mr. Ryder: The period for the response to the consultation paper on future potato market policy in Great Britain does not expire until 31 December 1988, and there are clearly many replies yet to be received.

Aldrin

Mr. Alton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ban the use of the pesticide Aldrin immediately; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Three minor pesticide uses of aldrin are currently permitted until the end of 1992, when approval for these uses will be revoked. This interval is intended to permit alternative treatments to be developed and growers' stocks to be used up safely. No further opportunity can be allowed.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Domestic Credit

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each quarter since 1 January 1986 the contribution made to the expansion of domestic credit by the overseas sector.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to his earlier question on 9 November 1988 at column 240.

Smokeless Fuels

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to provide a tax incentive in favour of premium smokeless fuels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: Premium, smokeless fuel, like other forms of fuel and power, are zero-rated for VAT purposes. They are not liable to any other form of indirect taxation.

Disabled Persons (Staff)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of Her Majesty's Treasury staff are classed as disabled.

Mr. Brooke: The current figure for the Treasury is 1·4 per cent.

Overseas Assets

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the stock of net overseas assets.

Mr. Major: At the end of 1987 the United Kingdom's net stock of overseas assets was worth £89½ billion, or 21 per cent. of GDP. These assets generated earnings of £5½ billion in 1987. The surplus on invisibles in 1986 and 1987 was the largest in the world.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Civil Defence

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which local authorities have applied for grant-aid for the purpose of establishing, equipping or maintaining emergency centres, pursuant to regulation 4(1)(b) of the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983, since 2 December 1985;

(2) which local authorities have been given grant-aid for the purpose of establishing, equipping or maintaining emergency centres, pursuant to regulation 4(1)(b) of the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983, since 2 December 1985; and what was the amount of such grant.

Mr. John Patten: The local authorities which have applied for and been given grant aid for this purpose are listed. Details of grants paid in respect of these centres, for each local authority and over the particular period quoted, could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Counties and fire and civil defence authorities which have applied for and been given grant are as follows:
Avon, Bedfordshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Cambridgeshire, Cheshire, Cleveland, Clwyd, Cornwall, Cumbria, Derbyshire, Devon, Dorset, Durham, Dyfed, Essex, Mid Glamorgan, South Glamorgan, West Glamorgan, Gloucestershire, Greater Manchester, Gwent, Gwynedd, Hampshire, Hereford and Worcester, Hertfordshire, Humberside, Isle of Wight, Kent, Lancashire, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, London, Merseyside, Norfolk, Northamptonshire, Northumberland, Nottinghamshire, Oxfordshire, Powys, Shropshire (Salop), Somerset, Staffordshire, Suffolk, Surrey, East Sussex, West Sussex, Tyne and Wear, Warwickshire, West Midlands, Wiltshire, North Yorkshire.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which local authorities have applied for grant-aid for the purpose of establishing, equipping or maintaining emergency centres, pursuant to regulation 5(1)(c) of the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983, since 2 December 1985;

(2) which local authorities have been given grant-aid for the purpose of establishing, equipping or maintaining emergency centres, pursuant to regulation 5(1)(c) of the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983, since 2 December 1985; and what was the amount of such grant.

Mr. John Patten: Civil defence grant is normally claimed by county authorities and fire and civil defence authorities on behalf of district level authorities. The local authorities which have applied for and been given grant in respect of district level emergency centres are listed. Details of grant paid in respect of these centres, for each local authority and over the particular period quoted, could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Counties and fire and civil defence authorities which have applied for and been given grant are as follows:
Avon, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Cambridgeshire, Cleveland, Clwyd, Cornwall, Cumbria, Derbyshire, Devon, Dorset, Durham, Dyfed, Essex, Gloucestershire, Greater Manchester, Gwent, Gwynedd, Hampshire, Hereford and Worcester, Hertfordshire, Humberside, Isle of Wight, Kent, Lancashire, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, London, Merseyside, Norfolk, Northamptonshire, Northumberland, Nottinghamshire, Oxfordshire, Shropshire (Salop), Somerset, Staffordshire, Suffolk, Surrey, East Sussex, West Sussex, Tyne and Wear, Warwickshire, Wiltshire, North Yorkshire.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the annual spending on civil defence research and development over the past four years;

(2) what plans he has for future expenditure on civil defence research and development.

Mr. John Patten: Home Office expenditure on civil defence research and development (including scientific staff costs) for the past four years was as follows:

	£ million
1984-85	0·560
1985-86	1·192
1986-87	1·028

The estimate for 1988-89 is £1·015 million; proposed expenditure for future years is about £1·3 million per annum.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the numbers of members of staff employed for emergency planning in district authorities whose salary costs are funded either wholly or partly by Home Office civil defence grant.

Mr. John Patten: The total numbers of grant-aided local authority staff employed for emergency planning in England and Wales at 30 September 1988 were 499 emergency planning officers and 147 administrative and support staff. The great majority of these staff have some involvement in emergency planning in district authorities. The numbers employed directly by district authorities are 35 emergency planning officers and 10 administrative and support staff.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the report of his Department's review of the United Kingdom warning and monitoring organisation will be published; and whether he has considered the case for a moratorium on capital expenditure by the United Kingdom warning and monitoring organisation until the review report is available for consideration.

Mr. John Patten: We expect to publish shortly an account of the main findings of the review. During the course of the review, new capital expenditure on warning and monitoring was limited to items essential to the maintenance of the organisation's effectiveness and readiness for operation. Future capital programmes will be considered in the light of the review, taking fully into account the results of consultation with interested parties on its findings.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many members of staff are employed by each county council and fire and civil defence authority (a) as emergency planning officers and (b) as emergency planning team administrative and support staff.

Mr. John Patten: The numbers of civil defence grant-aided staff employed in England and Wales at 30 September 1988 were as follows:

Adults (Arrests)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the adult population in England and Wales were arrested in 1987.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available in the form requested. The latest available information relates to arrests of those aged 17 and over in England and Wales, excluding the Metropolitan police district, in 1987. There were 1·3 million such arrests among a population of the same age group of 33·5 million.

VAT

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessments he has made as to the likely effect on (a) his Department's capital building programme and (b) the rent the Department will pay under occupational leases of implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on value added tax on non-domestic buildings.

Mr. Hurd: Implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on VAT will have no effect on my Department's capital building programme, since compensating adjustments have been made to the relevant expenditure provisions. At this stage, before landlords have decided whether to exercise their option to tax rents, it is not possible to offer meaningful estimates of the effects of the judgment on rental costs.

Wild Birds

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last consulted the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds over the use of its database to identify prosecution cases including the killing, sale and smuggling of British birds of prey and other wild birds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Royal Society for the Protection of Birds wrote to the Home Office in July 1988 to seek assistance with the maintenance of its database. We consulted the Association of Chief Police Officers about this request. We understand from ACPO that the police service only rarely consults the RSPB database and we have informed the RSPB that in those circumstances Home Office assistance could not be justified.

Lindholme Prison (Disturbances)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what inquiries will be undertaken into the disturbances in Her Majesty's prison Lindholme in July by (a) Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons and (b) the prison's board of visitors; and when reports will be produced.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A full inquiry into the incident was conducted by the deputy director general of the prison service in July and a copy of his report is in the Library. Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons has not been invited to make any new inquiry, and I understand that Her Majesty's prison Lindholme board of visitors has no plans to do so.

POA (Deduction of Subscriptions)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why he has withdrawn the facility for allowing the voluntary deduction of Prison Officers Association subscriptions from members' pay.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The facility was suspended because the association, after due warning, has failed to take genuine steps to draw up and agree with prison service management a firm programme for ending national industrial action which has been taking place since 13 January 1988.

Women Police Surgeons (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the establishment requirement for women police surgeons in the South Yorkshire police force; and how many are in post.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Police surgeons are appointed by police authorities, which determine their own establishment requirements. No central record is maintained.

Passports (Cabinet)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which members of the Cabinet have been issued with the new common format passport.

Mr. Renton: United Kingdom passports in the European Community common format are at present held by the Home Secretary and the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary.

Asylum (Singhalese and Tamils)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to review the current level of political and inter-racial violence in Sri Lanka with regard to the application of criteria for granting of asylum to Singhalese and Tamils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The situation in Sri Lanka is kept under constant review. Applications for asylum from Sri Lankans, as for all nationalities, are considered on an individual basis and refugee status is granted to those who meet the criteria established by the 1951 convention. The Government remain of the view, however, that membership of any particular ethnic group in Sri Lanka does not of itself provide the basis of a claim to refugee status under the convention. Asylum applicants who fail to meet the requirements of the convention are liable to be returned to Sri Lanka. Exceptional leave to enter, or remain, in the United Kingdom may be considered taking into account all the individual circumstances of a case, including in particular an applicant's personal acceptability, the length of time he has been in the United Kingdom and any compassionate factors.

Driving While Disqualified

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions there were in England and Wales in 1987 for the offence of driving while disqualified; and what assessment he has made of the actual incidence of driving whilst disqualified which remains undetected.

Mr. John Patten: The number of findings of guilt for driving while disqualified is published annually in Home Office statistical bulletins, "Offences, relating to motor vehicles, England and Wales" (table 9 of issue 32/88 gives figures up to 1987). Further information is given in a companion volume of supplementary tables; the issue for 1987 will be published soon.

Information on the level of undetected offences of driving while disqualified is not available.

Vietnamese Refugees

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give a breakdown of Vietnamese refugees from Hong Kong admitted to the United Kingdom by each year, for the last 10 years.

Mr. Renton: The total numbers of south-east Asian refugees accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom in the years 1978 to 1987 and in the first half of 1988 are published in table 18 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 1987" (Cm. 415) and in table 3 of Home Office statistical bulletin "Control of Immigration; Statistics—Second Quarter 1988" (Issue 27/88). Separate figures are not available for the number of these refugees who have come from Hong Kong.

Prisoners (Repatriation)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the countries with which the United Kingdom has a reciprocal arrangement for the repatriation of prisoners to serve their sentences in their home countries.

Mr. John Patten: Austria, Canada, Cyprus, Denmark, Finland, France, Greece, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, the United States of America; and the following overseas territories: Anguilla, British Indian Ocean Territory, British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands, Falkland Islands, Gibraltar, Hong Kong, Montserrat, Pitcairn, Henderson, Ducie and Oeno Islands, St. Helena, St. Helena Dependencies, and the Sovereign Base Areas of Akrotiri and Dhekelia in the Island of Cyprus.

Broadcasting

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his White Paper, "Broadcasting in the 1990s," whether he will specify the criteria which will be used in assessing the diversity of programming.

Mr. Renton: The positive programming requirements will be spelt out in general terms in legislation, and it would be for the new Independent Television Commission to decide precisely how to apply them in practice.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many items of news reporting and current affairs which were broadcast on (a) BBC 1, (b) BBC 2, (c) ITV, (d) Channel 4, (e) independent local radio, (f) BBC Radio 1, 2, 3 or 4 and (g) BBC local radio have been affected by the order on restrictions on reporting from Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tim Renton: My right hon. Friend has given general directions to the BBC and the IBA requiring them to refrain from broadcasting direct statements by Northern Ireland terrorist organisations and their apologists. It is now for the BBC and the IBA to apply those directions. They are not, of course, required to make returns to my right hon. Friend about the effect of the directions. In any case, the directions do not prevent the second-hand reporting of events, only the coverage of direct broadcast statements.

Extradition

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many extradition requests have been received from the Republic of Ireland in each year since 1968 for (a) terrorist and terrorist-related offences and (b) other offences; and how many in each category have been refused in each year.

Mr. John Patten: The readily available information for extradition requests from the Republic of Ireland to England and Wales is given in the table. It is based on statistics provided by police forces.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many extradition requests have been received from Belgium in each year since 1968 for (a) terrorist and terrorist-related offences and (b) other offences; and how many in each category have been refused in each year.

Mr. John Patten: Since January 1968 the Belgian Government have made extradition requests to the United Kingdom in respect of 50 persons. Of these 26 were charged in connection with the Heysel stadium riot. No requests were for terrorist or terrorist-related offences. Requests relating to other offences were made in the following years:

	Number of requested persons	Refused

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of extraditions requested in each year since 1968 from Belgium for (a) terrorist and terrorist-related offences and (b) other offences; and how many requests in each category were refused in each year.

Mr. John Patten: Since January 1986 the Government have made extradition requests for 14 persons to be returned from Belgium. Only one request, made in 1988, was for terrorist or terrorist-related offences and this was refused. Requests relating to other offences were made in the following years:

	Number of requested persons	Refused

SCOTLAND

Public Bodies

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy on ministerial appointments to public bodies; if he will publish an up-to-date list of the quangos to which he nominates members, showing the level of public funding for each body and listing the individual members appointed by himself and showing any renumeration that they receive in connection with such membership; and if he will indicate any political allegiance that has been drawn to his attention in the nomination of candidates for such positions.

Mr. Rifkind: In making appointments to public bodies, I seek to draw from all sections of the community candidates who will be able to make a significant personal contribution to the body to which they are appointed. In all cases I expect to appoint the best person available.

The list of non-departmental bodies to which I make appointments is contained in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies", a copy of which is available in the Library. A new edition is to be published shortly. The list includes information about the public funding of each body and the remuneration paid to members. No consistent record is kept of the political affiliation of persons nominated for or appointed to public office.

The list of individuals appointed is too long for publication in Hansard. I will write to the hon. Member with the information requested and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland why officials of the Greater Glasgow health board came to London to meet the Scottish representatives of the Royal College of Nursing and Royal College of Midwives; what was the cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: These are matters for the health board, and I am asking the chairman to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland pursuant to his answer of 30 November, if he will instruct Greater Glasgow health board, under section 2 of the Health Services (Scotland) Act 1974, to provide him with the information requested in order that it can be made available to Parliament.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is no such Act. I understand that the information that the hon. Gentleman is seeking was made public by the health board through a press release on 28 November.

Water Research Council

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what will be the effects on the work in Scotland of the Water Research Council of the privatisation of the water industry in England and Wales;

(2) what representations he has received concerning the future role of the Water Research Council in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The organisation and work of the Water Research Centre is determined by its members, among them the Scottish water authorities and river purification boards. Arrangements are being made for the WRC to continue to serve the water industry, Government and other customers and for its work in Scotland to be maintained. No representations on the future role of WRC in Scotland have been received.

Health Service (Grading)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a breakdown of the new grading structure for nurses, midwives and health visitors broken down by grade, type of hospital including psychiatric, geriatric and acute, by district and region.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally and could be gathered only at disproportionate cost. I would, however, refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) on Thursday 1 December 1988, at column 342.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the date on which he first received grading projections from each health board on the new clinical structure for nurses, midwives and health visitors.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health boards' interim returns were received in the latter part of August and in September.

Domestic Assaults

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will instruct police forces to produce separate figures on the number of reported domestic assaults each year; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This matter is currently under consideration in consultation with the Association of Chief Police Officers (Scotland).

Schools

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will publish details of his proposals for allowing parents to take schools out of local authority control.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A paper is being issued today entitled "Self-Governing Schools—Extending Choice for Scottish Parents" describing proposals expected to provide the basis for forthcoming legislation. It is being made available to education authorities representative bodies, school councils, parent-teacher associations and the general public. Copies have been placed in the Library.

These proposals represent another major step towards greater choice in education. Opting for local self-management in place of central control by the education authority will create a new form of school. The school will remain in the public sector but will enjoy freedom to develop its own ethos under local management and to tailor provision to the needs of its pupils and the expectations of the local community.

The decision whether to seek self-governing status will be entirely for the parents at each individual school: there will be no pressure or obligation on any school to take this route against the wishes of parents. The paper we have now issued to education authorities and others provides fuller details of what would be involved. The main features are:

A self-governing school will remain part of the mainstream of education provision, publicly funded, open to all without qualifying examination or fees.

Self-governing schools will be subject to inspection to ensure that they provide a satisfactory standard of education.

The school will be managed, and its staff employed, by a board of management consisting of parents, staff and representatives of the wider community.

Funding will be by direct Government grant, set to match the resources which the school could reasonably have expected to receive if it had stayed under the management of the education authority.

EMPLOYMENT

Skill Training

67. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by what means he ensures that the needs of industry for a properly trained work force are met.

Mr. Cope: I refer the hon. Member to the White Paper "Employment in the 1990s" and the statement by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State of 5 December 1988.

Skills Shortages

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures his Department is taking to counteract the skills shortage in the south-east.

Mr. Cope: I refer the hon. Member to the chapter on training in White Paper "Employment in the 1990s" published by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on Monday 5 December.

Tourism

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he plans to meet the chairman of the English Tourist Board to discuss the expansion of the tourist industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend has no plans for a meeting with the chairman of the English Tourist Board on this subject.

Employment Training (Liverpool)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on Liverpool city council's participation in the employment training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: Liverpool city council is not taking part in employment training. Indeed, the council decided to punish local voluntary organisations and employers which did want to participate and the High Court has now ruled that this action is unlawful. Unlike Liverpool city council, the Government will continue to provide help through the quality training opportunities offered through employment training.

School Leavers

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the numbers of young people leaving school and being available for work in each of the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The most recent projected numbers of school leavers in Great Britain available for employment for academic years from 1988-89 to 1992-93 are as follows:

Projected number of school leavers in Great Britain available for employment[1]

Academic year ending 31 August	Thousands
1988-89	520
1989-90	490
1990-91	460
1991-92	440
1992-93	420

[1] Rounded to the nearest 10,000.

Careers Service (Funding)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the proposed allocation for the revised careers service strengthening scheme for 1989-90 and for 1988-89 for all local education authorities based on the current method of funding for specific posts.

Mr. Cope: The available information is given in the table below. For 1989-90 under the revised scheme, the figures are of provisional cash allocations; 1988-89 figures show the number of posts allocated. Grants to LEAs in 1988-89 depends on the number of posts allocated, the extent to which those posts are filled, the salary level of careers officers filling the posts and the level of grants payable for posts under the scheme. Estimates of the actual cash grants which will be paid to each individual authority as a result of these factors are not made. Allocations in 1989-90 are designed to provide a contribution to all careers service costs and are not related to numbers of posts.

Job Vacancies

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for employment if he will publish an analysis of known job vacancies in Greater Manchester by skill category required.

Mr. Lee: the following information is in the Library. The table shows the number of unfilled vacancies analysed by occupation at jobcentres in the Greater Manchester county on 7 October 1988.

Recent research has confirmed that, nationally, about a third of vacancies are notified to jobcentres.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of vacancies which exist by industrial classification in each of the constituencies in Greater Manchester; and if he will list other vacancies according to whatever similar criteria his Department uses for the same area.

Mr. Lee: The table gives the available information which is also in the Library. It shows the number of unfilled vacancies analysed by industry at jobcentres in the county of Greater Manchester on 5 August 1988, the latest available date. Vacancy statistics are collected by jobcentre area, and it is not possible to allocate the figures accurately by parliamentary constituency for Greater Manchester.

Recent research has confirmed that, nationally, about a third of vacancies are notified to jobcentres.

Coal Industry (Accidents)

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether, in view of the accident rates of contractors to British Coal, he will take any measures to improve safety records of those companies through stricter enforcement of the relevant legislation.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) enforce the Health and Safety at Work Etc. Act 1974 and other legislation as it applies to contractors and their employees within mines. This Act and the Mines and Quarries Act 1954 also require British Coal and its managers to ensure the safety of contractors. British Coal has also recently taken action with its major contractors to improve safety standards and safety awareness.

Children (Insurance Cover)

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to seek to amend section 2 of the Employers Liability (Compulsory Insurance) Act 1969 so as to provide for compulsory insurance cover for children employed by their relatives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no plans to seek to amend section 2 of the Act.

Mining Industry (Accidents)

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the rate of fatal and major injury accidents of (a) British Coal employees and (b) employees contracted to British Coal expressed as a ratio of accidents to total numbers employed in each category.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the rate of (i) deaths and (ii) serious accidents in the mining industry per 100,000 workers in each year since 1970.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is listed in the table:

Opencast Mining

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if any investigation has been made of health problems arising from the close proximity of people to opencast mining; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I am not aware of any authoritative survey or investigation into links between opencast mining and illness in people living nearby. There is no firm evidence that such a study would be worthwhile. However the Health and Safety Executive will continue to monitor the position and will take account of any new evidence that may emerge.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give details of the impact of changes in the method of calculating unemployment figures since 1979 on the figures for the Stretford constituency.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is not available for areas smaller than standard planning regions.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing what information he has for Greater Manchester as to the average weekly wage for (a) full-time male employees, (b) part-time male employees, (c) full-time female employees and (d) part-time female employees in both cash terms and real terms based on 1987-88 prices, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the unemployment figures for each quarter from 1971 onwards, calculated on the same basis as last week's figures and publish alongside them the figures released at each quarter by his Department.

Mr. Lee: The table shows the latest seasonally adjusted unemployment figures consistent with the current coverage, together with the seasonally adjusted unemployment figures as published at the time for the United Kingdom, quarterly from January 1971.

Tourism

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans the Government have to increase employment in the tourism industry in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the south; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The Government will continue with the sound economic policies that have helped to establish an enterprise economy which is generating sustained growth. The Government's role in developing the tourism industry in England is being considered as part of the review announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on July 18.

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the total amount spent on tourism and leisure developments in the first six months of 1988; what are the figures compared with those for the previous six month period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The English tourist board's "Tourism Investment Report" shows that the total amount spent on projects with a value of £0·5 million or more which were completed in the period January to June 1988 was £247 million. Investment in projects under construction during the periods January to June 1988 and July to December 1987 amounted to £1,737 million and £1,005 million respectively.

VAT

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessments he has made as to the likely effect on (a) his Department's capital building programme and (b) the rent the Department will pay under occupational leases, of implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on value added tax on non-domestic buildings.

Mr. Cope: Implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on VAT will have no effect on my Department's capital building programme, since compensating adjustments have been made to the relevant expenditure provisions. At this stage, before landlords have decided whether to exercise their option to tax rents, it is not possible to offer meaningful estimates of the effects of the judgment on rental costs.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sea Defences

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the annual cost of sea defences in the United Kingdom from 1979 to the present year.

Mr. Ryder: Annual capital costs of sea defence works from 1979 to the present year in England, Wales and Northern Ireland which attracted Government funding are as follows:

£ million

	England (estimated)	Northern Ireland	Wales
1979-80	18·3	n/a	0·427
1980-81	15·8	n/a	0·274
1981-82	16·7	0·078	0·225
1982-83	18·4	0·128	0·289
1983-84	23·0	0·214	0·757
1984-85	20·0	0·311	0·798
1985-86	17·9	0·304	0·121
1986-87	23·6	0·149	0·175
1987-88	27·6	0·122	0·058

Coastal works in Scotland are carried out primarily to prevent erosion rather than to defend land against flooding from the sea, and, hence, expenditure has not been included.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current level of expenditure required to bring United Kingdom sea defences up to present day satisfactory levels.

Mr. Ryder: As a result of a comprehensive review of flood defence requiremens in England which was carried out recently, the need for an increased long-term programme of work was identified. The Government recently agreed to increase provision for the programme and this will facilitate additional capital funding of about £50 million over the next three years for local and water authority schemes both inland and on the coast; approximately half of this expenditure will be spent on sea defence works.

From 1989 to 1992 it is estimated that capital funding for sea defence works in Wales and Northern Ireland will be £335,000 and £331,000 respectively. In Scotland work is necessary primarily for inland fluvial and coastal erosion works; no significant sea defence works are anticipated.

Greenhouse Effect

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to establish the long term effects of the greenhouse effect on British coastlines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: A rise in the mean sea level is the main possible consequence of the greenhouse effect on British coastlines. A national research programme, led by the Department of the Environment and co-ordinated with European Community and world-wide research, is investigating the implications for the United Kingdom of the greenhouse effect. The results will be monitored carefully, particularly with regard to predictions of changes in mean sea level and the implications for the design of sea defences. The existing tide gauge network already provides useful information on actual changes in sea level.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the annual budget devoted by his Department to the investigation of the effects of the greenhouse effect and freak weather conditions on Britain's coastline.

Mr. Ryder: Responsibility for research into the greenhouse effect and its consequences rests primarily with the Department of the Environment, although my Department maintains close liaison on these matters. Some £2 million is spent annually by my Department on river and coastal research generally, of which about 60 per cent. is directed to research which will assist with the future planning and design of coastal defences.

Sea Level

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the projected sea level rises for the mid 21st century; and what would be the corresponding effects to the British coastline.

Mr. Ryder: There is, at the moment, a wide range of predictions about the possible rise in sea levels. Because of the many uncertainties, however, it is not realistic to make firm assessments of the likely effects on the coastline.

Bristol Channel (Sludge Dumping)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the environmental impact of the dumping of sludge in the Bristol channel south of Pwlldu Head; and if his Department will publish the studies that have been carried out in this area.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Scientists from my Department's directorate of fisheries research undertake a regular monitoring programme at the sewage sludge disposal ground in the Bristol channel. Results of this work have been published in Fisheries Research Technical Report number 59.

Further information on the quality of fish and shellfish in the Bristol channel have been published in Aquatic Environment Monitoring reports numbers 10 and 16. All these publications are available in the Library of the House.

Salmonella

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether funds will continue to be provided for Dr. Geoff Mead at the Institute of Food Research in Bristol and his work on the introduction of benign bacteria to chickens to kill salmonella organisms; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how much grant has been paid to Dr. Geoff Mead at the Institute of Food Research for research into the suppression of salmonella organisms; what results have been obtained; whether further grant aid has been requested; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Ryder: The research conducted by Dr. Geoff Mead and his team of scientists over more than 10 years into the manipulation of microbial flora of the gut of young chickens has been supported by my Department and the Agricultural and Food Research Council at a current cost of about £100,000 annually. As stated in my reply to the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham), this work was reviewed as part of an extensive review of MAFF-commissioned research in microbiology and it was decided that funding should cease from April 1989. Since my reply to the hon. Member I understand that a commercial company has expressed interest in taking that work further. Funding is to be diverted to other important microbiological work.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the proportion of eggs produced in England which are infected with salmonella.

Mr. Key: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Fod what proportion of British egg production is now infected with salmonella.

Mr. Ryder: I regret that it is not possible to make a precise estimate, but I agree with what my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health told the House on 5 December at column 19—that the risk of infection to any individual is small and the risk to the healthy adult is small indeed. The industry and the Government are working together urgently to reduce that risk to a minimum.

Food Additives

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the safety, or otherwise, of the use of "E" numbered substances in processed foods; if he will examine latest reports on such substances from other countries, including the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: All available world-wide information on the safety of food additives is assessed by the committees of independent experts who advise me on these matters. Any information which might subsequently affect the approval of any food additive is carefully reviewed. The prefix "E" indicates those food additives whose use has been approved throughout the European Community.

Badgers

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will arrange for the area of some farms where a breakdown or breakdowns involving bovine tuberculosis has occurred to be exempt from badger control to enable an assessment of the control programme to be made.

Mr. Donald Thompson: An experimental area already exists where badgers are not removed when TB breakdowns in cattle occur. This area, which is in Gloucestershire, contains 18 farms which are not subject to badger control.

The creation of additional areas comparable with the Gloucestershire study area was considered by Professor Dunnet in his review of the badger control strategy in 1986. He concluded that the cost of maintaining such areas made the proposal impractical.

The current badger control strategy is that recommended by Professor Dunnet. It is kept under review, but in accordance with Professor Dunnet's recommendation it needs to operate for at least three years before a reliable review of its effects on the extent of herd breakdowns can be carried out.

Shellfish

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the results of the recent survey into shellfish stocks in the English channel; and whether he intends to take any action to conserve stocks.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department is currently investigating the state of crab stocks in the English channel for which a major sampling programme has just been completed. The scallop fishery is also being investigated. Both investigations are due to be completed in 1990 and the results will be published.

Disabled Persons (Staff)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of his Ministry's staff are classed as disabled.

Mr. Donald Thompson: 1·3 per cent. of the Ministry's permanent staff are registered disabled—as at 1 November 1988.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agricuture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide details of expenditure in 1987-88 and 1988-89 by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce and the agricultural departments on market regulation under the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Ryder: Details are given of the outturn for 1987-88 and the latest forecast of outturn for 1988-89.

Total	170·0	315·8
Grand total	1,392·9	1,239·7

Some of the expenditure shown benefits consumers and trade interests rather than United Kingdom producers.

The figures for the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce are made up of several elements and include refunds on intra-Community trade, import and export refunds on third country trade, the beef and sheep variable premium schemes (net of clawback for sheepmeat and charges on beef exported and sold into intervention), aid for private storage and animal feed, certain other marketing and production subsidies and the cost of purchasing commodities into intervention less proceeds from sales. The figures are also net of other receipts treated as negative expenditure, namely monetary compensatory amounts levied on intra-Community trade (in the case of pigmeat these exceeded expenditure prior to 1988-89), the co-responsibility and supplementary levies on milk producers and the co-responsibility levy on cereals. Receipts from levies on the production and storage of sugar and isoglucose and on third country exports, which are regarded as Community own resources, are excluded. The figures include the United Kingdom share of the EC school milk subsidy scheme.

For the annual premium on ewes from the 1985 marketing year, late publication of the final rate of payment has delayed the making of some payments into the following year. The forecast for 1988-89 provides for slippage from the 1987 marketing year and payment for the 1988 marketing year in full.

Of the estimated outturn for 1988-89 £1,507·4 million is expected to be financed from the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund (EAGGF); in 1987-88 £1,086·7 million was thus financed. However, because the United Kingdom is a net contributor to the European Community budget, the whole of this expenditure is attributable to the Exchequer. Receipts from the European Community do not always relate to expenditure in the period. For market support there was prior to 1987 little delay in reimbursement of expenditure but in that year a delay of two months was introduced as an economy measure and this was lengthened to two and a half months from 1988. Receipts for 1988-89 reflect new arrangements for the depreciation of stocks agreed at the February 1988 European Council.

The individual totals may not add up due to rounding.

Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of expenditure in 1987-88 and 1988-89 by the agricultural department on agricultural grants and subsidies excluding regulation under the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Ryder: Details are given of the outturn for 1987-88 and the latest forecast of outturn for 1988-90.

Some of this expenditure attracts contributions from the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund. These are mainly received in the following year. In 1988-89 £44·1 million is expected to be received from the fund compared with £41 million in 1987-88.

The individual figures may not add up to the totals shown due to roundings.

TRANSPORT

Train Times

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to how many trains arrived at exactly the scheduled time in the last 12-month period for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested. The punctuality objective for Network South East (NSE) is that 90 per cent. of trains should arrive on time or within five minutes; for the provincial sector, that 85-97 per cent. of trains should arrive on time or within five minutes depending on the service; and for InterCity that 90 per cent. of trains should arrive on time or within 10 minutes. In 1987-88, NSE exceeded the agreed punctuality objective with 92 per cent. of services arriving on time or within five minutes. 97 per cent. of provincial services achieved the objective, and InterCity performance fell some way short of its target at 87 per cent.

VAT

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessments he has made as to the likely effect on (a) his Department's capital building programme and (b) the rent the Department will pay under occupational leases of implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on value added tax on non-domestic buildings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on VAT will have no effect on the Department's capital building programme since compensating adjustments have been made to the relevant expenditure provisions. At this stage, before landlords have decided whether to exercise their option to tax rents, it is not possible to offer estimates of the effects of the judgment on rental costs.

Road Renewal

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many miles of motorway it is intended to renew in 1988-89;

(2) how many miles of trunk road it is intended to renew in 1988-89;

(3) how many miles of motorway it is intended to renew in each of the three years 1989-90, 1990-91, and 1991-92;

(4) how many miles of trunk road it is intended to renew in each of the three years 1989-90, 1990-91, and 1991-92.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The mileages of motorways and trunk roads renewed this year are likely to be about 52 and 106, respectively. These are lower than planned as a result of the rescheduling of capital maintenance announced on 20 June at column 455.

I am looking to competition between contractors to contain future price increases, so far as possible.

Subject to that, we shall aim to increase the mileages to be renewed each year over the next three years to averages of 84 miles of motorway and 233 miles of trunk road. The maintenance programme for 1989-90 has not been finalised. It will be announced in March as usual.

London Assessment Study

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which of the options listed in the east London assessment study stage 2a report he has instructed Ove Arup and partners to develop during the east London assessment study stage 2b.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have not yet taken any view on the preliminary options produced by the study consultants. This must await the submission of the consultant's report in the summer 1989.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many representations he has received opposing options presented in the stage 2a reports of the London assessment study;

(2) how many representations he has received supporting the general principle of the London assessment study since the publication of the stage 2a reports in August; and from what types of organisations these have been received.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have received about 600 representations expressing concern about some of the study options. Organisations supported some options and opposed others.

M1 (Accidents)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many reported accidents have occurred on the M1 between London and Derby, junction 25, for the last period of 12 months for which figures are available; and what were the figures for (a) 12 months earlier, (b) five years earlier and (c) 10 years earlier.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The numbers of injury accidents on the M1 between London, junction 1, and Derby, junction 25, for the requested years are shown in the table.

Injury Accidents on M1: between Junctions 1 and 25: 1977, 1982, 1986, 1987

Year	Accidents
1977	590
1982	616
1986	685
1987	721

Channel Tunnel

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what role he expects the Kent county council to play in specifying the physical and acoustic characteristics of the associated environmental works that would form part of the capital cost of British Rail's proposed high-speed line between London and the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: I expect British Rail's proposals to be the subject of consultation with Kent county council.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, if British Rail's proposed high-speed line between London and the Channel tunnel is financed in the public sector, the costs of all forms of compensation to the owner of properties affected, both that already paid or to be paid under British Rail's ex-gratia scheme and that to be paid statutorily, will form part of the capital cost of the project for the purpose of calculating the rate of return.

Mr. Portillo: It is normal practice for all the costs associated with British Rail investment proposals to be taken into account for the purposes of assessing the viability of those proposals. The same is true of road schemes.

Traffic Congestion

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the causes of the severe traffic congestion in the east end of London on Friday 2 December.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A number of incidents contributed to the evening traffic congestion in east London on 2 December.

In particular an accident on the westbound carriageway of A13 Canning Town flyover meant that westbound traffic was restricted to one lane for one and three quarter hours from 3.34 pm.

Manchester Airport

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what progress has been made in the negotiations on the construction of a rail link to Manchester airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I am awaiting a jointly agreed statement on the financing of this link from Greater Manchester PTE, British Rail, and Manchester international airport.

Atomic Weapons Establishment (Explosion)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what road closures followed the explosion at the Atomic Weapons Establishment at Burghfield on Friday 2 December.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There were no road closures.

Level Crossings

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the recommended period of time before the arrival of a train for the closing of fully manned level crossing gates.

Mr. Portillo: There is no standard recommended time for the closure of fully manned level crossing gates before the arrival of a train. The signalman should, however, close the gates in time to clear the railway signals interlocked with them so that the train approaching the crossing can do so without reducing its speed.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of London Regional Transport, he will discuss the practice of making the cheap price capital visitors' card available exclusively to British Rail passengers.

Mr. Portillo: Ticketing is a commercial matter for London Regional Transport.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Places

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many appeals to local authorities have been lodged so far during 1988 against the allocation of school places; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: This information is not available. An informal survey of local education authorities carried out by the Department in the late autumn of 1987 indicated that there had been in that year 8,253 appeals against school admission decisions to committees set up by local education authorities under section 7 of the Education Act 1980. 3,177 of these appeals were in respect of primary schools and 5,076 for secondaries. In addition, a total of at least 2,245 appeals against admission decisions were made to committees set up by governors of voluntary-aided and special agreement schools during 1987, 469 in respect of primary schools and 1,776 for secondaries.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretry of State for Education and Science if he will list all the schools which receive pupils paid for in whole or part under the assisted places scheme and the number of assisted place pupils each school had in 1987-88.

Mr. Butcher: The information requested is as follows:

Independent Schools (Costs)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the local education authorities which pay for places for pupils residing in their areas to attend independent schools, excluding special schools; and what are the numbers of pupils each supported in whole or in part during 1987-88.

Mr. Butcher: On the basis of returns made to the Department by local education authorities in January 1988 the numbers of pupils being funded by local education authorities to attend independent schools, excluding pupils either at special schools or receiving special educational treatment, were as follows:

Schools (Status)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report, specifying in each case the local authorities concerned, the voluntary body concerned and the name, composition and status of the schools, those schools which from 1980 to the latest date for which information is available, have changed from (a) independent to voluntary status and (b) voluntary to independent.

Mr. Butcher: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Children (Special Needs)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to publish a consultative document on the educational needs of children with a dual sensory impairment.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend intends to publish a policy statement shortly.

DEFENCE

Expenditure

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total of United Kingdom defence spending since 1958 up to and including 1988-89 (a) in cash and (b) at today's prices.

Mr. Freeman: Total defence expenditure since 1958, including Supply Estimates provision for 1988-89, has been £219 billion in cash and £600 billion at 1988-89 prices, using defence-specific price deflators.

Plutonium

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contingency plans his Department has made for the production of military plutonium following the decommissioning of Chapelcross and Calder Hall nuclear power stations.

Mr. Sainsbury: The long-term future of these reactors and any defence requirement for their replacement will be kept under review as appropriate.

Atomic Weapons Establishment, Burghfield

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what caused the explosion at the Atomic Weapons Establishment at Burghfield in Berkshire on Friday 2 December; at what time the explosion occurred; if there were any casualties; and what damage was caused to property at Burghfield and in the surrounding area;

(2) if it is normal practice to burn surplus high explosives at Burghfield; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what information was given to the media following the explosion at the Atomic Weapons Establishment at Burghfield on Friday 2 December.

Mr. Sainsbury: A minor unplanned explosion occurred at AWE Burghfield at 0606 on the morning of 2 December. It took place during the routine burning of surplus conventional explosive waste on a special open site, within the main boundary fence, which is normally used for this purpose. There was no personal injury and no danger to the work force or public at any time. Such burning is controlled remotely and is carried out when the work force is not present as an additional safety precaution. The slight damage sustained on site was localised to a few broken windows and, to the best of our knowledge, no damage was caused outside the establishment. No radioactive material was involved or in any way at risk in this incident.

The handling and disposal of the explosives are governed by strict controls laid down by the Defence Safety Services Organisation (DSSO). These regulations and checks cover such matters as safety distances, warnings, demarcation, access, emergency services, procedures and records. The DSSO had licensed AWE Burghfield to carry out explosive disposal in recognition of their compliance with these standards but such work has now been suspended while a detailed enquiry is conducted into the cause of the explosion. Security considerations preclude publication of the enquiry report though the local trades unions will be fully involved.

The site's own emergency services were on hand but were not required to take any immediate action as there was no fire and no continuing emergency. Likewise, the local fire brigade and police were alerted automatically but took no action on arrival. The essential facts were made available to the media promptly.

Hong Kong (Explosion)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cause of the explosion in Hong Kong on Monday 5 December which killed two service men.

Mr. Freeman: There was an explosion at Cassino Lines, in the New Territories, Hong Kong, on Sunday 4 December at 11.22 hours local time, in which one officer was killed and another seriously injured. Initial investigations suggested that the explosion was caused by a hand grenade. The Royal Military Police and Royal Hong Kong Police are conducting a joint investigation, and have announced that the case is being treated as murder. There is thought to be little likelihood of terrorist involvement.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Holiday Visits

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the approximate cost of holiday visit passages paid in respect of (a) children of the Ministry of Overseas Development personnel and (b) children of technical co-operation officers in receipt of education allowances for the latest available year.

Mr. Chris Patten: The latest year for which figures are available is 1987-88. In that year, the cost of holiday visit passages for children of staff of the Overseas Development Administration (formerly the Ministry of Overseas Development) was £22,200. For children of all personnel financed from technical co-operation funds, including technical co-operation officers and supplementees, the cost was £990,000.

THE ARTS

Vishnu (Statues)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what steps he has taken to establish the legal provenance of the two statues of Vishnu which were sold at Sotheby's on 14 November.

Mr. Luce: It would be inappropriate for me to interfere in commercial matters. It is for the parties involved to satisfy themselves on the legal position.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will consider the contents of the United Nations Educational Scientific and Cultural Organisation convention of 14 November 1970 on the means of prohibiting and preventing the illicit import and export, and transfer of ownership, of cultural property, in relation to the sale of two statues of Vishnu at Sotheby's on 14 November.

Mr. Luce: Her Majesty's Government are not a party to this convention.

British Library

Mr. Buchan: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many seats the public auditorium in the new British Library building at St. Pancras will have.

Mr. Luce: The auditorium of the new British Library, currently under construction at St. Pancras, will contain 255 seats. Additionally, there will be spaces for five wheelchairs for the disabled.

Mr. Buchan: To ask the Minister for the Arts what was the reason for the cost escalation in the first phase of the Corn Merchant's Stores conversion at the British Library, Boston Spa, from £600,000 in November 1986 to a final cost of £2·309 million in 1988.

Mr. Luce: The figure of £600,000 to which I referred in answer to the question from my hon. Friend the Member for Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson) on 17 November 1986 at column 30 was not an estimate of the cost of the conversion of the Corn Merchant's Stores but was the Government's earmarked funding for the project for 1987-88. This was part of a total Government commitment of £1·6 million over three years, the balance of the cost being contributed by the British Library. There was no material change in the estimated cost of the project between 1986 and 1988.

Mr. Buchan: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the total area of office accommodation for British Library staff in phase I of the new St. Pancras building.

Mr. Luce: It is planned to build 1,839 sq m of office space in stage 1A of the new British Library building. This area includes all associated circulation space.

Stage 1A is currently under construction and will be completed in 1993. The amount of office accommodation space to be included in the completion phase is not yet known.

Mr. Buchan: To ask the Minister for the Arts when the British Library's strategic plan for business information will be published.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 4 July 1988 at column 469.

Mr. Buchan: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether the open access shelving provisions and reader seats for science and technology readers in the phase I St. Pancras building will be less or more than the present provisions in the Holborn reading rooms.

Mr. Luce: There are in total 144 reader desks in the two science reference and information services (SRIS) building at Holborn; this provision compares with 178 standard reader desks which will be available at St. Pancras by 1993, with some 60 additional desks planned to be available by 1996. In addition, stools are provided at Holborn, but are not yet a formal part of the St. Pancras brief.

The length of open access shelving at Holborn is approximately 11·7 km. This compares with 12·6 km which will be available at St. Pancras in 1993, with some 6 km of additional shelving by 1996.

Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he is able to announce the publication date of the report of the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art for the year ended 30 June.

Mr. Luce: I have today presented the 34th report of the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art for 1987-88. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of Parliament.

Arts Support

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he is satisfied that the present arrangements for the support of the arts through the Arts Council and the regional arts associations in England are adequate to meet changing needs.

Mr. Luce: I believe that the time has come to review the existing structure in the light of recent changes and present developments. After consultation with the chairman of the Arts Council, Lord Rees-Mogg, and his successor designate, Mr. Peter Palumbo, I have invited Mr. Richard Wilding, the present head of the Office of Arts and Libraries who retires from the public service at the end of this month, to conduct a review in consultation with the parties concerned and to report to me by 31 October 1989.

The review will be primarily concerned with the structure of support, and the way in which the various parts of the system fit together. It will be conducted on the basis that the arm's-length principle will continue to govern the allocation of money within a given total and the making of artistic judgments, and that a substantial amount of decision-making should continue to take place at the regional level. Existing arrangements in Scotland and Wales will not be affected by the review.

The thinking that underlies the commissioning of the review and the scope that I wish it to cover are set out at greater length in a letter which I have today sent to Lord Rees-Mogg. I am placing a copy of the letter in the Library.

Mr. Wilding will carry out wide consultations in the course of the review. Any person or body wishing to contribute views or comments is invited to write to him, care of the Office of Arts and Libraries, Horse Guards Road, London SW1P 3AL.

THE ARTS

Public Libraries

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) when he intends to publish his response to the submissions he has received on his Green Paper on the future financing of public libraries;

(2) whether it is his intention to introduce legislation in this current session of Parliament implementing his proposals on the future financing of public libraries.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 7 December 1988]: I expect to make a statement shortly after the Christmas recess.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Ministers' Pay

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement about Ministers' pay.

Mr. Wakeham: The salaries of Ministers and other paid office holders were last increased from 1 January 1988 under the terms of the Ministerial and other Salaries Order 1987, and will remain at these levels until they are changed by a new order. The Government have considered possible changes to ministerial salaries in the light of the increase in the salaries of Members of Parliament that will take place on 1 January 1989 according to the terms of the resolution of 21 July 1987. The Government propose a package of increases averaging 4½ per cent. This is set out in the following table. I have today laid the draft Ministerial and other Salaries Order 1988 to implement these changes.

[1] The Prime Minister has elected to receive the same salary as a Cabinet Minister in the House of Commons.

Note: The Lord Chancellor's salary is governed by the Lord Chancellor's Salary Order 1988 and is not affected by this Order. (He receives £87,250 effective from 1 October 1988).

Theft

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many articles have been reported stolen from the Palace of Westminster during the last 12 months; and if he will list them.

Mr. Wakeham: There have been 40 cases of theft within the Palace of Westminster reported to the police in the last 12 months.

Of these 40 reported, three cases were subsequently classified as "no crime" in that the property mentioned had either been recovered by the losers or found by members of staff. The details of the 37 remaining cases are:

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Professional Liability

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to announce the conclusions of his Department's study to establish the nature, scope, extent and implications of professional liability problems.

Mr. Maude: I expect the report of the studies of professional liability problems to be submitted to me in the spring.

Restrictive Trade Practices

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to announce his conclusions of the review into restrictive trade practices policy.

Mr. Maude: In the first part of next year.

British Overseas Trade Board

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what reductions in staff of the British Overseas Trade Board there have been in the past two years.

Mr. Alan Clark: The staff allocations in the Department's overseas trade divisions will have increased from 770 on 1 April to 775 on 1 April 1989.

Fuzzy Logic

Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the implications for the computer software industry of developments in fuzzy logic.

Mr. North: Fuzzy logic is potentially valuable in areas of computation which call for "human-like" reasoning based on qualitative or imprecise information, for example speech and vision systems, expert systems technology and database interrogation. Many of the developments are still in their infancy, though a few are now maturing in the expert system and database field. Such concepts can complement other advanced tools and methods to enable the computer software industry to develop novel and powerful applications. I am sure that the industry will take advantage of these opportunities as they present themselves.

Financial Services Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what specialist training is given to those officers of his Department who are responsible for the monitoring of the financial services industry.

Mr. Maude: The effect of the Financial Services Act is that monitoring of the financial services industry is a matter for the Securities and Investments Board and the bodies recognised by it. Questions as to the training of officers of those bodies are for the bodies themselves.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has concerning the training and qualifications of the officers and personnel of FIMBRA and other self-regulatory organisations responsible for vetting membership applications for FIMBRA and those other organisations.

Mr. Maude: This is a matter for FIMBRA and the Securities and Investments Board.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what information he has concerning the proportion of the income of FIMBRA that is allocated to the investigation of the background of those companies seeking membership;

(2) if he will list all those companies or individuals who have been suspended by FIMBRA or any other self-regulatory organisation and indicate in each case the reason for that suspension.

Mr. Maude: This is a matter for FIMBRA.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how regularly he and the officers of his Department meet with FIMBRA and other self-regulatory organisations.

Mr. Maude: Frequently.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many representations his Department has received concerning the work of FIMBRA since its establishment.

Mr. Maude: The information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy to require self-regulatory organisations automatically to inform his Department of applications which they receive for membership.

Mr. Maude: No.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to review the self-regulatory aspects of the financial services legislation.

Mr. Maude: No.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on what date his Department first adopted the policy of automatically contacting NASDIM about applicants for licensing by his Department under past financial services legislation; and on what date NASDIM was first recognised as an acceptable alternative to licensing by his Department.

Mr. Maude: The Department maintained a list of bodies which it automatically consulted when it received an application for a licence to deal in securities under the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act 1958. NASDIM was added to this list at the beginning of 1985. The order declaring NASDIM a recognised association of dealers in securities under section 15 of the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act was made on 28 November 1983 and came into effect on 31 December 1983.

National Engineering Laboratory

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the main planning authority for development of the national engineering laboratory site at East Kilbride.

Mr. Maude: The East Kilbride district council is the statutory planning authority for the area in which the national engineering laboratory is situated.

North Peckham Task Force

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will specify the feasibility studies undertaken by the north Peckham task force; how much each cost; and what was the outcome of each study.

Mr. Newton: Since 30 November 1988, out of a total of 95 projects approved at a cost to the task force of £2,570,113, the following were undertaken as feasibility studies:

Technobus

£6,250 was paid to South Bank polytechnic for research into the cost of setting up a bus which would deliver new technology training on local estates. The report was completed, and circulated to interested parties, but in view of the setting up and running costs (£120,000 in the first year) the task force decided not to proceed with the scheme.

Peckham Industrial Association

£3,500 was paid to this organisation to look into the viability of converting disused shipping containers into low cost portable units for community use. In the light of the feasibility study the task force took no further action.

Sojourner Truth Youth Association (STYA)

The task force has paid for two studies on behalf of this local black organisation. Community Land and Workspace Ltd. (CLAWS) were given £1,500 to prepare a study into the use of St. Luke's school as a multifunctional base. The results were passed to STYA to use as a basis to support their bid to Southwark council for funds to convert the school. In addition £9,941 went to First Step Associates to look at the viability of a number of training proposals that STYA intend to run. Discussions with STYA are continuing with a view to developing the training aspects of the project.

City Technology Centre

£13,000 was given to Science City to look into the feasibility of setting up high tech workspace units in the task force area. The report was completed and passed to the task force, and the key proposal of seedcorn investment funding was adopted by the Peckham Enterprise centre, funded by the task force.

URBED

£27,370 was provided to this consultancy to develop a strategy to help reverse the decline of Rye lane as a shopping centre. The report was recently completed and the task force has provided funding to the Peckham Traders Association, one of whose key aims is to implement the URBED recommendations, working closely with the council and other bodies. In addition the task force is talking to URBED about further work.

Southwark Architects

£3,000 was paid to Southwark council to prepare a report into the development of a community training facility in the Gloucester grove estate on behalf of the Gloucester Grove Tenants Association. The report has been prepared, but detailed cosings are still being awaited, before exploring possible funding avenues.

Forest of London

£4,500 has been approved to this group to look into the feasibility of running a training project in arboriculture and landscaping. The task force awaits the final report.

Southwark Chamber of Commerce

£1,000 was paid to this group for research into the costs and possible funding sources of setting up a tourist information centre in Southwark. Subsequently, with help from the City action team, a tourist information centre was established in north Southwark.

LENTA

£27,000 was paid to LENTA to carry out a study into four sites in the Peckham area (The Spike, Melon road, the LEB sub-station, the Lomond grove business centre) with potential for use as managed workspace. Of these sites, the task force is still pursuing Melon road and the Spike in consultation with the council and other bodies; the Lomond grove centre became the Camberwell business centre under the direct control of LENTA; the task force decided not to take any further action on the LEB building.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster for how long the north Peckham task force will be continuing with its work.

Mr. Newton: The task force continues to make good progress. In common with all Government task forces it is not intended to be permanent. There are however no plans at present for its closure.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the budget of expenditure on local projects by the north Peckham task force in (a) 1988-89, (b) 1989-90, (c) 1990-91 and (d) 1991-92.

Mr. Newton: The north Peckham task force in common with the other Government task forces does not have an individual budget. It does, however, have access to a common budget for all task forces which is £16 million for 1988-89 and has been set at £18·5 million for 1989-90. Figures for 1990-91 and 1991-92 will remain at similar levels.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will list in respect of the north Peckham task force (a) the local projects supported, (b) the amount of money committed to each project and (c) the amount of committed money spent on each project;

(2) if he will state in respect of each project supported by the north Peckham task force the amount of money (a) committed and (b) spent by (i) the task force, (ii) other government sources, (iii) the London borough of Southwark, (iv) the Inner London Education Authority, (v) the Housing Corporation, (vi) English Heritage, (vii) any other public sources and (viii) any other private sources.

Mr. Newton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what were the objectives of the north Peckham task force when it was first set up; and whether those objectives have been changed during the course of its work.

Mr. Newton: The main objectives, which the north Peckham task force shares with the other 16 task forces, are to:

—provide more jobs for local people by identifying and removing impediments to their recruitment by local employers, and by encouraging local enterprise development.

—encourage and facilitate enterprise by local people through the provision of enterprise training, financial and managerial assistance.

—improve the employability of local people, including those about to enter the labour market, by training programmes aimed at specific employment opportunities or identified gaps in the labour market.

—support initiatives designed to improve the environment, the provision of community services and to reduce the level of crime where these can be linked to the reintegration of local people into local economic activity.

The objectives have not been changed.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the names and biographical details of each member of (a) the north Peckham task force community forum and (b) the north Peckham task force community forum working party.

Mr. Newton: These organisations are independent bodies which are not related to the north Peckham task force. The information requested is a matter for the organisations themselves.

Wool

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he plans to continue the levy upon the wool textile industry for export promotion administered by the Wool Textile Export Corporation; how much has been raised by the levy in each of the last five years; what representations he has received about any proposal to abolish the levy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: It was announced in the White Paper "Releasing Enterprise" (Cm. 512) on 2 November that there would be consultation on the future of the wool textile industry (export promotion) levy. A consultation period lasting three months, ending on 31 January 1989, has now begun. Thereafter, Ministers will reach a decision on whether the levy should continue in its current statutory form and, if appropriate, lay proposals before Parliament. Representations have been received by officials from the National Wool Textile Export Corporation. The following amounts have been raised by the levy in the last five financial years:

Year ending 31 March	£
1984	331,136
1985	346,406
1986	380,103
1987	405,045
1988	424,811

British Steel

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster why certain households were excluded from the direct mailing shot giving details of the British Steel share offer.

Mr. Atkins: The direct mail shot for the British Steel offer was sent to existing shareholders in major United Kingdom companies. All members of the public were able to receive information by registering with the Share Information Office.

Landfill

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps the Government are taking to promote and encourage landfill projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply because my Department is responsible for policy on the reclamation and reuse of derelict and vacant land in England.

Urban development corporations have been established to take concerted action in some of the areas worst affected by vacancy and dereliction. City grant can support private sector reclamation in the inner cities. Derelict land grant is available to the private sector outside the inner cities and to local authorities throughout England. Local authorities' inner area programmes, supported by urban programme grants, also make a contribution to reclamation in the inner cities. Together, these four regimes are expected to spend some £200 million on reclamation projects in the current financial year.

NORTHERN IRELAND

School Visits

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of the primary schools in the city of Armagh organised visits to the following locations during the past academic year (a) site of the battle of Benburb, (b) site of the battle of the Diamond, (c) Navan fort, (d) Armagh planetarium, (e) county museum, The Mall, Armagh, (f) Regimental museum, College hill, Armagh, (g) St. Patrick's cathedral, Armagh and (h) St. Patrick's Roman Catholic cathedral, Armagh.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

	Navan Fort	Armagh Planetarium	Armagh County Museum	St. Patrick's Cathedral	St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Cathedral
Armagh Christian Brothers	—	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes
Armstrong	—	Yes	Yes	Yes	—
Drelincourt Infants	—	—	Yes	—	—
Mount St. Catherine's Convent	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes
St. Malachy's Boys'	Yes	—	Yes	—	—
St. Patrick's	Yes	—	Yes	Yes	Yes

No schools visited the sites of the battles of Benburb or the Diamond or the Regimental museum.

Police

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the level of community policing in the West Winds estate, Newtownards; what are the proposals for the future of policing in this estate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Deployment of the RUC is a matter for the Chief Constable, but I understand that a neighbourhood constable is assigned to this estate who will continue to give attention to it, and that attention is also given by divisional mobile patrols.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the period each day that Comber Royal Ulster Constabulary station is operational; what proposals there are for the future of this Royal Ulster Constabulary station; and if he will make a statement on policing in Comber district.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The future of Comber RUC station is a matter for the Chief Constable. I understand that the station is open to the public from 9 am to 11 am and from 5 pm to 7 pm each day, and that attention is also given to the Comber area by divisional mobile patrols.

Short Brothers plc

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will estimate the likely effects of the proposed privatisation of Shorts on the company's FJX short-haul jet project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: The decision on whether or not to proceed with the development of the FJX will be a matter for the purchaser of the company. There is not yet enough information available from the company on the FJX project for decisions to be made. The future of the project will be decided within the context of privatisation.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Department of Health and Social Services intends to issue guidance to doctors in Northern Ireland on the treatment of myalgic encephalomyelitis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: No. It is not the Department's practice to issue directions on clinical practice to doctors.

Floods

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums of public money were expended on repairs to Housing Executive dwellings which were needed as a result of damage caused by the floods of October 1987.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive who has advised me that approximately £315,000 was spent on repairs to Executive dwellings, largely in Strabane and Omagh.

Rathlin Island

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether consideration has been given to the possibility of a joint electricity and telephone cable link between Rathlin island and the mainland; and what conclusions have been reached.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 7 December 1988]: No. I understand that such a link would not be practicable; amongst other reasons, the electricity cable would be likely to cause interference to any telephone cable laid in close proximity.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has received a report of the results of Northern Ireland Electricity's survey regarding the possible supply of mains electricity to Rathlin island; and what further discussions he has had with Northern Ireland Electricity regarding the implications of the results.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 7 December 1988]: No. This is a matter in the first instance for consideration by the board of Northern Ireland Electricity. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to a question by the right hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) on 7 December 1988, at column 195.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on what consideration is being given to funding a scheme to provide Rathlin island with mains electricity; and whether such consideration includes the possibility of European regional fund assistance.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 7 December 1988]: Various methods of providing Rathlin island with a mains supply are currently being examined by Northern Ireland Electricity. Consideration of the economic viability of these will take account of the possibility of European regional development fund assistance.

PRIME MINISTER

Security Services

Q16. Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has any plans to bring forward legislation to put MI6, military intelligence and other security services other than MI5, on a statutory footing.

The Prime Minister: The Government have no plans to introduce further legislation covering the security and intelligence services.

Vice-President (European Commission)

Q53. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister why and in what particular respects considerable experience of Cabinet Office forms has been a factor in the nomination for vice-president of the European Commission.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 1 December 1988 at column 345.

Sunday Trading

Q88. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the implications for parliamentary sovereignty of the decision of the European Court of Justice to hear cases on the legality of the United Kingdom's Sunday trading laws; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No.

"The Green Gauntlet"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister what response she plans to make to the 30 point plan for environmental improvement in the United Kingdom set out in "The Green Gauntlet" document launched collectively by the Worldwide Fund for Nature, Friends of the Earth and Greenpeace on 20 November.

The Prime Minister: We shall consider the views expressed in "The Green Gauntlet" alongside those of other interests as we take forward our policies of safeguarding the environment for those who come after us.

Engagements

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 December.

Mr. Mans: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 December.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 December.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 December.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 December.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 December.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 December.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 December.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 December.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 December.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 December.

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 December.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 December.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 December.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 December.

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 December.

The Prime Minister: The Soviet ambassador called on me to deliver a message from President Gorbachev this morning. Later I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today, and will be addressing the annual meeting of the Per Cent Club.

Advisers

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her reply of 1 December, Official Report, columns 345-48, she will state the current salary or, where appropriate, expenses of each of the full and part-time advisers attached to her office.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave the hon. Member on 1 December 1988 at column 347.

Foreign Visits

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister (1) pursuant to her reply of 1 December, Official Report, column 347, which of her visits abroad in the current year still have open accounts because payments are awaited from media organisations for the cost of their representatives travelling with her on official transport;

(2) pursuant to her reply of 1 December, Official Report, column 347, which of her visits abroad still await the closure of accounts.

The Prime Minister: For practical reasons, accounts relating to my visits overseas remain open for a reasonable length of time. This is because delays in receiving bills or claims or minor queries about the details of transactions, make it impractical to close these accounts too soon.

Downing Street (Furnishings and Decoration)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister, what, pursuant to her answer of 1 December, Official Report, column 347, would be the cost of providing an answer to the question asking her to provide an analysis of the £213,318 spent from public funds in 1988-89 to date on furnishings and decoration in No. 10 Downing street.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 1 December 1988 at column 347.

Official Gifts

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister how much has been expended from public funds for the provision of official gifts by her office in each year since 1979-80.

The Prime Minister: Information before 1 April 1983 is not available except at disproportionate cost. Since 1 April 1983 the following amounts have been spent on official gifts.

Financial year	Amount £
1983-84	14,450
1984-85	16,678
1985-86	21,524
1986-87	10,176
1987-88	18,496
[1]1988-89	11,192

[1] Actual to date.

Policy Unit

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister how many staff are employed in her policy unit; and how many were employed in 1979-80.

The Prime Minister: There are at present nine members of staff employed in my policy unit. In 1979-80 there were two members of staff.

Questions (Costs)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what is the current expenditure limit for replying to parliamentary written questions beyond which she maintains cost as being disproportionate.

The Prime Minister: Any parliamentary question likely to cost more than £250 is referred to the responsible Minister before significant resources are committed.

Travel Restrictions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what restrictions on travel to (a) the Soviet Union and (b) Comecon Eastern bloc countries apply to retired Atomic Weapons Research Establishment, Aldermaston, staff;

(2) what restrictions on emigration to (a) the Soviet Union and (b) other Comecon Eastern bloc countries apply to former government civil servants who worked at (i) the Ministry of Defence, (ii) the Atomic Weapons Research Establishments, (iii) MI5 and (iv) Government communications headquarters at Cheltenham.

The Prime Minister: Certain retired staff from the Ministry of Defence, the Atomic Weapons Establishment and Government Communications Headquarters, and all retired members of the security service, are asked to seek the permission of their former employers before visiting these countries.

Security Screening

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Prime Minister what progress has been made in implementing the recommendation contained in the Security Commission's report on the case of Geoffrey Prime, Cmnd 8876, that there should be a pilot study to test the feasibility of polygraph security screening in the intelligence and security agencies; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The first phase of the pilot study included the examination of staff of the security service and of senior staff of the Government Communications Headquarters (GCHQ). Following completion of that phase and before deciding on a starting date for the second phase, which was intended to cover the testing of a random sample of the staff of GCHQ, the Government commissioned a review of the scientific literature relating to the validity of the polygraph. This was conducted by Dr. A. B. Levey, a senior psychologist in the Medical Research Council. Dr. Levey delivered his report, which was based on an examination of 372 professional and scientific papers from which 100 were selected for a more detailed analysis earlier this year. I am placing a copy in the Library.

Dr. Levey's conclusion from the literature is that the polygraph is probably incapable of achieving a high level of accuracy and reliability when used for screening purposes and, moreover, that individuals trained in the use of counter-measures would have a good chance of escaping detection. Against this background the Government concluded that there would be no advantage in implementing the second phase of the pilot study, but before reaching a final decision, the Government felt it right to consult the Security Commission again.

The Security Commission has considered Dr. Levey's report and has taken further evidence from the director general of the security service and the director of GCHQ. In the light of their evidence the Security Commission accept that there would, in present circumstances, be no point in continuing the study. The commission believes, however, that the possibility of introducing the polygraph should not be ruled out for all time. In the light of the Security Commission's comments, the Government have decided that, while scientific research on the validity of the polygraph should continue to be monitored the pilot study should not proceed further.

ENVIRONMENT

Owner-occupation

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homes in Derbyshire are privately owned; and by how many this figure has increased since 1983.

Mr. Trippier: There were 282,202 homes in private ownership as at 1 April 1988 according to housing investment programme returns submitted by Derbyshire district councils. This figure is about 24,000 more than that for 1983.

Manchester Council for Voluntary Service

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations his Department has received from the Manchester Council for Voluntary Service; what reply is being sent; if any action is to be taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: A series of representations about rate reform has been received in recent months from the Manchester Council for Voluntary Service both direct and via the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman), the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) and the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris). The latest letter from the council asks a number of detailed questions about the community charge and will be answered shortly.

I have recently agreed to a request by the hon. Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley) for a meeting with representatives of Greater Manchester voluntary groups.

Building Regulations

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the consultation process on building regulations parts F (ventilation) and L (conservation of fuel and power), including the timetable for publishing approved documents and bringing into force of any new regulations.

Mr. Trippier: A consultation paper setting out proposals for amending the requirements and guidance relating to parts F (ventilation) and L (conservation of fuel and power) of the building regulations was issued in July of this year. Comments have been received from over 100 organisations and individuals, and these are still being considered. The Building Regulations Advisory Committee will be consulted on the outcome early next year, but it is too early to say when a revised approved document is likely to be published or when any amendments to the regulations themselves are likely to be brought into operation.

Polycarboxylates

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department has on the use of polycarboxylates in detergents; and what studies have been carried out into the envionmental implications of their use.

Mr. Ridley: Polycarboxylates are used at very low levels, generally less than 2 per cent., in detergents. Studies on the environmental implications of their use have been carried out by the detergent industry. These studies compare the results of toxicological and environmental test data with potential or predicted environmental concentration. In addition, a review of their behaviour and use has been published by Imperial college.

Fauna, Flora and Habitats

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why Her Majesty's Government expressed objections on 24 November to the proposal to introduce a new European Community directive to protect threatened fauna, flora and habitats.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At the Environment Council in Brussels on 24 November, all member states unanimously rejected the rigid and bureaucratic directive that the Commission had proposed. There was general support for the United Kingdom's view that the Community could most usefully assist member states, where appropriate, to implement the relevant existing international conventions, particularly the Bern convention.

East Thames-side Study

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why the comments invited from the London borough of Newham were excluded from the east Thames-side study published on 23 November.

Mr. Trippier: As not all of the boroughs concerned had submitted comments when the consultants' report was due to be printed, it was decided not to include an incomplete set in that report. However, we will take careful account of submissions from Newham and other boroughs, along with the consultants' report, as we consider the findings of the study.

Rented Housing

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to encourage the independent rented sector, other than registered housing associations, to make adequate provision for a continuation of the principles of mobility as embraced in the national mobility scheme.

Mr. Trippier: The Housing Act 1988 should increase the supply of private rented accommodation, and this will improve job mobility. The principles of the tenants' guarantee as they relate to mobility will apply to all landlords approved under tenants' choice and for large-scale voluntary transfers of public sector housing.

Defective Dwellings

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what estimate he has of the number of households with properties affected by mundic-type concrete block;

(2) what estimate his Department has of the value of properties affected by being built of mundic-type concrete block;

(3) what estimate he has, by county, of the number of properties suffering from deterioration or potential deterioration as a result of being built from mundic-type concrete block.

Mr. Trippier: Virtually all mundic block properties appear to have been built within the private sector, and there are therefore no reliable statistics on the numbers and values involved.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what research his Department is carrying out into the numerical extent of the problem of properties built with mundic-type concrete block;

(2) what research his Department is carrying out into geographical extent of the problem of properties built with mundic-type concrete block;

(3) what research his Department is carrying out into possible cures to the problem of properties afflicted with decaying mundic-type concrete block; and what is the status of that research.

Mr. Trippier: The Building Research Establishment has carried out research into the caues of mundic block failure within its continuing overall work on the behaviour of concrete aggregates. We have no plans to commission specific research on numbers and location, but I understand that private lending institutions are considering commissioning research into appropriate tests; this could lead to the development of remedial treatments for affected properties.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial assistance is available to the owners of properties with problems caused by mundic-type concrete blocks; and what changes he is proposing.

Mr. Trippier: At present, some owners of mundic block houses may be eligible for discretionary improvement grants. However, we intend to bring forward proposals in the next housing Bill to streamline the grants system; this may bring more owners within the scope of grant aid for repairs, subject to their particular circumstances.

Rates

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount in cash terms, by which he estimates Leeds city council will have to spend below the Government's grant-related expenditure allocation level in 1989-90 in order to produce a rate increase in line with inflation, based on the information contained in the rate support grant consultation paper for 1989-90 issued on 11 November.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is estimated that if Leeds city council uses the same amount of balances as in 1988-89, a 5 per cent. increase would finance expenditure about £13 million below its GRE.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library the papers produced for the following groups of officials and local authority association representatives (a) the new systems working group, (b) the rates working party, (c) the community charge working group, (d) the community charge implementation sub-group and (e) the capital programmes working party.

Mr. Ridley: I am placing in the Library copies of the papers circulated for the most recent meetings of these working groups and working parties.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he proposes to meet the loss of £10 million income from the introduction of the uniform business rate in Nottingham.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: If the uniform business rate had been introduced in 1988-89, business in Nottingham would have benefited from a 15 per cent. reduction in rates, and some £10 million less would have been raised locally from business rates. This does not necessarily mean that the local authorities would have been any worse off. Broadly speaking, provided that a local authority is spending sensibly, its total income from business rates and grant combined should be no less under the uniform business rate than under the present system.

Local Government Finance

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a summary of the responses to "Capital Expenditure and Finance: A Consultation Paper."

Mr. Ridley: No. A list of those responses which respondents have agreed can be released is being placed in the Library of the House. Copies of those responses can be obtained through the Library.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what responses he received to "Capital Expenditure and Finance: A Consultation Paper", from financial institutions; what points they made; and whether he responded to them.

Mr. Ridley: Certain brokers, banks, and market makers asked that local authorities should be permitted to place surplus funds in a wider range of investments than was proposed in the consultation paper. Receipt of their representations has been acknowledged.

Housing

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total stock of dwellings for England and Wales by tenure expressed by local authority area.

Mr. Trippier: Local authorities in England report the number of dwellings by sector of ownership in their annual Housing Investment Programme returns. The latest information, for 1 April 1988, is contained in column A11 (local authority), A12 (housing association), A13 (other public sector) and A14 (private sector) of the "1988 HIP1 All Items Print", which is in the Library. For corresponding information about Welsh authorities I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

The 1981 census provides the most recent information, by local authority areas, of the split of households in private sector dwellings between owner-occupiers and renters. This information is shown in table 17 of "Census 1981, Key Statistics for local authorities, Great Britain", also in the Library.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the total number of local authority dwellings in England and Wales expressed by house type; (2) what has been the average weekly unrebated local authority rent in England and Wales for the financial years 1979-80 to 1989-90, expressed by local authority area.

Mr. Trippier: Average weekly unrebated local authority rents at 1 April and of local authority dwellings by type are published in an annual survey by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. Copies of the latest edition "Housing Rent Statistics at April 1988" and those for earlier years are in the Library.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further progress has been made towards the privatisation of the Crown Suppliers.

Mr. Chope: As a step towards privatisation, I have authorised Crown Suppliers to commence selling to the private sector. This activity will be controlled in accordance with a business plan which will provide for sales and costs to be monitored by Ministers with the aim of ensuring that there is no cross-subsidisation of the sales to the private sector. The arrangement will enable Crown Suppliers to test its ability to trade with the private sector, which will be a feature of privatisation.

In addition, I have received a report by Coopers and Lybrand on the organisation of Crown Suppliers during its move towards privatisation. The report recommends that there should be three divisions operating as discrete businesses: product supply and services, a transport division and a buying agency. I am considering these recommendations which are aimed at putting the Crown Suppliers' operations on to a more commercial footing in preparation for its move into the private sector.

Housing Investment Programmes

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will make the allocations to local authorities in England for their housing investment programmes in 1989-90.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend announced on 1 November 1988 that gross provision for capital expenditure by local authorities on housing in 1989-90 will be £3,303—£395 million (13·5 per cent.) higher than previous plans. This is the fourth successive year in which it has been possible to increase provision, thanks to the continuing success of the right to buy policy. Through the receipts which this provides, local authorities have a growing source of spending power to supplement their capital borrowing.

The gross expenditure provision allows for a total housing investment programme (HIP) allocation of £920 million. This represents new borrowing consents for local authorities. Each housing authority is today being informed of its initial HIP allocation for 1989-90. Copies of the letters to local authorities and the schedule of initial allocations have been placed in the Library and the Vote Office.

The local authority associations have been consulted about the distribution of HIP allocations. After considering their comments, and bearing in mind his obligation to make allocations in relation to need, my right hon. Friend has decided to make the distribution on the following basis:

£873·5 million is available for main HIP allocations. Every authority will receive at least 75 per cent. of its corresponding allocation for the current year.

£11·5 million is available for the homes insulation scheme, of which £8 million is being distributed with the main HIP allocations; £2·5 million will be reserved for further allocations under the scheme in accordance with demand, and the remaining £1 million will be used to defray local authorities' administrative costs.

£20 million is available for the private sector area renewal initiative. The 29 authorities receiving allocations are being informed today of the details.

£15 million is being reserved for additional allocations at a later date to authorities which face particular difficulties in meeting their obligations under the housing defects legislation.

Only the initial allocations are being made today. The letters being sent to local housing authorities describe the procedure under which they can apply for additional allocations.

Tenants' Choice

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations are proposed with interested parties as part of the implementation work on tenants' choice.

Mr. Trippier: When the Housing Act was in Parliament the Government undertook to invite views on how tenants should be consulted and vote on a tenants' choice application, and on the terms on which flats should be leased back to a public sector body after any transfer. The Department has now issued two consultation papers, which set out our proposals on these matters. They are being circulated to interested parties with a request for comments by 20 January 1989. Copies are available in the Library.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what estimate he has of the carbon dioxide emissions resulting from energy used in domestic buildings, from (a) coal, gas, electricity and oil sources, and (b) space heating, lighting, water heating, fridges/freezers, washing machines and other electrical appliances;

(2) what research he has commissioned or he intends to commission on the potential of energy efficiency measures in the housing stock for reducing carbon dioxide emissions contributing to the greenhouse effect; and if he will make it his policy to summarise the results of such research and make copies available in the Library.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Warren Spring laboratory and the Building Research Establishment have made preliminary estimates of the carbon dioxide emissions resulting from energy use in domestic buildings in 1987 as follows:

	Millions of tonnes CO_2
(a) by fuel delivered to households: (WSL)
Coaland other solid fuels	25
Natural gas	55
Electricity (including all forms of generation)	88
Oil	6
Total	174
(b) Percentage break down by end use: (BKE)	Per cent.
Space heating	45
Lighting	4
Water heating	21
Fridges/freezers	9
Washing machines	2
All other appliances (including cookers)	19
Total	100

The Department is currently considering how further studies of domestic efficiency and its carbon dioxide emission reduction potential can best be carried out. Where appropriate, results of such work will be made available in the Library of the House.

Water Companies (Foreign Interests)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will be seeking emergency legislation to stop foreign companies mounting take-over bids for British water companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: No, European Community law does not allow discrimination against investment by nationals of other community members. Competition and merger law applies to all takeovers where there is a threat to the public interest.

River Pollution

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will instigate legislation similar to the Rivers (Prevention of Pollution) (Scotland) Act 1951 in respect of the River Don and similar rivers affected by pollution caused by poisonous effluents coming from abandoned mines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I am aware of the difficulties caused by discharges from abandoned mines, particularly from long abandoned workings. The costs of dealing with discharges can be considerable and in many cases it would be unreasonable to make the present landowners liable. Making such discharges an offence along the lines of the 1951 Act would not solve the problem of liability.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many miles of Yorkshire's prime game and coarse fishing rivers have become unsuitable for fishing since 1979 due to river pollution; and if he will make a statement on the report by Yorkshire Water's scientific services department which show a sharp decline in catches due to heavily polluted water.

Mr. Moynihan: Yorkshire water authority reported that about 12 miles of river length providing satisfactory fisheries in 1979 are now considered as unsatisfactory because of the effects of pollution. Over the same period 14 miles of river length have improved. However, I understand that the recently reported declines in catches on the Wharfe, Nidd and Ouse are considered to be normal variations brought about by rainfall, river flow, temperature and disease cycles rather than the results of river pollution.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many times since the Control of Pollution Act 1974 has been implemented it has been tested in the courts in respect of breaches of river pollution; and if he will list such occasions in date order.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not held by the Department. However, the new National Rivers Authority will in future enforce water pollution controls on a national and more consistent basis and information of this nature should then be more readily available.

Water Authorities

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on the recommendations in the Environment Select Committee Report concerning the introduction of new prohibitive powers enabling water authorities or other independent bodies to stop dischargers releasing effluent and to revise effluent permits without financial penalty.

Mr. Moynihan: The Water Bill will empower my right hon. Friend to direct the National Rivers Authority to revoke or modify particular discharge consents with immediate effect, where this is necessary for the protection of public health or of flora or fauna dependent on the aquatic environment. Compensation would arise in those circumstances only where the authority in granting the consent could reasonably have been expected to foresee the threat to public health or the aquatic environment.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will (a) list all the local authorities which, under present legislation, have lost lands given to the present water authorities, (b) indicate the location and size of such land and (c) list the cases in which local authorities received proper and direct compensation for that loss of land.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 5 December 1988]: Information is not available in the form requested on land transferred from local authorities to water authorities in the 1974 reorganisation. The local authorities concerned, or their successors, were relieved of the debt liabilities associated with the land transferred.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount of income in cash terms each water authority in England and Wales raised from land drainage precepts, direct charges for abstraction and impoundment licences, fishing rod licences and navigation licences in 1987-88, broken down by region.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 5 December 1988]: Information on land drainage precepts and charges for abstractions is shown in the annual reports and accounts of the water authorities laid before Parliament each year and available in the Library. This information is brought together in Waterfacts, published annually by the Water Authorities Association and also available in the Library. The remaining information requested by the hon. Member is not available centrally.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he possesses concerning the asset value of all property, plant, including sewers, and machinery relating to disposal of used water currently owned by regional water authorities; and what is the basis of valuation.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 7 December 1988]: Analyses by service of the net asset value of water authorities' tangible fixed assets are set out in the historic cost and current cost sections of the authorities' published annual accounts. The basis of the figures is explained in notes to the accounts.

Business Property (Revaluation)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's assessment of the impact of the revaluation of business property in 1990 (a) upon business in Nottingham and (b) upon the uniform business rate.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We do not yet have sufficiently detailed forecasts of the likely effects of the revaluation on business property to be able to predict the effect in Nottingham. We would expect businesses in Nottingham to share in the benefit of reduced rate bills which businesses in the North and midlands generally will enjoy as a result of revaluation and the introduction of a uniform business rate.

The uniform business rate will be set at the level necessary to raise nationally broadly the same amount in rates in 1990-91, in real terms, as is raised in 1989-90. So whatever the overall increase in rateable values on revaluation, the uniform business rate will be reduced proportionately.

Disabled Persons (Staff)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of his Department's staff are classed as disabled.

Mr. Ridley: As at 1 December 1988, the percentage of staff classed as disabled was 1·50 per cent., including 1·27 per cent. registered disabled persons.

Death in Service

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the current maximum death-in-service benefit under local government superannuation schemes; if he has any plans to increase the maximum benefit payable; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to remove the 20 years pensionable service qualification for the maximum death-in-service benefit under local government superannuation schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The grant payable to the personal representatives of an employee who dies in service is one year's salary or three-eightieths of his pensionable remuneration multiplied by the length of his pensionable service, whichever is the greater. We have no plans to increase these benefits without an increase in the contributions payable by employees.

Planning Decisions

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he collects statistics on the length of time taken by London borough local authorities to reach planning decisions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Department collects and publishes quarterly statistics on development control performance of local planning authorities in England. The table shows the number of planning decisions issued by London borough councils in the first quarter of 1988 (the latest priod for which figures are available), and the percentage of those decisions issued within eight weeks and within 13 weeks of the application being received. Five authorities failed to provide the relevant information. The Government believes that local planning authorities should be able to decide 80 per cent. of all planning applications within eight weeks.

Conferences (EC)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the European Economic Community environment conferences held at ministerial level since the date on which he became Secretary of State; and if he will list those Ministers who have attended each one to represent Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Ridley: Since I became Secretary of State for the Environment, the United Kingdom has been represented at European Community meetings of Environment Ministers as follows:

12 June

Water Privatisation

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how his proposals for water privatisation will (a) reinforce, (b) amend or (c) suppress present controls for the protection of water authority lands (i) of outstanding natural beauty, (ii) serving urban or rural communities as spaces of recreation or environmental value and (iii) declared national parks.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 5 December 1988]: Clause 7 of the Bill would carry forward the present conservation and recreation duties of the water authorities and apply them with certain amendments and extensions to water and sewerage undertakers, the National Rivers Authority and internal drainage boards. The principle change is to impose on the authority a wider duty than currently applies to water authorities, to promote conservation and the recreational use of all inland waters and associated lands.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial compensation will be given to local authorities under his proposals for water privatisation in the case that the future water companies sell land which was originally owned by such local authorities which subsequent legislation gave to water authorities without any compensation.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 5 December 1988]: None, because none is due. The regional water authorities took on the debt liabilities associated with the local authority assets transferred to them in 1974.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific (a) local authorities, (b) rural and urban community organisations, (c) consumer associations and (d) industry and business organisations he consulted prior to deciding that water privatisation should be carried out.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 5 December 1988]: The White Paper proposals and consultation paper on the National Rivers Authority have been widely publicised. The opportunity to comment has not been confined to a specific list of organisations.

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the amount of financial assistance which will be lost to regions from the European regional development fund following the privatisation of the water industry.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 6 December 1988]: The EC Commission agreed last year to continue to consider applications for aid from the European regional development fund in respect of investments in infrastructure by privatised bodies in the United Kingdom.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what cash amount it is assumed that the National Rivers Authority would generate itself through its income generation powers for each of the years 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 in anticipating grant in aid payments to the National Rivers Authority of £40 million, £71 million and £65 million for each of those years, respectively.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 5 December 1988]: The assumptions about grant-in-aid for these years are based on financial projections which anticipate that the National Rivers Authority's income from direct charges will be £32·0 million in 1989-90, £58·0 million in 1990-91 and £73·0 million in 1991-92. It is assumed that the increased income in 1991-92 will be generated from the provision in the Water Bill to enable the NRA to charge dischargers the costs of administering water pollution control and enforcement. The projections do not take into account income or expenditure relating to the NRA's land drainage work, which is funded by a combination of capital grants, for which my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food takes public expenditure provision, and precepts on local authorities.

Cumbria (Coastline)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made towards the full implementation of the European Economic Community directive on the quality of bathing water along the coastline of Cumbria.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 5 December 1988]: There are 16 identified bathing waters in Cumbria, many of which already meet the directive's standards. The North West water authority plans to bring the remaining waters up to the EEC standard by 1995. Work on this task is in hand.

Water Meters

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Government funding will be made available to meet the costs of the installation and provision of water meters in domestic property in full or in part.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 6 December 1988]: Whether to adopt metering for domestic water customers after privatisation will be a matter for each water undertaker to decide. Apart from the limited contributions to the present programme of metering trials, there will be no Government funding of the costs of metering.

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether customers will be expected to pay the costs of the provision and installation of water meters in domestic households following water industry privatisation.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 6 December 1988]: The Public Utility Transfers and Water Charges Act requires the cost of installing meters compulsorily to be met by the water undertaker. The cost is therefore recovered from customers as a whole, with two exceptions. Customers who opt under the present voluntary scheme to pay by measure will be expected to pay for a meter and its installation. After 1 April 1989, water undertakers will be able to require the developers of newly built or converted domestic properties to pay for, or install, a meter as a condition of connecting a supply.

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the position with regard to the inspection provisions of water metering and weights and measures legislation following the installation of water meters in domestic property.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 6 December 1988]: Regulations made under the Public Utility Transfers and Water Charges Act 1988 enable householders, on the payment of a fee, to ask their water undertaker to test the accuracy of the meter. The fee will be returned if the meter is found to be inaccurate. The test would be carried out in accordance with weights and measures regulations. Alternatively, householders can ask for a test by a local authority weights and measures inspector.

Land Development

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what restrictions he has received during 1988 about the drawing up of covenants restricting development on open land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 6 December 1988]: Section 52 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 permits the making of agreements between the local planning authority and any person with an interest in the land for the purpose of restricting or regulating the development or use of land. My right hon. Friend has received representations that such agreements are sometimes required where they are not necessary for the development to proceed, and the Government are considering issuing further policy guidance to curtail abuse of these powers.

Sewers

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has made of areas where urban sewers and drains are the property of private companies; and what conclusions he reached in respect of each such study.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 7 December 1988]: None.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Rape (Sentencing)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many appeals against the length of sentencing in rape cases have been made since July 1988.

Mr. John Patten: Information for 1988 is not yet available, but 96 persons appealed in 1987 against the sentence given to them for a rape offence.

Prisons (Psychiatric Patients)

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) at the latest date for which statistics are available, what proportion of persons detained in Her Majesty's prisons had previously been patients in either psychiatric hospitals or pyschiatric wards; and what were the corresponding figures for the same date in each of the past 10 years;

(2) at the latest date for which statistics are available, what proportion of persons detained in Her Majesty's prisons had previously received psychiatric treatment; and what were the corresponding figures for each of the past 10 years;

(3) at the latest date for which statistics are available, what proportion of persons detained in Her Majesty's prisons were either undergoing psychiatric treatment or had undergone such treatment in the course of their sentences.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of inmates who have received or are undergoing psychiatric treatment is not recorded centrally.

Mortgage Fraud

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will make it his policy to publish separate figures for mortgage fraud in the annual criminal statistics;

(2) what statistics are currently available for the incidence of mortgage fraud in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I have no plans to collect and publish more detailed figures on offences of fraud in "Criminal Statistics".

Inter-city Trains (Radio Telephones)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make central funds available to British Rail to assist in resourcing the provision of radio telephones on inter-city trains as a means of crime prevention.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that British Rail is already installing telephones on inter-city trains as an extra service for passengers.

Music (Drugs)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to obtain regular reports from the chief officers of police as to whether all public places of entertainment and night clubs in particular are being surveyed to ensure that the music played does not offend the Obscene Publications Act or other legislation aimed at reducing both the supply of and the demand for drugs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to do so.

Animals (Experiments)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the current project licences permiting cosmetic and toiletry experiments upon animals were granted prior to the implementation of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. Project licences were introduced by the 1986 Act.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many project licences have been granted for regulated procedures which involve the testing of cosmetic and toiletry preparations since the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 came into force; and how many of these applications were placed before the Animal Procedures Committee for consideration before being granted.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Six project licences have been granted, all of which received prior consideration by the APC.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for project licences for cosmetic experiments have been refused on the advice of the Animal Procedures Committee since 1 January 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None; but following consideration by the APC, modifications have been made to some project licences.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many personal licences are subsisting under those project licences granted for cosmetic experiments since 1 January 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not available centrally since personal licence holders are not generally restricted to working on a particular project.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider requiring the labelling of products to state whether or not they are tested on animals.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The Home Secretary is responsible for the licensing of scientific procedures on living animals, but not for any requirements for substances to be tested on animals or for the labelling of substances which have been tested.

Child Care

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to make police records available to voluntary organisations dealing with children who wish to check on potential employees.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We intend to establish before next summer pilot schemes for the disclosure of police information about those seeking to work with children in the voluntary sector.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the annual cost, for each year since 1987, of the public relations branch of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that staffing and accommodation costs and spending on publicity and recruitment advertising by the directorate of public affairs was £4,555,000 for 1987-88. The estimate for 1988-89 is £5,321,000.

Satellites (Crashes)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if any emergency plans are being prepared for the possibility of the Solar Maximum satellite crashing on (a) London or (b) elsewhere in the United Kingdom.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that current assessments indicate that there is no risk of Solar Maximum, which is not nuclear powered, crashing on the United Kingdom and specific plans are not therefore being prepared.

Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought under regulation 61 of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 and how many convictions obtained; and what steps he is taking to ensure the enforcement of this legislation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Separate information is not collected centrally on court proceedings for offences under regulation 61, but is combined with a variety of other offences relating to vehicles in dangerous or defective condition. The available information is published annually in "Offences relating to motor vehicles, England and Wales, Supplementary tables" (table 5 of the issue for 1987, which will be published soon). Since 1 October 1986, the police have been able to issue fixed penalty notices for these offences as an alternative to prosecution. All forces now also operate vehicle defect rectification schemes by which drivers can avoid prosecution for certain offences if they produce evidence that defective vehicles have been repaired or scrapped.

Further information is given in Home Office statistical bulletin 32/88, table 13 of which suggests that in 1987 there was a large rise in the enforcement of vehicle defect offences generally, as a result of these new methods of enforcement.

Lenient Sentences

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to issue a commencement order for section 36 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 to give the Attorney-General the power to refer lenient sentences to the Court of Appeal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We plan to bring section 36 into effect on 1 February.

Royal Ordnance Factory, Burghfield

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what emergency services attended the Royal Ordnance factory, Burghfield, following the explosion on Friday 2 December; if any casualties were sustained amongst emergency personnel; and at what time outside emergency services arrived at Burghfield.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that the police and the fire brigade attended. No casualties were reported among emergency personnel. The police arrived at the incident at 06.20 hours and the fire brigade at 06.24 hours.

Armley Prison

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long on average prisoners remanded to Armley remain in prison before being brought to trial.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information is not available centrally on the average time spent on remand in individual establishments. The information available relates to the average time spent on remand in all prison service establishments by untried and convicted unsentenced prisoners and is published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales" (tables 2(c) and 2 (d) of the latest issue for 1986, Cm. 210, a copy of which is in the Library). The 1987 issue will be published shortly.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are in Armley prison as a result of not paying bills or fines.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 31 October 1988, the latest date for which information is readily available, there were 18 fine defaulters and no prisoners held for non-payment of debts in Leeds prison.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners there were in Armley prison on 1 December; how many were (a) in cells of their own and (b) in the hospital wing; and how many were on remand.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 1 December 1,291 prisoners were held in Her Majesty's prison, Leeds. Of these, 613 were untried and 107 had been convicted and awaited sentence. 33 prisoners were located in the hospital wing. On 13 November, the most recent date for which cell-occupancy figures are available, 62 prisoners were accommodated in cells of their own.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in Armley prison go to education classes (a) every day or (b) every week.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The readily available information is as follows. It is planned that for 5-9 December there will be an average of 182 education places available for prisoners per day, and 498 individual prisoners will attend education classes.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have died in Armley prison since January; and how many of those deaths have been classified as suicides by coroners' inquests.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Six inmates have died in Armley prison, Leeds, since January. Of these deaths, three have been confirmed as suicide by coroners' inquests, and two as deaths by natural causes. One inquest has yet to take place.

Justices' Clerks

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the reponsibilities of a clerk to the justices for a petty sessional area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The principal reponsibilities are as set out in sections 28 and 29 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1979.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the scale of salaries for a clerk to the justices for a petty sessional area (a) in London, (b) in the shire counties, and (c) in the metropolitan counties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The salary payable to a clerk to the justices outside inner London ranges from £16,005 (rising to £17,598 by increments) to £30,978 (rising to £34,638 by increments) according to the population of the petty sessions area concerned. In inner London the principal chief clerk has a salary of £35,370 and the chief clerks have an incremental salary scale of £27,819-£30,747. The above figures all exclude London weighting where payable. Increases in pay are now subject to arbitration.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the level of London weighting allowance awarded to a clerk to the justices for a petty sessional area; if he has any plans to review present arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The London weighting allowance payable to a clerk to the Justices is as follows:

(1) Magistrates courts service (excluding inner London)
(i) Greater London	792
(ii) Inner Fringe	357
(iii) Outer Fringe	243
(2) Inner London Magistrates courts service	1,500

London weighting is under review as part of the current pay negotiations.

Magistrates' Courts (Staff)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals for the recruitment of additional staff in the magistrates' courts in order to deal with the growing backlog of cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: There is provision for 200 additional court posts in the next financial year, and we shall obviously have local operational difficulties in mind in considering applications for increases in complement. We shall keep the position under review in the light of the outcome of the arbitration on the current pay negotiations. We also hope to increase, through the provision of training, the number of staff from within the courts service qualified to act as court clerks.

Terrorism

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is (a) the tonnage of explosives and (b) the number of firearms found as a ration of houses searched under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts 1974, 1976 and 1984 for each year from 1974 to the latest available date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is not available and could not be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what has been the total number of people (a) detained, (b) charged and (c) convicted under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act in each year since 1974; and if he will provide a breakdown of the figures between men and women;

(2) if he will provide a breakdown of the people arrested under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act for each year since 1974 (a) at ports; (b) at airports; (c) in their homes and (d) in other places; and if he will provide a breakdown of these figures between men and women detainees.

Mr. Hurd: The readily available information on those detained under the prevention of terrorism legislation in Great Britain is published quarterly in Home Office statistical bulletins which are placed in the Library; the latest, Issue 29/88, gives information on those detained up to the third quarter of 1988. Information on the outcome of charges following detention under this legislation is published in the end of year bulletins in this series; tables 6 and 7 of Issue 11/88 give the figures for those detained over the period of the current legislation. Figures relating to earlier legislation can be obtained from corresponding earlier bulletins in this series.

Extradition

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report the numbers of extradition requests made to the Republic of Ireland in each year since 1967, indicating how many of those requests were for crimes of a terrorist nature and how many requests were for other types of crime, and show for each year the number of those extradition requests which were granted for (a) crimes of a terrorist nature and (b) other types of crimes and how many were refused for each class of crime; if he will indicate for each of those years, and each class of crime, how many extradition requests and warrants were found by the Irish authorities and the Irish courts to be unacceptable; if he will also publish in the Official Report the same information for extradition requests made to the United Kingdom by the Republic of Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The readily available information on extradition requests between England and Wales and the Republic of Ireland is given in the following tables. This is based mainly on information provided by police forces. Requests involving terrorist offences are specified where known.

Parliamentary Constituencies

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Boundary Commission for England intends to conduct any further interim reviews of parliamentary constituencies.

Mr. Hurd: The commission has told me of its intention to conduct a review of the Buckingham and Milton Keynes county constituencies.

Police and Criminal Evidence Act

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of people (a) detained, (b) charged and (c) convicted under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 in each year since 1984 to the latest available date; and if he will provide a breakdown of the figures into men and women.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Most of the provisions of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 were implemented on 1 January 1986. Home Office statistical bulletins have been published regularly since then, the latest, Issue 14/88, giving figures for 1987. These bulletins cover the operation of those sections of the Act on which chief constables are required to publish statistics, ie stops and searches, road checks, detentions beyond 24 hours without charge and intimate searches.

The only criminal offence created by the Act relates to the improper disclosure of information by a member, officer or servant of the Police Complaints Authority (section 98). There have been no convictions under this section.

Information on all persons convicted, including separate figures for men and women, is published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1987" (Cm. 498) and in a companion set of five supplementary volumes. All the publications referred to are in the Library.

Data Protection Act

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish the terms of reference of the interdepartmental group reviewing the workings of the Data Protection Act; to what extent the group is initially concentrating its efforts on reporting on registration requirements; and whether it is intended that the group shall recommend changes to strengthen data subjects rights or the registrar's powers under the Act.

Mr. Renton: The terms of reference of the interdepartmental review committee on the Data Protection Act 1984 are:

> "To review the Data Protection Act 1984 in the light of experience gained during its implementation, with particular reference to the impact on data users of the registration requirements; and to make recommendations."

The committee will review the Act as a whole and will recommend such changes as it considers necessary on any aspect of the Act.

SCOTLAND

Radioactivity

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost to date of analysing water, vegetation, soil and food samples for radioactivity levels and of administering measures to control contaminated food and to compensate affected farming businesses, since the Chernobyl accident.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The total costs incurred by the Scottish Office are estimated to be in the region of £3·2 million comprising about £1 million for staff and associated administration costs, about £0·5 million in relation to analysis and monitoring and about £1·7 million for compensation to farmers in the restricted areas.

National Council for Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has considered the responses to the consultative paper on whether the remit of the National Council for Vocational Qualifications should extend to Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I have decided that the advantages to be gained by individuals and employers in Scotland from the development of nationally recognised vocational standards can be achieved without extension of the remit of the National Council for Vocational Qualifications to Scotland at present. The Scottish Vocational Education Council (SCOTVEC) will continue to work closely with employers, examining bodies, and the training agency in the United Kingdom to ensure that its qualifications meet the needs of British as well as Scottish employers. I look forward to SCOTVEC continuing to maintain and develop its constructive relationship with the NCVQ, which I will keep under review.

Teachers (Premature Retirement)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number of school-teachers, by age and by sex, who were granted premature retirement during the academic session 1987-88.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave her on Thursday 3 November which set out the available information.

School Rolls

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number of school-pupils at the most recent available date in attendance at nursery, primary, secondary and special schools in each local education authority, giving the breakdown by region and by division.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of pupils in education authority schools in September 1987 are given in the table.

	Nursery	Primary	Secondary	Special

PIEDA Report

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of producing the Planning, Industrial and Economic Development Advisers' report.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The cost of the PIEDA report was £20,597.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the Planning, Industrial and Economic Development Advisers' report.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. My right hon. and learned Friend will not publish the PIEDA report. It is a confidential report prepared for Government.

Glasgow Western Infirmary

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans there are for the future of the accident and emergency service at the Glasgow Western Infirmary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Greater Glasgow health board is currently conducting a strategic review of all accident and emergency services in Glasgow and has no plans to alter the level of accident and emergency services provided at Glasgow Western Infirmary. However, as a result of an earlier staffing review the senior medical staffing level has been strengthened. A full-time consultant in accident and emergency has taken up post and an appointment for a second full-time consultant has recently been made.

Electricity

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the types of plants at each of the South of Scotland Electricity Board areas and the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board areas and their respective output capacity each year since 1979, showing these figures in percentage terms of the overall output.

Mr. Lang: The information, provided by the Scottish electricity boards on the same basis as their annual reports and accounts for the years in question, is as follows:

Local Authority Rents

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the average weekly local authority rent in Scotland for each of the financial years 1979-80 to 1989-90, expressed as a percentage of average male manual earnings.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table:

Finance Year	Rent[1] as a percentage of earnings[2]
1979-80	5·7
1980-81	5·8
1981-82	6·7
1982-83	7·3
1983-84	7·3
1984-85	7·3
1985-86	7·4
1986-87	7·8
1987-88	8·4

[1] Average unrebated local authority rent per dwelling per week as at 30 September, based on local authorities' statistical returns to the Scottish Development Department.

[2] Average weekly earnings of full-time (male and female) adult employees in major production and transport industries, based on Department of Employment surveys. Separate figures for earnings of male adult employees are not available.

Note:

Average earnings figures are not available for 1988-89 or 1989-90.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the average weekly unrebated local authority rent in Scotland for each of the financial years 1979-80 to 1989-90, expressed by local authority area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table. Local authorities have yet to set their rent levels for 1989-90.

Housing

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will produce figures for the total stock of dwellings for Scotland by tenure; and if he will express those figures by local authority area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Estimates of the dwelling stock in Scotland by tenure are published quarterly in "Housing and Construction Statistics". The numbers of domestic subjects on the valuation roll by tenure for each local authority area in Scotland are published annually in "Rating Review: Estimates of Income and Expenditure Summary Volume" by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. Copies of both publications are available in the Library.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of local authority dwellings in Scotland, expressed by house type.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information is set out in the table.

Estimated local authority dwelling stock by house type, Scotland 1988

Dwelling type	Number of dwellings (thousand)
House	332
Highrise flat	54
Tenement flat	94
Other flat/maisonette	315
Type not known	32
Total	827

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much subsidy in terms of housing support grant and rate fund contribution has been paid and is estimated to be paid in respect of local authorities for each of the financial years 1979-80 to 1989-90, both in total, and expressed as a subsidy per dwelling for the total number of dwellings in local authority control and in respect of those authorities in receipt of subsidy.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table:

Financial year	Total subsidies £ million	Subsidies per dwelling[1] £	Subsidies per dwelling[2] £
1979-80	286·324	320·50	320·50

Notes:

[1] Calculated on the basis of the total number of dwellings held on local authority housing revenue accounts.

[2] Calculated on the basis of the numbers of dwellings held on local authority housing revenue accounts to which subsidy credited during that year.

Extradition

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the numbers of extradition requests made to the Republic of Ireland in each year since 1967, indicating how many of those requests were for crimes of a terrorist nature and how many requests were for other types of crimes, and show for each year the number of those extradition requests which were (a) granted (b) refused for (i) crimes of a terrorist nature and (ii) other types of crimes and how many were refused for each class of crime; if he will also indicate for each of these years, and each class of crime, how many extradition requests and warrants were found by the Irish authorities and the Irish courts to be unacceptable; if he will also publish in the Official Report the same information for extradition requests made to the United Kingdom by the Republic of Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information in respect of requests made to the Republic of Ireland prior to 1987 is not available centrally and cannot be ascertained. However, it is known that between 1967 and 1987 two requests were made in respect of a person accused of crimes of a terrorist nature. In 1973 a request was refused following an appeal to the High Court in Dublin. A request made in 1984 is still outstanding after the failure of the accused person to appear at an appeal hearing.

In 1987, requests were sent to the Republic of Ireland in three cases. None of these was in respect of crimes of a terrorist nature. In the current year, no requests have fallen to be made. In the period since the beginning of 1987, no requests have been refused.

Information as to requests for the extradition of persons resident in Scotland from the Republic of Ireland is not available centrally and cannot be obtained except at disproportionate cost, but I understand that such requests are likely to have averaged two or three per annum and, so far as can be ascertained, they have been granted.

EC (Regional Assistance)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total amount of European social fund moneys allocated to Scotland in each of the years 1983 to 1987, inclusive, and for each assisted area and function so designated to receive such funds.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 1 December 1988]: I have been asked to reply. We do not have information on what amounts were allocated specifically to Scotland for 1983 to 1984 under the European social fund.

For each of the years since 1985, the European Commission allocated to Scotland the following:

Year	ESF allocations in £ millions
1985	17·21
1986	14·05
1987	17·28

The allocation to the Scottish areas of high and long term unemployment and/or the industrial and sectoral restructuring (i.e. priority regions as defined by the European Commission) per year was:

Priority ESF regions and allocations in £'s

Regions	1985	1986	1987
Borders	210,257	—	—
Central	239,299	834,116	881,123
Dumfries and Galloway	52,103	136,661	134,416
Fife	1,074,297	238,155	844,738
Grampian	238,461	—	—
Highlands	223,960	334,008	370,022
Lothian	3,052,829	2,420,722	—
Strathclyde	10,893,009	8,737,971	9,338,236
Tayside	436,220	689,854	1,740,136
Western Isles	151,131	—	—

Because of the way the ESF Guidelines, which are the perogative of the European Commission, are drawn up, certain areas of Scotland will have had priority in one year but not in another.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Press Briefings

13. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next plans to hold a briefing meeting with journalists; and what subjects he intends to discuss.

Mr. Major: I have nothing to add to the answer that the hon. Member received from my right hon. Friend on 11 November at columns 358-59.

17. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to ensure that his future interviews with the press are recorded by two or more tape-recorders.

Mr. Major: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) earlier today.

IMF

14. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet M. Michel Camdessus, the managing director of the International Monetary Fund; and what matters will be discussed.

73. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet M. Michel Camdessus, the managing director of the International Monetary Fund; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Lawson: I expect to see M. Camdessus at the Interim Committee meeting in Washington in April, when a wide range of matters will be discussed.

Inflation

15. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current rate of inflation.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The retail price index rose by 6·4 per cent. in the year to October 1988.

31. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current rate of inflation.

Mr. Lilley: The retail price index rose by 6·4 per cent. in the year to October 1988.

68. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the principal factors increasing the inflation rate during the last year.

Mr. Lilley: Inflation has risen as a consequence of the very strong growth in demand this year. Recent tightening of monetary policy will ensure that inflation falls in 1989.

75. Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he intends to take to make up the shortfall on spending experienced by Departments committed to projects whose costs have risen through increased inflation.

Mr. Major: New plans were announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Autumn Statement on 1 November. Although the expected level of inflation was a factor that was considered when setting these plans, public expenditure is planned in cash terms and in general there is no automatic adjustment for higher prices. The planning total for 1989-90 remains £167·1 billion, the same level published in the last public expenditure White Paper. Within that unchanged total there is provision for substantial increases in spending on priority programmes.

84. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further steps he plans to take to reduce inflation.

Mr. Lilley: The progressive tightening of monetary conditions since the summer will exert downward pressure on inflation.

Balance of Payments

18. Mr. Cabom: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the balance of payments deficits of (a) the United State of America and (b) the United Kingdom, expressed as a proportion of the gross national product.

33. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the balance of payments deficits of (a) the United States of America and (b) the United Kingdom, expressed as a proportion of the gross national product.

48. Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the balance of payments deficits of (a) the United States of America and (b) the United Kingdom, expressed as a proportion of the gross national product.

53. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the balance of payments deficits of (a) the United States of America and (b) the United Kingdom, expressed as a proportion of the gross national product.

Mr. Lilley: In the latest 12 months for which figures are available, the current account deficit as a proportion of the gross national product was 2·0 per cent. in the United Kingdom compared with 3·1 per cent. in the United States of America.

29. Mr. Doran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current balance of payments position.

36. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current balance of payments position.

39. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current balance of payments position.

72. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current balance of payments position.

Mr. Major: Recent import figures and other indicators have shown that domestic demand has been growing rather too fast. Appropriate action has been taken.

Treasury Income

19. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total income to the Treasury since May 1979 from (a) North sea oil revenue and (b) the sale of publicly owned assets.

Mr. Norman Lamont: For the period from 1979-80 to 1987-88, North sea oil revenues amounted to some £62 billion. For the period from 1979-80 to the end of 1988-89, net privatisation proceeds are estimated to amount to some £23·5 billion.

Interest Rates

21. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the level of interest rates to fall; and if he will make a statement.

49. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of future movement in interest rates over the next year.

85. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of future movement in interest rates over the next year.

Mr. Lilley: Base rates are currently 13 per cent. I never comment on future movements in interest rates.

38. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of interest rates.

47. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of interest rates.

69. Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of interest rates.

Mr. Lilley: Bank base rates are 13 per cent.

43. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of continuing high interest rates on the international competitiveness of the pound sterling.

74. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of continuing high interest rates on the international competitiveness of the pound sterling.

Mr. Lilley: The sterling exchange rate is one of the factors taken into account in the continual and comprehensive assessment of monetary conditions.

61. Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the impact of current levels of interest rates on the economy.

Mr. Lilley: Higher interest rates will increase downward pressure on inflation and thereby provide the basis for our continued economic success.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of continuing high interest rates in the international competitiveness of the pound sterling.

Mr. Lilley: The sterling exchange rate is one of the factors taken into account in the continual and comprehensive assessment of monetary conditions.

Unleaded Petrol

20. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding increases in the tax concession on unleaded petrol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: In his last Budget, my right hon. Friend increased the tax differential in favour of unleaded petrol to nearly 11p per gallon so that at the pump it now sells at 5 or 6p cheaper than four-star.

22. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to increase the tax concession on unleaded petrol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend's Budget.

Growth

23. Mr. Moss: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth between 1981 and 1987 of (a) consumer expenditure, (b) exports and (c) investment in the British economy.

64. Mrs. Roe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth between 1981 and 1987 of (a) consumer expenditure, (b) exports and (c) investment in the British economy.

Mr. Major: Between 1981 and 1987 consumers' expenditure grew by 23 per cent. compared with growth of 28 per cent. for exports of goods and services and 33 per cent. for investment.

45. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest figure for the growth of output in the economy.

Mr. Major: The output measure of gross domestic product is estimated to have grown by 5 per cent. in the year to 1988, third quarter.

46. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average annual growth of productivity in the United Kingdom economy since 1980.

Mr. Major: Whole economy productivity has grown by an average of 2¾ per cent. a year since 1980, a rate similar to that of Japan and faster than all other major industrial countries.

"Residence in the United Kingdom"

24. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what responses he has received to the consultative document entitled "Residence in the United Kingdom".

Mr. Norman Lamont: At 30 November, the date by which comments were requested, 168 responses had been received expressing a wide range of views.

Pensioners

25. Mr. Morley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of national pensioners' organisations to discuss the fiscal regime for pensioners.

65. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of national pensioners' organisations to discuss the fiscal regime for pensioners.

67. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of national pensioners' organisations to discuss the fiscal regime for pensioners.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of national pensioners' organisations to discuss the fiscal regime for pensioners.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has not met representatives of national pensioners' organisations, but my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security meets representatives from time to time and passes on their concerns.

Privatisation

26. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many major businesses have been privatised since 1979; and how many of their employees have bought shares as a consequence.

80. Mr. Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many major businesses have been privatised since 1979; and how many of their employees have bought shares as a consequence.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Nineteen major businesses have been privatised since 1979; 90 per cent. of eligible employees have participated in Government share sales.

58. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total estimated yield to the Exchequer in corporation tax of those companies which have been privatised since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The companies privatised since 1979 paid a total of £1½ billion in corporation tax in the financial year 1987-88.

Environment

27. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will institute a review of the impact of the taxation system on the environment.

Mr. Norman Lamont: We have no plans for a separate review, but environmental issues are, of course, taken into account where appropriate in considering changes to the tax system.

Profitability

28. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the level of profitability in the British economy.

Mr. Major: Chart 2.9 of the forecast presented in the Autumn Statement indicates that in 1988 the net rate of return of non-North sea industrial and commercial companies should rise for the seventh successive year, to its highest level since the early 1960s.

Personal Taxation

30. Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress of his Department's plans for the reform of personal taxation.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The new system of independent taxation for husband and wife will be introduced in April 1990. The Inland Revenue already has preparations well in hand.

Investment

32. Mr. Bright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the level of investment in the economy.

Mr. Major: Total real fixed investment in the first half of 1988 was at its highest level ever, having grown by 9·6 per cent. on the same period a year earlier.

Group of Seven

34. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the current inflation rates of the member states of the Group of Seven industrialised countries.

35. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the current inflation rates of the member states of the Group of Seven leading industrialised countries.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Members to the answer that my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary gave to the hon. Member for Redcar (Ms. Mowlam) earlier today.

CBI

37. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet representatives of the Confederation of British Industry; and what matters will be discussed.

57. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when does he next expect to meet representatives of the Confederation of British Industry; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, South-East (Mr. Turner).

Contingency Fund

40. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he expects to allocate any resources from the contingency fund in 1989-90 to (a) pensions and (b) education.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he expects to allocate resources from the contingency fund in 1989-90 to (a) pensions and (b) education.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Blyth Valley (Mr. Campbell).

Child Tax Allowances

41. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to reintroduce child tax allowances.

42. Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to reintroduce child tax allowances.

50. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to reintroduce child tax allowances.

52. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to reintroduce child tax allowances.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No.

Taxation (Incentives)

44. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish any information his Department possesses on the incentive effects of the reduction in tax rates from 60 per cent. to 40 per cent. in his last Budget.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimates of the direct revenue costs of the reductions in income tax rates were published in the Financial Statement and Budget Report on Budget day. Notwithstanding those reductions, provisional figures suggest that income tax receipts in the first seven months of 1988-89 are 5 per cent. higher than in the corresponding period in 1987-88 as a result of the growth in employment and earnings. It is not possible to isolate the effects of the Budget measures on these factors.

Tax Thresholds

51. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people have been taken out of paying income tax as a result of the raising of tax thresholds over the past five years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Over 820,000 fewer single people and married couples are liable to income tax in 1988-89 compared with those who would be liable under the tax regime in 1983-84 with allowances and thresholds indexed for inflation to 1988-89.

Charitable Giving

54. Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the figures for the level of charitable giving.

66. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the level of charitable giving.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that comprehensive information on charitable giving is not available from official sources. Available information is as follows. Covenanted giving to charities amounted to some £450 million in 1985-86, £500 million in 1986-87 and is estimated at about £650 million in 1987-88. The available information on gifts to charities on death relates only to estates above the value at which capital transfer tax or inheritance tax would be payable in the absence of exemptions. For these estates the amounts are provisionally estimated at £300 million in both 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Public Sector Debt

55. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total public sector debt repayment for the year 1987-88; what was the equivalent figure for 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The public sector debt repayment was £3·6 billion in 1987-88, ¾ per cent. of GDP. In 1978-79 there was a public sector borrowing requirement (PSBR) of £9·2 billion, 5¼ per cent. of GDP, equivalent to a PSBR of £22·3 billion at 1987-88 levels of GDP.

European Monetary System

56. Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met his fellow European Community Ministers to discuss the European monetary systems.

Mr. Lawson: I meet my fellow European Finance Ministers regularly to discuss a wide range of economic matters.

Adult Unemployment

59. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment has been made of the effect upon the economy of the fall in adult unemployment since 1981.

Mr. Major: The seasonally adjusted unemployment rate has decreased from 9.0 per cent. at the end of 1981 to 7·7 per cent. in October this year. This has been accompanied by an increase in the workforce in employment of more than 1·6 million, which together with an exceptionally strong increase in productivity, has been reflected in a rate of growth of output since 1980 faster than that in any other major EC country.

Take-home Pay

60. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the increase in the real take-home pay of a married man on average earnings with two children since 1978-79.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A married man with two children on average male earnings will have received a real increase in take-home pay of more than 29 per cent. between 1978-79 and 1988-89.

Expenditure

62. Mr. John Ward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the proportion of gross domestic product represented by general Government expenditure; and what was the comparable figure in 1982-83.

Mr. Major: The Autumn Statement gave a forecast of 39¾ per cent. for the ratio of general Government expenditure (excluding privatisation proceeds) to gross domestic product in 1988-89. The corresponding figure for 1982-83 was 46¼ per cent.

70. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement on the outlook for public expenditure in 1989-90.

Mr. Major: As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer told the House in his Autumn Statement on 1 November, the public expenditure planning total for 1989-90 will remain at £167·1 billion, the level published in the last public expenditure White Paper. Further details of the public expenditure plans will be given in the 1989 public expenditure White Paper, to be published in the new year.

76. Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what percentage the level of the price index or gross domestic product deflator for 1989-90 assumed in the autumn statement 1988 in table 1.1 on trends in public expenditure exceeds that assumed for 1989-90 in the autumn statement for 1987 in table 2.2.

Mr. Major: In the 1988 Autumn Statement the GDP deflator is assumed to rise by 5 per cent. in 1989-90. This is 1¼ per cent. higher than the corresponding figure assumed in 1987.

EC (Contributions)

63. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the United Kingdom's contribution to the European Economic Community in 1987-88; and if this figure includes a proportion of the payment made to the European Economic Community in respect of its overspending in 1988.

Mr. Brooke: The United Kingdom's net payment to European Economic Community institutions in 1987-88 was £1,664 million. This figure does not include any amount in respect of our contribution to the 1988 IGA (assuming that is what my hon. Friend is referring to).

National Debt

71. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the cost to public funds in servicing the national debt in 1988-89; and what have been the comparable figures for the amount and percentage of total public expenditure over the past 10 years.

Mr. Lilley: The table below shows general Government gross debt interest payments for the year 1978-79 to 1991-92.

General Government Gross Debt Interest Payments

	£ billion	Percentage of General Government Expenditure
1978-79	7·4	9·9
1979-80	9·4	10·5
1980-81	11·4	10·5
1981-82	13·3	11·0
1982-83	13·9	10·5
1983-84	14·5	10·4
1984-85	16·1	10·7
1985-86	17·7	11·2
1986-87	17·6	10·7
1987-88	17·5	10·2
1988-89[1]	17·7	9·75
1989-90[1]	17·0	8·75

1991-92[1]	15·5	7·75

[1] Autumn Statement 1988 projections.

Negative Income Tax

77. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his current estimate of the cost of introducing a system of negative income tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is not possible to estimate the cost since my hon. Friend has not provided sufficient information about the tax system that he has in mind.

Disposable Income

78. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for real personal disposable income in the British economy.

Mr. Major: In the first half of 1988 real personal disposable income was 3 per cent. higher than in the first half of 1987.

Business Start-ups

79. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the number of business start-ups on the basis of value added tax registrations.

Mr. Lilley: The number of VAT registrations and de-registrations processed by Customs and Excise in the period April to October 1988 is:

	Number
New registrations	139,494
De-registrations	99,519
Net increase	39,975

This represents a record average increase in the size of the VAT register of well over 1,000 a week.

Capital Investment

81. Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what proportion he expects fixed capital investment to rise in 1988 over 1987.

Mr. Major: Total fixed capital investment was forecast in the Autumn Statement to grow in real terms by 12 per cent. in 1988.

Vehicle Excise Duty

82. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Government's intentions as to future rates of car tax.

Mr. Lilley: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's next Budget Statement.

Private Rented Housing

83. Mr. Harris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the implementation of the extension of the BES to private rented housing.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave on 30 November 1988 to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) at column 273.

Roads (Taxation)

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money was received by the Treasury from road user taxes, broken down into (a) fuel duty, (b) vehicle excise duty, (c) car tax, (d) value added tax on vehicles and (e) value added tax on fuel in each year since 1974-75.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 5 December 1988]: The following information is available:

£ million

	Fuel duty[1]	Vehicle excise Duty[2]	Car tax	VAT on vehicles[3]	VAT on road fuel[4]
1974-75	1,430	520	120	..	240
1975-76	1,430	770	180	..	460
1976-77	1,960	810	220	..	280
1977-78	2,210	1,050	290	..	300
1978-79	2,210	1,090	380	480	290
1979-80	2,670	1,160	520	1,030	490
1980-81	3,340	1,360	480	970	620
1981-82	4,430	1,620	510	1,060	760
1982-83	5,030	1,840	600	1,260	840

1986-87	7,300	2,520	960	1,900	950
1987-88	7,670	2,600	1,130	2,300	1,020

Notes:

[1] Excise duty receipts from petrol and DERV.
[2] Vehicle excise duty on all types of road vehicle.
[3] VAT on vehicles has been estimated from consumers' purchases of cars and motor cycles, and businesses' purchases of cars (on which tax is not deductible). Information is not available before 1978-79.
[4] VAT on fuel has been estimated from consumers' expenditure on fuel (including oil).

Child Benefit

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many and what proportion of those families with children who receive more in child benefit than they pay in income tax are out of work.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 29 November 1988]: In 1988-89, it is estimated that some 2 million families with children will receive more in child benefit than they pay out in income tax. About one quarter of heads of these families are unemployed. These estimates are based on projections of the results of the 1986 Family Expenditure Survey and are subject to revision.

EMPLOYMENT

YTS

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the percentage of school leavers in each local education authority area (a) entering YTS and (b) remaining unemployed since the YTS began.

Mr. Cope: The information is not available in the form requested. Figures from the youth cohort study (England and Wales) for the regions of England and Wales for the years 1985 to 1987 are provided in the table:

Youth Cohort Study (England and Wales)
Percentage of School Leavers on YTS or Out of Work at the time of the survey.

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will outline the overall budget for funding the underpinning agreements given to ET training managers broken down by region; how much has so far been claimed; and if he will make a statement on the progress of the underpinning arrangements.

Mr. Nicholls: The underpinning arrangements are funded from the overall resources available for employment training and there are no separate regional budgets for this purpose. So far some £836,000 has been claimed by training managers and these arrangements will continue to operate in a cost-effective way.

Disabled Persons (Staff)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of his Department's staff are classed as disabled.

Mr. Lee: At 1 June 1988, 2·23 per cent. of the Employment Department group's staff were registered as disabled. In addition, the group employs staff with disabilities who chose not to register.

Data Protection Act

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why members of his Department are on the interdepartmental group looking at the workings of the Data Protection Act; and whether he will define the concerns of his Department in respect of the Data Protection Act.

Mr. Cope: Many of the views expressed to the Data Protection Registrar in his informal consultation review on the workings of the Data Protection Act have been put by small firms and by organisations representing their interests. I have responsibility for representing the views of the small firms sector within Government.

Teachers (Pay)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will set out a table showing current figures for pay in real terms of teachers and the top quartile of non-manual average earnings over the same dates and for the same categories of teachers.

Mr. Lee: The latest available information, for April 1988 is published in table 1 of part A of the report on the new earnings survey 1988 for all non-manual employees, and in tables 50 and 51 of part B for male and female teachers. A copy of the report is in the Library.

Restart

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, Official Report, 1 December, columns 370-71, in what form the information relating to restart interviews is held; if he will provide an approximate breakdown of the costs involved in obtaining it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Information on restart interviews is collected on individual record cards which are completed for every person contacted by the programme. These records are summarised on monthly returns for employment service offices, areas, regions and Great Britain. They contain information on the number of people contacted, the number interviewed and the outcome.

It is not possible to isolate from other administrative work the costs of collecting the information.

Coal Industry (Accidents)

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any intention to postpone the proposed amendments to the Mines and Quarries Act 1984 in view of the poor accident rates of contractors to British Coal.

Mr. Nicholls: No. The proposed new legislation to replace the 1954 Act is intended to improve or maintain safety standards for all persons employed at mines including contractors.

Businesses

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the actions taken by the Government since the beginning of this Parliament to encourage small and medium-sized businesses.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 5 December 1988]: Since June 1987, the Government have continued in their efforts to promote a more vigorous enterprise culture and stimulate the development of small and medium sized businesses (SMEs).

Information and Advice

The small firms service (SFS) has increases its links with other agencies in the small firms support network. Its database of national information is now available to other organisations advising small businesses.

In 1987-88 the SFS answered over 266,000 inquiries, helped over 27,000 small businesses by counselling, and held over 39,000 counselling sessions.

The service has opened six inner city offices and is appointing inner city business advisers to promote self-employment and small business development in inner city areas. In December 1987 the service opened a centre for European business information in London.

The recent pilot for Government business shops will be expanded in 1989 with plans for four more in England, two of which will be sited in small firms centres. They will provide information on tax, national insurance and VAT, to help tackle Government rules and regulations at a single point.

Further details of the service's achievements are contained in the small firms service 1987-88 annual report, a copy of which is in the Library.

The local enterprise agency grant scheme was introduced on 1 April 1986 to encourage greater private sector support for the agencies. £2,713,856 was paid to 186 agencies in 1987-88. A local enterprise agency project scheme (LEAPS) commenced on 1 July 1988 to support projects providing special help to inner city businesses. To encourage private sector support for LEAs, the Government made provision in the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 (section 79) for tax relief on contributions to approved agencies by a company or unincorporated business.

The Rural Development Commission provides rural small businesses with advice through 33 business service offices. On 13 January the Department of Trade and Industry introduced the "enterprise initiative", a national programme which aims to raise the performance of management by promoting the use of best practice. The key element in the enterprise initiative is the six consultancy initiatives, covering marketing (including export marketing), design, quality, manufacturing systems, business planning, and financial and information systems. The other initiatives cover research and technology, enterprise and education, regional assistance and export.

Single European Market

The DTI has run a campaign to persuade firms of all sizes to prepare for the completion of the single European market in 1992.

Finance

Use of the loan guarantee scheme has increased following the introduction of simplified administrative procedures for loans up to £15,000. On 22 June 1988, as part of the action for cities initiative, an increase in the guarantee to 85 per cent. was introduced for businesses based in, or working to be based in, inner city task force areas.

The Business Expansion Scheme

In his Budget statement my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced a ceiling of £500,000 on investments under the business expansion scheme in any one company in any period of 12 months.

By the end of October 1988, over 390,000 people had taken part in the enterprise allowance scheme. Greater emphasis is now being placed on counselling and training applicants.

Taxation

The basic rate of income tax has been reduced from 27 per cent. to 25 per cent. and the small companies' rate of corporation tax has been reduced from 27 per cent. to 25 per cent. Capital gains tax has been rebased to 1982 so that only gains on losses accrued since 31 March 1982 are brought forward into account. Retirement relief has been extended to include 50 per cent. of the gains between £125,000 and £5,000. The inheritance tax threshold has been raised from £90,000 to £110,000 and the previous four rates reduced to a single rate of 40 per cent. The VAT registration threshold has been increased to £22,100. The rules for registration of voluntary and intending traders have been relaxed. Following a review of the Finance Act 1985 VAT penalties, a number of changes have been made to the regulations including the introduction of a more flexible penalty system for late registration.

Training

Since the introduction of employment training (ET) in September this year, the provision of training for enterprise programmes has been split between ET, for those wishing to start up in business, and programmes dealing with growth and development of existing small firms.

Employment training provides training for people who want to become self-employed and they can enter the programme without having to satisfy the usual ET eligibility criteria. A full range of enterprise training is available throughout the country on ET including enterprise assignments, counselling, skills training, enterprise rehearsal and formal start-up training through business enterprise programme (BEP) courses.

The Department of Employment Training Agency also runs a number of programmes aimed at equipping existing entrepreneurs with the skills and knowledge required to manage and develop a small business succesfully.

Purchasing

The Government have improved small firms' access to information about purchasing departments, their procedures, requirements and points of contact. A Department of Employment booklet, "Tendering for Government Contracts," has been supplemented by some individual Departments' own publications and information published on Prestel. Tendering and approval procedures have been simplified by exempting suppliers to most Government Departments from normal approval procedures for contracts under £10,000, by allowing non-approved firms to tender for non-urgent contracts subject to subsequent approval and by encouraging Departments to make regular reviews of tender lists to encourage new suppliers.

MOD Initiatives

MOD has continued to pursue the small firms initiative launched in November 1986. On 30 November 1988 the small firms advice division was expanded into the newly established MOD new suppliers service but the new service still retains within it a small firms group. A new and expanded edition of the booklet, "Selling to the MOD," has been published. These latest initiatives will encourage more companies of all sizes to compete for MOD business.

Innovation

The small firms merit award for research and technology—SMART—was run for the first time in 1986 to encourage small firms and potential entrepreneurs to put forward innovative ideas that cannot attract existing sources of funding. The Department of Trade and Industry, which runs this scheme, is evaluating the second competition which was run this year. It was extended to 140 awards in a broad range of technologies.

The support for innovation schemes was introduced in 1981 by the Department of Industry to offer firms assistance with research and development projects. Small firms have a simplified appraisal process and so far 50 per cent. of participants in the scheme have been small firms.

The teaching company scheme was set up by the Science and Engineering Research Council and the Department of Trade and Industry in the mid-1970s. In 1977-78 total funding for the scheme was around £15 million split between DTI, the research councils and industry. The scheme has led to the recruitment of high quality graduates into small companies, especially those with no previous graduate employees. The Department of Trade and Industry announced earlier this year that the scheme is being substantially increased with a target of 500 projects by 1992-93. The DTI will also put greater emphasis on the projects of small and medium sized firms, which should comprise 60 per cent. of all projects by 1992-93.

Inner Cities

As part of the Government's action for cities programme announced on 7 March, new initiatives have been introduced to extend the wide range of help available to new and existing small businesses in inner city areas and to make services to small firms more accessible.

Marketing

In 1987, my Department, together with the then Manpower Services Commission and Lloyds Bank, sponsored a series of workshops designed to show managers of small firms how to improve their competitiveness by the implementation of practical marketing techniques. COSIRA (now merged with the Development Commission), with funds provided by my Department offered grant to assist small rural businesses to improve their marketing and sales to trade buyers.

Wales

The Secretary of State for Wales instigated the gateway network initiative for small businesses in October 1987. It provides a high quality advice service to businesses in Wales through co-operation between member organisations. In July 1988 the local investment initiative ("local link") was launched. This scheme fosters contact between local businesses and investors.

In October 1988 a one-stop shop (Government Business Shop) was launched with the purpose of enabling businesses to get advice on tax and other Government regulations under one roof.

Northern Ireland

In Northern Ireland initiatives have included:

—introduction of new arrangements for enterprise training, covering those setting up new small businesses;

—upgrading of support to SMEs to help them improve their marketing and export activities;

—a programme to increase the awareness of local businesses of the opportunity to supply public sector purchasing requirement.

Scotland

The Government continue to provide substantial assistance to small firms in Scotland through the wide range of services delivered on an integrated basis by the Scottish Development Agency, including the consultancy initiative and the small firms information service and business counselling service; through the Highlands and Isles Development Board; and through the Industry Department for Scotland.

The year 1987 saw a net increase of 2,500 registered companies in Scotland. Many of these received Government assistance. Scotland was the first area in the United Kingdom to open a Government business shop to provide small companies with advice on Government regulations.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

School Fees

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in the Official Report the number of allowances and the total amount paid by the Government for day school fees in both the United Kingdom and overseas for the education of the children of (a) members of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, (b) members of the Diplomatic Service communications division and (c) the Overseas Development Administration including children of technical co-operation officers, for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is no provision to pay day school fees in the United Kingdom.

Total costs of day school education overseas for the financial year 1987-88 was £1,540,000 made up as follows:

(a) FCO £1,114,000.

(b) Diplomatic Service Communications Division £51,000.

(c) ODA £375,000.

A record of the number of children involved is not maintained.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in the Official Report the schools from which receipted bills were submitted in the last convenient year to facilitate the payment of allowances for the education of the children of diplomatic staff; and if he will state the number of children attending each school.

Mr. Waldegrave: The allowance paid to children of Diplomatic Service officers who attend boarding schools in the United Kingdom is based on an average of the fees of all boarding schools on the headmasters' conference list.

Only limited information is kept on schools used overseas. Each mission maintains its own list of authorised schools which offer education of a kind available without cost under the state system in Britain.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in the Official Report the number of allowances and the total amount paid by the Government for boarding school fees in both the United Kingdom and overseas for the education of the children of (a) members of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, (b) members of the Diplomatic Service communications division and (c) the Overseas Development Administration including children of technical co-operation officers for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Waldegrave: Fees are not paid for children to attend overseas boarding schools.

Expenditure on allowances paid to enable children to attend boarding schools in the United Kingdom in the financial year 1987-88 was as follows:

(a) FCO £7,031,000
(b) Diplomatic Service (DS) communications division £753,000
(c) ODA £1,500,000

The number of children at boarding school will vary during the course of the year. The numbers currently attending are:

(a) FCO 989 children
(b) DS communications division 111 children
(c) ODA 447 children

Diplomatic Service officers retain their right to boarding school allowance while serving in the United Kingdom in recognition of their liability to further overseas postings. In these circumstances the allowance is taxable and is grossed up to take account of the tax liability. The cost figures above take account of this.

Holiday Visits

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the approximate cost of holiday visit passages paid in respect of (a) children of Foreign Office personnel being educated in the United Kingdom and in receipt of education allowances and (b) members of the Diplomatic Service communications division being educated in the United Kingdom and in receipt of education allowances and of any further travelling expenses paid for the latest available year.

Mr. Waldegrave: The cost of fares paid to enable children to rejoin their parents overseas during the three school holidays was £977,000, made up as follows:

(a) FCO £920,000
(b) Diplomatic Service Communications Division £57,000

In addition, the sum of £51,000 (£48,000 plus £3,000) was spent as a contribution towards the cost of travel between school and airports in the United Kingdom.

These figures include costs of journeys made by children aged 18 to 21 who are in full-time further education and not, therefore, in receipt of education allowances.

Tjeluvyo Mgedezi

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make immediate representations to the South African Government to appeal for clemency for Tjeluvyo Mgedezi, the miners' leader who has been sentenced to be hanged.

Mrs. Chalker: It is not our normal practice to intervene in such cases. We do so only exceptionally, when all other avenues have been exhausted. Our criteria are that the case must be clearly political, and there must also be strong extenuating circumstances or grounds to doubt the fairness of the judicial process. Our embassy in Pretoria has spoken with Mr. Mgedezi's lawyers and understands that he intends to petition President Botha for clemency.

Mrs. Molly Maher

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why officials from his Department advised Mrs. Molly Maher of 28 Singleton road, Brighton, that they had no power to obtain or provide local assistance in interpretation facilities or provide advice and assistance to British citizens contemplating civil actions abroad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Formal interpretation/translation services overseas are not provided by consular officials, although at times they are able to assist informally. Consular officials cannot give legal advice to British citizens in general or specific terms on civil actions abroad. It is for the individual's own lawyers to recommend whether a case should be instituted and how it should be carried through.

In this instance Mrs. Maher's lawyer elected to serve papers through legal rather than diplomatic channels. However, Mrs. Maher has been in regular contact both with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the British embassy, Madrid, which has been checking and advising her of progress.

Disarmament

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what policy decisions have been taken by Her Majesty's Government on the definition of the phrase "at an early date" in article 6 of the 1968 nuclear non-proliferation treaty, with regard to the process of negotiated nuclear disarmament.

Mr. Waldegrave: Article VI of the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons requires the parties to it to pursue negotiations on effective measures connected with nuclear disarmament. Since the United States and the Soviet Union possess between them the overwhelming preponderance of nuclear weapons it is universally recognised that the primary responsibility for negotiations falls to them. The United States and Soviet Union are currently engaged in such negotiations which aim at 50 per cent. reductions in their strategic nuclear weapons.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how his Department was represented, in terms of papers presented or observers sent, at (a) the workshop on the verification of nuclear and conventional arms reductions at St. Bartholomew's hospital medical college from 30 November to 2 December and (b) the international scientists symposium, "Ways out of the Arms Race," at Imperial college of science and technology, in London from 2 to 4 December.

Mr. Waldegrave: A member of the arms control and disarmament research unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office attended both the workshop on the verification of nuclear and conventional arms reductions at St. Bartholomew's hospital medical college and the international scientists' symposium at Imperial college as an observer. He was joined by another member of the unit for the symposium.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government intend to take to fulfil their undertakings under the partial nuclear test ban treaty 1963, to set a date for the ending of all nuclear testing.

Mr. Waldegrave: The 1963 partial test ban treaty does not require the parties to it to set a date for the ending of all nuclear tests. The parties to the treaty state as their principal aim the speediest possible achievement of an agreement on general and complete disarmament. The cessation of nuclear testing is clearly linked with this. For as long as we rely for our security on deterrence based in part on the possession of nuclear weapons we will need to test them at a minimum level. The cessation of nuclear testing, therefore, remains a long-term goal.

WALES

Water Rate

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the average equated water rate poundage for each water authority in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The information requested by the hon. Member is set out in the table:

Average equated water rate 1988-89

Water authority	Water supply	Sewerage services	Environmental services	Pence total
Severn Trent[1]	22·6	27·6	0·75	50·95
Welsh Water	52·11	49·02	1·87	108·00

Source: Water authority returns.

[1] The geographical area which Severn Trent serves extends into mid-Wales. However, it is not possible to break the figure down on a purely Welsh basis.

Elderly Patients

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of patients visit general practitioners for treatment according to the number of appointments made for treatment within the following age bands (a) under 65 years, (b) between 65 and 74 years and (c) over 75 years.

Mr. Grist: Information on the numbers of appointments with GPs is not available centrally.

Disabled Persons (Staff)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of his Department's staff are classed as disabled.

Mr. Peter Walker: 1·4 per cent.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessments he has made as to the likely effect on (a) his Department's capital building programme and (b) the rent the Department will pay under occupational leases, of implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on value added tax on non-domestic buildings.

Mr. Peter Walker: Implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on value added tax will have no effect on my Department's capital building programme, since compensating adjustments have been made to the relevant expenditure provisions. At this stage, before landlords have decided whether to exercise their option to tax rents, it is not possible to offer meaningful estimates of the effects of the judgment on rental costs.

Pesticides

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement detailing the funding of research into the effect of pesticides used in the Welsh agricultural industry.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) on 1 December 1988, at column 328, by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Industry (Ownership)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has of the likely pattern of ownership of industry in Wales over the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have made no such estimate.

Special Waste

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report figures for each of the last five years of the volume of special waste imported into, and exported out of, Wales.

Mr. Ian Grist: This information is not maintained centrally.

Skill Shortages

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the level of skill shortages in (a) Newport, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information on skill shortages is not held centrally. Area offices of the Training Agency collect local information on the CALLMI system (computer assisted local labour market intelligence).

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on how many manufacturing companies are having difficulties recruiting skilled manual labour in (a) Newport, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information is not available centrally on the number of manufacturing companies having difficulties recruiting skilled labour. Any problems are dealt with locally by the area office of the Training Agency.

Employment Training

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in (a) Newport, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales are participating in training and retraining programmes.

Mr. Peter Walker: The number of people participating in training and retraining programmes is as follows:

	YTS	Employment training	Residual community programe job training scheme
Newport	1,295	586	12
Gwent	4,317	1,894	25
Wales	26,083	12,225	4,760

Figures are not available for miscellaneous smaller training programmes such as training for enterprise; local grants to employers and the wider opportunities training programme.

Council House Tenants

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many council house tenants in (a) Newport, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales receive benefit of some kind.

Mr. Grist: The numbers of council tenants in receipt of housing benefit in 1987-88 were as follows:

	Tenants
Newport	10,700
Gwent	37,508
Wales	189,745

Source: Department of Social Security.

Information on the number of council tenants in receipt of other benefits could not be obtained without incurring disproportionate costs.

Housing

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many repossession orders there have been in (a) Newport, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales since the housing benefit changes last April; and how many there were in 1987;

(2) how many cases of homelessness there have been in (a) Newport, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales since the housing benefit changes last April; and how many there were in 1987;

(3) how many cases of eviction there have been in (a) Newport, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales since the housing benefit changes last April; and how many there were in 1987.

Mr. Ian Grist: Information on homelessness resulting from eviction and repossession in 1987 is given in the following table. Statistics for the period following the housing benefit changes are not yet available.

	Cases accepted as homeless	Cases of eviction			Cases of repossession action by mortgagee
		Action by local authority	Action by other landlord	Total evictions
1987
Newport	625	7	150	157	94
Gwent	1,503	47	269	316	160
Wales	5,683	158	1,030	1,188	859

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit and Housing Benefit

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people he expects to be eligible for family credit and housing benefit in 1989-90, with a breakdown of their tenure;

(2) how much he expects to spend on family credit in 1989-90; and how much of this is attributable (a) to the notional compensation for free school meals and milk and (b) to the freezing of child benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Estimates of the average number of people likely to receive family credit and housing benefit in 1989-90 along with the estimate of expenditure on family credit will be published in the public expenditure White Paper early in the new year.

Pensioners

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number of pensioners overseas currently in receipt of United Kingdom pensions; and what are (a) the numbers in each country, (b) the number in countries where annual increments apply and (c) the number in countries where annual increments do not apply.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my hon. Friend's reply to him on 19 May 1988 at columns 551-54. More up to date figures are not available.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average income of those 75 years of age and over; and what is the real term increase in the incomes of those aged 75 years and over since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In 1986 the average net income of those aged 75 and over was £78·08. This represents a 26·9 per cent. real increase since 1979.
Source: Family Expenditure Survey 1986.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) at what level of income the earnings rule has operated in respect of retirement pensions in each year from 1984-85 to the present date;

(2) if he will list the value of the earnings rule for retirement pensions as a percentage of (i) gross and (ii) net average earning for each year since 1984.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is as follows:

Uprating dates	Earnings rule	Average weekly earnings of all male manual workers[1]				Earnings rule as a percentage of gross and net earnings
		Single person		Married couple		Single person		Married couple
		gross	net	gross	net	gross	net	gross	net

[1] Estimates of average weekly earnings for full-time employees, seasonally adjusted.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to improve the arrangements for payment to pensioners on income support of assistance for fuel costs during the winter months.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: General help with fuel costs is provided within income support allowances. The income support premiums target extra help to vulnerable groups including pensioners.

In addition, the social fund cold weather payments scheme provides help with extra heating costs incurred when the weather is particularly cold. A number of improvements to this scheme have already been announced which will increase the number of payments which can be made.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 30 November, how the estimated 1988-89 annual expenditure on housing benefit in Nottingham was calculated.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is largely a matter for the local authority to determine the basis for calculating the annual housing benefit expenditure estimate. In making an estimate the authority should take account of the effect of changes to the scheme and local factors such as increases in rate and rent levels. Actual expenditure for the financial year is, of course, subject to audit by the district auditor.

VAT

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessments he has made as to the likely effect on (a) his Department's capital building programme and (b) the rent the Department will pay under occupational leases of implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on value added tax on non-domestic buildings.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on VAT will have no effect on the Department's capital building programme since compensating adjustments have been made to the relevant expenditure provisions. At this stage, before landlords have decided whether to exercise their option to tax rents, it is not possible to offer meaningful estimates of the effects of the judgment on rental costs.

Disabled Persons (Staff)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of his Department's staff are classed as disabled.

Mr. Scott: Separate figures for the Department of Social Security are not available, but the June 1988 percentage for the Department of Health and Social Security was 1·42.

Languages

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which of his Department's publications are produced in languages other than English; and which are the additional languages used.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The following list details all of the forms currently available, or which will be available by the end of January, in Welsh.

Family Credit
FC1 and FC2.
Social Fund
SF100, SF200, SF101, SF102, SF103 and SF113.
General
BF134.
National Insurance
NI255 and RD3A.

An up-to-date version of leaflet FB2 entitled "Which Benefit", which gives details of the Social Security benefits available, is currently in preparation in Urdu, Bengali, Gujerati, Hindi, Punjabi, Chinese and Turkish. A revision of the previous leaflet has been necessary following the Social Security changes in April 1988. It is hoped to publish the amended version by the end of the year.

Benefit Forms

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the forms which have to be filled in for each benefit administered by his Department; and how many pages and how many questions are found in each.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A list of the principal claim forms for benefits administered by the Department is as follows. The other information requested is not readily available and could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Main Benefit	Form No.	Details
Income Support	B1	Income Support for people who are unemployed
	B1 (Student)	Income Support for Students who are unemployed (during long vacations)

	NI225	Claim for Mobility Allowance

Centrepoint, Soho

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will increase his grant to Centrepoint, Soho to enable them to accommodate 16 to 17-year-olds;

(2) what steps he intends to take to ensure continuity of funding for Centrepoint, Soho's work with homeless 16 to 17-year-olds in the west end of London.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department makes an annual contribution towards the costs of the Centrepoint hostel under paragraph 4 of schedule 5 of the Social Security Act 1980.

An application for increased funding is currently under consideration.

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will instruct his officials to meet representatives of Centrepoint, Soho urgently following the withdrawal of benefit entitlement fronm 16 to 17-year-olds.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Discussions have taken place at local level about operational arrangements. Officials in headquarters will, however, arrange to meet representatives of Centrepoint to discuss more widely issues arising from the general withdrawal of entitlement to income support from 16 and 17-year-olds.

Family Income Supplement

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will indicate the average cost of providing family income supplement prior to April 1988 and family credit since that date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In 1985-86, the latest date for which information on administrative costs is available, it is estimated that the average weekly cost per family income supplement beneficiary was approximately 45p. Figures for 1986-87 will be published in the public expenditure White Paper early in the new year. Comparable figures for family credit are not available. In June 1987, the average award of family income supplement was approximately £15 per week. Indications are that current awards of family credit average over £25 per week.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide additional information for the most recent comparable period before April stating the average delay between receipt of a claim for family income supplement and the determination of the claim; and if he will indicate how many claims were then awaiting determination.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The average clearance time for claims cleared during the four weeks ending 11 March 1988 was just over 16 working days. On 11 March, there were 29,044 claims awaiting determination.

Family Credit

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give details of the current budget for publicising and promoting family credit and provide information in a comparable form for the previous budget for publicising family income supplement; and what plans he has to raise awareness of family credit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The advertising budget for family credit is over £3 million in the current financial year. Family income supplement was last advertised in 1983-84 when some £½ million was spent. Both figures exclude expenditure on leaflets and posters where direct comparisons are not possible. For details of current and future publicity I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle) on 4 November at column 810.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will indicate the current level of average delay between receipt of a claim for family credit and the determination of a claim; and how many claims are awaiting determination at present.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: For clearance time, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hereford (Mr. Shepherd) on 6 December. At the end of November there were 46,773 family credit claims outstanding. Of these, about 32,000 were awaiting replies to inquiries, mainly to employers or the claimant.

YTS

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what benefits are available to Terry Flowers of Coventry aged 17 years, who is registered for YTS but unable to obtain a placing and whose bridging allowance has expired; and if he will entertain a claim from Mr. Flowers for payment of benefit on the grounds of hardship.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Claims for income support under the severe hardship provision will be entertained from any 16 or 17-year-old. However, we can consider making payments only to young people who are actively pursuing a YTS place.

Multi-occupied Properties

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy that his Department's local offices inform local authorities and fire authorities of hostels and other multi-occupied properties which claimants give as addresses for benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information supplied by benefit claimants is held in strict confidence. The staff in local offices may, however, consult local authority social services and/or fire prevention officers in confidence when in their view there are serious risks to the life or health of an individual claimant arising from the condition of a home or hostel.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his local office staff recommended to claimants the 24 bed hostel in Hay Mills, Birmingham.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. Local office staff do not recommend addresses to claimants.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East on 1 December, Official Report, col. 389, concerning unemployment benefit, what information is available and over what range he will answer questions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information relating to age, sex, benefit status and duration of unemployment is collected in respect of a 5 per cent. sample of claimants for unemployment benefit on a particular day at six-monthly intervals. It is not collected in respect of all claimants making claims at a particular unemployment benefit office (UBO).

The only information collected on the basis of individual UBOs is the number of claims made each month. Information is not collected on how many of those claims satisfy the necessary conditions of entitlement yet result in disqualification for benefit.

To collect the kind of detailed information requested by the hon. Member would entail mounting a special exercise. This would be disproportionately costly.

Invalidity Benefit

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by what percentage the addition to invalidity benefit for a dependent child, including child benefit, is to be increased in April 1989; and what was the percentage increase in prices over the 12 months to September 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The child dependency increase payable with invalidity benefit is to be uprated by the best of both worlds approach which my right hon. Friend explained to the House on 27 October. The child dependency increase will rise by slightly more than 6·5 per cent. from April 1989. The addition to invalidity benefit for a dependent child, including child benefit, will be increased by 3·5 per cent. The percentage increase in the published RPI over the 12 months to September 1988 was 5·9 per cent.

ENERGY

Wind Turbine Generators

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the number of three-bladed steel wind turbine generators that have been given planning permission and their locations; how many are awaiting planning permission and what are their locations; and if he will make a statement about the relative merits of this source of energy.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Department of Energy does not keep records on applications for, or awards of, planning permission for wind turbines.

However, large three-bladed wind turbines have been or are being constructed in the following locations:

Shetland	Caithness
Orkney	Aberdeen

Ayrshire
Northumberland
Yorkshire
Dyfed
Cornwall
Devon
Kent

Conservation Funding

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what funding he has made available for (a) domestic and (b) industrial energy conservation measures;

(2) what has been the total of Government expenditure on energy conservation measures in industry, public sector housing and private sector housing for the years 1979 to 1988; and what are the projected expenditure levels for energy-saving initiatives for the years 1988 to 1991.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Many of the energy efficiency programmes operated by my Department have been cross-sectoral, so information on total expenditure by sector is not readily available. The programmes of a number of other Government Departments contribute to the improvement of energy eficiency, but it is normally not possible to attribute expenditure between the energy efficiency and the other objectives of the programmes. The table gives expenditure by my Department on energy efficiency programmes, expenditure by the Department of the Environment, the Scottish Office and the Welsh Office on the homes insulation scheme, and an estimate of expenditure by the Departments of Employment and Social Security on the community insulation programme (these payments also contribute towards employment and social policy objectives).

£ millions

[1] Expenditure by the Department of the Environment and the Department of Energy.
[2] Expenditure by the Scottish and Welsh Offices.
[3] Estimated expenditure by the Departments of Employment and Social Security. The community insulation programme began in 1981-82, but figures for employment and social security payments which were taken up by community insulation projects in 1981-82 and 1982-83 are not available.
[4] Provisional.
[5] Provision.

Electricity Industry (Privatisation)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what further proposals for the electricity industry he has to ensure the continuing existence of the national grid.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The benefits of the national grid will be maintained. It will be established as a separate company owned by the distribution companies who will have the statutory obligation to supply. As the holder of the transmission licence it will have a clear statutory duty to develop and maintain an efficient, co-ordinated and economical system of electricity transmission.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy who will pay for the costs and major risks of the nuclear programme, after the privatisation of electricity.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government will be taking powers in the Electricity Bill to enable them to contribute towards certain unforeseen nuclear back end costs. All other nuclear costs and risks will be shared, as they are now, between the company and the customer.

Plutonium

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what quantities of plutonium originated at the Hunterston Magnox reactors have been exported to the United States under the 1958 mutual defence agreement on atomic energy, as amended in 1959.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Plutonium produced in the generating boards' Magnox reactors was consigned to the United States before 1971 under the United States/United Kingdom defence agreement and, as stated by the then Prime Minister on 21 April 1964 at columns 1097-98, has been used by the United States for civil purposes. Because of the barter arrangements under which plutonium was consigned, it would not be in the national interest to publish the figures.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportions of the plutonium created in the Magnox reactors at Hunterston since they were commissioned are now (a) still at the reactor site in spent fuel, (b) at Sellafield in unreprocessed spent fuel, (c) in separate form in store at Sellafield, (d) re-used in the United Kingdom civil or research nuclear fuel, (e) exported under safeguards and (f) exported without safeguards.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the annual plutonium figures published by my Department on 13 October 1988, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to ensure that provision for the privatisation of present Electricity Board Magnox reactors includes assurances that no plutonium owned by or created in reactors operated by private companies can be used for military purposes under any circumstances, including those encompassed by national security requirements.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Following privatisation, plutonium will continue to be handled as securely as it is at present. All existing controls on the export and transport of nuclear material will continue to apply. In addition, all civil nuclear material will continue to remain subject to Euratom safeguards and to the terms of the United Kingdom/Euratom/IAEA safeguards agreement. The Government have no plans to transfer any of this material to defence use.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how often the Central Electricity Generating Board provides information on the isotopic quality of its plutonium to Euratom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Information on the isotopic composition of plutonium contained in CEGB irradiated fuel is reported to Euratom at the beginning of the month following its dispatch from the power station concerned.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what physical verification of plutonium is conducted by Euratom safeguards inspectors at the material balance area 3 at British Nuclear Fuels Limited, Sellafield.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The main elements of the safeguards inspection arrangements for Sellafield agreed with Euratom were given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Walker) in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Penrith and the Border (Mr. Maclean) on 4 June 1986 at columns 594-95.

Spent Magnox Fuel

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of spent Magnox fuel from Hunterston reprocessed at Sellafield was co-processed with spent fuel from the military reactors at Calder Hall and Chapelcross.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The co-processing of civil and non-civil material at Sellafield has been phased out. Since 1986, separate civil and non-civil reprocessing operations have been carried out sequentially, rather than simultaneously.

VAT

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessments he has made as to the likely effect on (a) his Department's capital building programme and (b) the rent the Department will pay under occupational leases, of implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on value added tax on non domestic buildings.

Mr. Parkinson: The Department does not have a capital building programme. It is not possible to estimate the effect of the judgment before landlords have decided whether to exercise their option of charging VAT on rents.

Advanced Gas-Cooled Reactors

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and if they reviewed the board's plans to overcome its current operating problems with advanced gas-cooled reactors.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I meet regularly with the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board and discuss a wide range of issues. The board has work in hand which is aimed at overcoming the operating problems of the AGR's.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what estimates he has of (a) the costs incurred by the Central Electricity Generating Board directly because of the necessity to close down each of the Heysham and Hartlepool reactors for a period of several days before refuelling is undertaken, (b) the nett loss of efficiency of these reactors because of this requirement, (c) the total losses of generation and (d) the costs associated therewith to date; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the original design intent as to whether the advanced gas cooled reactors at Heysham A and Hartlepool are to be capable of refuelling whilst in a full operational condition; what is the current operational intent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Energy Saving

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish a guide to energy-saving schemes proposed by individual electricity boards.

Mr. Peter Morrison: This is a matter for the area boards.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what volumes of carbon dioxide gas (a) in pure form and (b) radioactively contaminated have been discharged from each of the Central Electricity Generating Board magnox advanced gas-cooled reactor and nuclear plants, respectively, in each year since 1979; and if he will list in the Official Report the volumes and dates of the gas releases;

(2) what estimate he has made of the contribution to the greenhouse effect of gas build-up from carbon dioxide released from the coolant circuits of nuclear power plants in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: These are matters for the CEGB. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what will be the cost to public funds of decommissioning the nuclear plants at Calderhall and Chapelcross.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The decommissioning of the nuclear power plants at Calderhall and Chapelcross is the responsibility of the operator, British Nuclear Fuels plc. To the extent that Government programmes have benefited from the operation of these plants Government will contribute an appropriate share towards the costs of decommissioning.

Argon 41

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the half-life of argon 41; what types of radiation argon 41 emits; and what are their energy levels.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am advised by the National Radiological Protection Board that the radioisotope Argon 41 has a half-life of 1·83 hours. The energies of its principal emissions are:

beta particles:
1·198 mega electronvolts
gamma rays:
1·294 mega electronvolts

Electricity Charges

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will publish figures in the Official Report showing the domestic charge for a unit of electricity as a percentage of the price charged to large industrial users in the United Kingdom and West Germany for the latest period for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Spicer: From the Electricity Council "Survey of International Prices", a copy of which is available in the Library, the latest information comparing prices in England and Wales with West Germany is as follows:

Pence/KWh	Domestic price	Industrial price	Domestic as percentage of industrial
England and Wales	6·81	3·37	202
West Germany	9·41	4·43	212

Notes:
1. The domestic price is for a consumer with an annual requirement of 3,300 KWhrs.
2. The industrial price is for a large consumer with an annual maximum demand of 10 MW at a load of 80 per cent.
3. The comparison is of prices as at 1 July 1988.

Disabled Persons (Staff)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of his Department's staff are classed as disabled.

Mr. Parkinson: At 1 December 1988 1·15 per cent. of the staff of my Department were registered disabled persons.

Magnox Plant, Sellafield

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether, in the past or currently, the British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. Magnox fuel reprocessing plant at Sellafield has been utilised for the production of the reprocessing or irradiated fuels to yield fissile plutonium for the atomic weapons programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The facility referred to handles materials for civil and defence purposes as required. Any defence work would be conducted separately from the civil programme.

Power Stations

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list those redundant Central Electricity Generating Board power stations thought to be capable of being recommissioned.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Gas and Electricity Prices

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the average price paid (a) per therm of gas and (b) per kilowatt hour of electricity by domestic consumers in Britain in 1979, 1987 and 1988 at constant prices deflated by the retail prices index.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The average prices paid by domestic consumers in Great Britain, deflated to 1987 constant prices using the retail prices index, are shown in the following table. Data for this year is not yet available.

Electricity pence per kilowatt hour		Gas[1] pence per therm
1979	5·35	1979-80	33·6
1987	5·50	1987-88	41·7

[1] Prices for gas are available only for years ended 31 March.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the annual cost of heating a small semi-detached standardised house in England, Scotland and Wales by (a) gas, (b) electricity, (c) coal and (d) oil in 1979 and 1987; and what are the projected costs for 1988.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Holt) on Monday 7 November 1988 at columns 22-24; this provided the costs of heating a standardised two bedroom house in four regions of the United Kingdom as at April 1988. The four regions were, the West Country, the South-East, the North-East and Scotland. Comparative figures for Wales as of the same date are as follows:

Calculated costs of heating a two bedroom house by fuel in Wales

Gas £	Electricity £	Coal £	Oil £
115-200 (190-280)	133-245 (205-320)	123-230 (265-370)	95-165 (156-225)

Figures in brackets include water heating.

Indices showing the change in the average United Kingdom costs of heating a house with different fuels (taking April 1988 as 100) measured in real terms are as follows:

Indices of real energy costs domestic sector (April 1988 = 100)

	Gas	Electricity	Coal	Oil
1979	84	97	92	115
1987	105	100	105	114
1988 (April)	100	100	100	100

Atomic Energy Research Establishment, Harwell

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether (a) all buildings and (b) all nuclear materials stored or processed at the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's Atomic Energy Research Establishment at Harwell have been under full safeguards by (i) the International Atomic Energy Agency and (ii) Euratom since 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: All civil nuclear material in the United Kingdom is subject to Euratom safeguards and the terms of the United Kingdom/Euratom/IAEA safeguards agreement. Harwell carries out contract R and D work for MOD which involves the presence of unsafeguarded material. This is entirely consistent with the United Kingdom's international safeguards obligations. The details cannot be disclosed for national security reasons.

Molten Salt Fast Burner Reactor

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what research has been conducted on the molten salt fast burner reactor.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There has been no significant research on this subject in the United Kingdom.

Inertial Confinement Fusion Technology

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what evaluation has been made of the problems of safeguarding inertial confinement fusion technology against diversion to military use.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department does not fund research into inertial confinement fusion technology.

Fiddler's Ferry Power Station

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has about current proposals for the erection of the desulphurisation plant at Fiddler's Ferry power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Piper Alpha

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has reached a final decision on the abandonment programme for Piper Alpha.

Mr. Peter Morrison: As I told the House on 30 November at column 757, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State had, that morning decided that subject to conditions, he was prepared to approve, under section 4 of the Petroleum Act 1987, the abandonment programme for Piper Alpha submitted by Occidental and its co-venturers. This proposed the use of explosive charges to topple the remains of the installation outwards on to the sea bed, away from the existing pile of debris, leaving at least 75m of clear water above all remains.

I also explained that the co-venturers had the right under the Petroleum Act to make written representations about the proposed conditions. They have now informed my right hon. Friend that they do not wish to make representations and he has approved their programme.

The conditions attached to my right hon. Friend's approval include requirements for surveys of the toppled remains and surrounding sea bed to establish the position of debris and to monitor for leakage of oil or gas. They also require sediment samples to be obtained and examined for the presence of polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) and radioactivity. The conditions provide for repetition of these surveys and of sediment sampling at such times as the Secretary of State may subsequently direct. They also provide for debris to be moved or removed as he may direct, for any leakage of oil or gas to be sealed to his satisfaction and for steps to be taken to deal with any unacceptable levels of pollution.

The installation was so badly damaged by the fire and explosions of 6 July as to be beyond preservation. If it is not toppled in a controlled way its collapse is inevitable, and could occur soon but probably during the coming winter. If it does collapse under natural forces, it is likely to fall inwards upon existing debris rendering any further removal or recovery operations impossibly difficult and dangerous and creating a serious hazard to shipping, as it would lie just below the surface.

To take the platform down piece by piece would mean first removing the remaining module. Because of the precarious condition of the module itself, and of the structure supporting it, Occidental and its co-venturers submitted, and the Department's safety directorate accepts, that such an attempt would involve unacceptable hazard to the personnel involved.

The possibility that a toppling operation might destroy evidence which would otherwise assist the technical investigation or the public inquiry has been carefully considered also. However, the visible remains have been inspected and it seems unlikely that any useful evidence would be lost. The toppled structure in its final position should not make access to the central debris pile, and such evidence as it may contain, any more difficult than is already the case. Toppling the jacket would however eliminate a hazard which could otherwise hamper diving and other work on the existing debris. Both Lord Cullen and the Procurator Fiscal, have been advised of Occidental's proposal, and neither has any objection in principle.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Magistrates

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Attorney-General how many full-time stipendiary magistrates were assigned to the courts on 1 January of each year from 1985 to 1988, inclusive, and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The number of full-time stipendiary magistrates on 1 January in each of the following years was:

Year	Number
1985	60
1986	62
1987	60
1988	61

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Attorney-General how many acting stipendiary magistrates were assigned to the courts on 1 January of each year from 1985 to 1988, inclusive; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The number of persons approved to sit as acting stipendiary magistrates on 1 January in each of the following years was:

Year	Number
1985	91
1986	69
1987	71
1988	68

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the responsibilities of a branch Crown prosecutor ; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The responsibilities of a branch Crown prosecutor will vary depending on the characteristics of the branch for which he is responsible and the duties delegated to him by the chief Crown prosecutor for the area. They will include responsibility for the management of staff and other resources within the branch, and responsibility for all casework allocated to the branch.

A branch Crown prosecutor may have responsibility for some 10 to 35 lawyers and a similar number of support staff. The additional responsibility involved in running a large branch is recognised by a higher Civil Service grading and by support from assistant branch Crown prosecutor posts.

The numbers of staff managed by branch Crown prosecutors and the grading of their duties are currently the subject of internal review.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Attorney-General if he will set out the scale of salaries for a branch Crown prosecutor (a) in London, (b) in the shire counties, and (c) in the metropolitan counties; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: In London and most metropolitan areas branch Crown prosecutors posts are held by officers at grade 5 level; elsewhere they are held by officers at grade 6 level. The relevant salary scales for all areas except the shire counties of Hertfordshire and Bedfordshire are as follows:

Grade 5
effective from
1 October 1988	1 April 1989
27,087	28,170
28,154	29,280
29,255	30,425
30,387[1]	31,602[1]
31,536[2]	32,826[2]
32,784[2]	34,095[2]
23,053[2]	35,415[2]
35,371[2]	36,786[2]
Grade 6
19,905	21,633
20,801	22,606
22,715	23,624
24,805	25,797
27,087[1]	28,170[1]
28,154[2]	29,280[2]
29,255[2]	30,425[2]
30,387[2]	31,602[2]
31,563[2]	32,826[2]

Grade 6 branch Crown prosecutors in the shire areas of Hertfordshire and Bedfordshire are paid at the following rate:

effective from
1 October 1988	1 April 1989
22,226	23,624
23,226	24,686
24,805	25,797
27,087	28,170
28,154[1]	29,280[1]
29,255[2]	30,425[2]
30,387[2]	31,602[2]

32,784[2]	34,095[2]

London weighting allowance is payable where appropriate.
[1] Scale maximum.
[2] Performance points.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Attorney-General what is the level of London weighting allowance given to a branch of Crown prosecutor; if there are any plans to review the present position; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The relevant scales of London weighting allowance payable to branch Crown prosecutors are as follows:

	£ per annum
Inner London	1,750
Intermediate London	1,000
Outer London	725

Levels of London weighting are determined centrally for the Civil Service as a whole and are subject to regular review.

HEALTH

Midwives

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress of the midwives' regrading exercise.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The grading outcomes which I published on 28 November show that midwives have benefited even more than nurses from the new structure. Nine out of ten staff midwives have received increases of around 25 per cent. more. Three out of four midwifery sisters have received increases of at least 16 per cent., or £1,925. The average value to midwives of this year's award following the regrading is over 20 per cent. Midwives have now been told their new grades and the vast majority received the new rates of pay in their November pay packets. Back pay from April should be paid before Christmas.

At my meeting with the Royal College of Midwives on 7 December I agreed to repeat to health authorities previous guidance on particular issues affecting grading in order to help inform some appeals.

Incontinence Pads

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice has been given to district health authorities concerning the supply of incontinence pads to very dependent elderly people in both local authority and private residential nursing homes.

Mrs. Currie: Health authorities have discretion to supply incontinence pads to people living in residential care homes. They were advised in 1974 that they might provide pads free of charge for the residents of such homes but not for patients in private nursing homes.

Cervical Smear Tests

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the current average waiting times for women in North Staffordshire district health authority waiting for the results of cervical smear tests.

Mrs. Currie: The current backlog of cervical smears in north Staffordshire is equivalent to 4-5 weeks' work. This is a substantial improvement in the backlog which peaked at three months in January. Two additional part-time screening staff were recruited last summer, and the DHA will continue to send some smears to a private laboratory in Birmingham until waiting times have been further reduced.

Pre-school Playgroups

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will detail the percentage of under five-year-olds in pre-school playgroups in each local authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We do not have information in exactly the form requested. The available information relates to the number of places in playgroups and the table gives the percentage of the population aged under five years for each local authority in England.

Note: [1]Some figures have been estimated.

Disabled Persons (Staff)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of his Department's staff are classed as disabled.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not have separate figures for the Department of Health but the June 1988 percentage for the Department of Health and Social Security was 1·42 per cent.

Dentistry (Surgical Gloves)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has given to general dental practitioners on the wearing of surgical gloves by dentists and their staff.

Mrs. Currie: The chief dental officer of the Department issued guidance to dentists in April 1986 which stressed the importance of following high standards of cross-infection control when treating all patients, including wearing operating gloves when treating patients.

He wrote to dentists again in May 1988 reminding them of the importance of wearing gloves to ensure an effective barrier against infection for themselves, their staff and their patients.

Maternity Care

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make a statement on the provision of maternity care in Southport, Lancashire, under the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: Maternity care in the Southport and Formby health authority is provided at the Christina Hartley maternity hospital which has 35 obstetric beds and 11 special care baby cots. My hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman of the district health authority for further information about local maternity services.

Packaged Food

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action Her Majesty's Government have taken on the World Health Organisation recommendation in February that cooked food in sealed packages found to contain listeria monocytogenes should be withdrawn.

Mrs. Currie: No action is necessary. Well established procedures already exist to effect the withdrawal of such foods.

Leeds Western District Health Authority

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to announce the appointment of a new chairman for Leeds western district health authority.

Mr. Mellor: Very soon.

Radiotherapy Machines

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make it his policy to establish a national system for checking and monitoring within each health authority the correct calibration and performance of radiotherapy machines in addition to the monitoring by the Health and Safety Executive to be implemented by all departments of physics and radiation;

(2) if there is a national system for setting up and monitoring the performance of cancer radioactive treatment machines which includes the initial calibration calculation;

(3) if he will issue guidance to district health authorities as to their obligations to take full responsibility for the standards of work carried out by their various departments including physics and radiotherapy and as to the different responsibilities in this area and of the Health and Safety Executive.

Mrs. Currie: It is a prime responsibility of health authorities to ensure the safe and effective operation of all departments. This is over and above any specific statutory responsibilities under regulations enforced by inspectors of the Health and Safety Executive. In the light of the recent report by Sir Bryan Thwaites on the regrettable lapses at the Royal Devon and Exeter hospital, we will be issuing further guidance on the calibration of radiotherapy machines which we will expect all health authorities to implement.

Health Authorities (Women General Managers)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Heath if he will list (a) the regional health authorities and (b) the district health authorities that have women general managers.

Mr. Mellor: South Western regional health authority has a woman general manager. The following district health authorities also have women general managers:

Central Nottinghamshire
North Bedfordshire
Parkside
Islington
Waltham Forest
Haringey
Wandsworth
Rochdale

Nurses

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the average number of years worked part-time in the National Health Service by nurses after qualification.

Mr. Mellor: The answer that I gave to the hon. Member's question on 25 November at column 60 included both whole-time and part-time working because individual nurses and midwives move between whole-time and part-time working during their careers. The information cannot be provided separately for whole-time and part-time service.

Medical Care, Bolton

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set up an inquiry into the alleged failure of medical care in Bolton that resulted in the death of Craig Jackson and jeopardised the life of Matthew Catton.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 2 December 1988]: I am aware of the local concern generated by these two cases and I regret the distress they have caused to the families of Craig Jackson and Matthew Catton. But at this stage there are no obvious national implications in the approach to their treatment which would justify my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State holding an inquiry.

Bolton health authority and the Bolton family practitioner committee will be considering what investigations into the cases are appropriate. The parents of both boys can also make use of the complaints procedure of the health authority and family practitioner committee if they feel it appropriate.

Premium Smokeless Fuels

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had about the high costs of premium smokeless fuels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply.

The particular prices of domestic coals are a matter for the coal merchants concerned. But in general smokeless fuels are more expensive than bituminous house coals, partly because of their greater calorific value and, in the case of manufactured fuels, partly because considerable processing costs are incurred.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 9 December 1988

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Physics and Chemistry

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on rationalisation plans for physics and chemistry teaching and research in universities.

Mr. Jackson: Reports setting out the proposed principles for rationalisation of provision were issued by the University Grants Committee to the universities for consultation on 27 October. The committee and its successor, the Universities Funding Council, will consider future provision for physics and chemistry in the light of the reports and the comments received.

Female Teachers (Leaflet 873 PEN)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received following the issue of leaflet 873 PEN to female teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received 58 letters from hon. Members and about 500 from individual teachers. So far, there have been 400 elections to cover previous years which will count towards a widower's pension.

Cox Report

Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what time was allowed for consultation on the Cox report on English; from whom he is seeking comments; and when he expects to announce decisions on the report.

Mrs. Rumbold: The National Curriculum Council (NCC) is conducting statutory consultations on my right hon. Friends' proposals for English in the national curriculum for pupils aged 5 to 11. Those proposals are based on the recommendations in the first report of the national curriculum English working group, chaired by Professor Brian Cox. Consultations began on 15 November and the NCC has asked for replies by 27 January 1989. It has consulted formally those bodies which it is obliged to consult under section 20 of the Education Reform Act 1988 and a number of others of its choosing.

Student Unions

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will make a statement on the progress of his Department's review of student unions; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects to announce the results of his Department's review of student unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My Department is now analysing the returns to its questionnaire on student unions. It will need a few weeks to tabulate and summarise the data. Thereafter, the Government will reach conclusions on the best action to take and will consult all those concerned about these conclusions. I cannot at present predict how long this will take.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of the returned questionnaires for his Department's review of student unions (a) supported and (b) opposed automatic membership of student unions.

Mr. Jackson: Respondents were not asked to comment on this issue and hardly any did so.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what (a) organisations, (b) individuals, (c) institutions of higher and further education and (d) student unions will receive the results of his Department's review of student unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 31 October at column 471.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place in the Library a copy of the results of his Department's review of student unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend expects in due course to place in the Library a copy of the Government's conclusions in whatever form they are made available for consultation.

Research Centres

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of university and interdisciplinary research centres that have already been founded and those in the planning stages, together with the subjects investigated and the geographical locations and the funding for each.

Mr. Jackson: As regards the initiative by the advisory board for the research councils for the establishment of interdisciplinary research centres, commitments have already been made for the following centres:

	£ million
Superconductivity—Cambridge	7·2 over 6 years
Molecular sciences—Oxford	8·9 over 6 years
Engineering design—Glasgow	6·3 over 6 years
Surface science—Liverpool	10·4 over 6 years
Semiconductor materials—London	9·7 over 6 years
Toxicology—Under consideration	8·0 over 5 years
Molecular medicine—Oxford	3·5 over 5 years
Human communication—Edinburgh	2·5 over 5 years

A substantial number of proposals for the establishment of further IRCs are currently under consideration by the research councils.

Additionally, there already exist a large number of research centres and units in universities, some of which pursue interdisciplinary research.

Enborne Lodge, Newbury

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which authority will now be responsible for Enborne Lodge special school at Newbury; and if he will make a statement about the school's future as a place of education for young people from London boroughs with special needs.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend will decide the allocation of responsibility for Enborne Lodge special school and other ILEA residential special schools in the light of discussions currently taking place with all the councils concerned. The school will continue to provide education for young people from inner London with special needs whichever authority takes responsibility for it.

PRIME MINISTER

Leader of the Opposition (Security)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister what are the arrangements for briefing the Leader of the Opposition on security matters, including legislative proposals affecting security matters; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: As a matter of normal practice I do not propose to confirm or to deny whether briefings on security matters are envisaged or have taken place.

DEFENCE

Aircraft, Upper Heyford

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why aircraft operating from RAF Upper Heyford are heavier than they were previously, resulting in lower flight paths; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the Adjournment debate which took place on 30 November, Official Report columns 849 to 856. The weight increase to which I referred at column 853 is due partly to the changeover to a safer but heavier fuel and partly to the effect on the typical payload carried by the aircraft of changing operational requirements.

Nuclear Submarines (Cooling Systems)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what incidents have been reported involving pressurised water reactors in nuclear submarines releasing gas from their cooling systems into the atmosphere;

(2) what information he has on what radionuclides would be produced if air contaminated the cooling system of a pressurised water reactor in a nuclear submarine.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The primary coolant water in submarine pressurised water reactors inevitably contains a very small amount of air. The dominant nuclides which form in the dissolved air are nitrogen-16, nitrogen-17 and argon-41, with half-lives of 7·1 seconds, 14·4 seconds and 1·8 hours respectively. Argon, which accumulates over time, is routinely released when necessary, with appropriate safety precautions. No Royal Navy submarine has ever been involved in an incident causing any radiological hazard to service men, base personnel or members of the public.

Schools' Liaison Teams

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those local education authorities which do not allow his Department's schools liaison teams access to schools under their control.

Mr. Freeman: Though, for a variety of reasons, there are problems over access to some schools, I am not aware of any local education authority areas from which service schools liaison teams are excluded.

Research

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many and which university research departments are, at present, involved in projects about biological and chemical weapons for his Department in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 5 December 1988]: None.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Overseas Trade Board

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what further consideration has been given to the future of the British Overseas Trade Board; and what plans he has to support United Kingdom exports.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given by my right hon. and noble Friend on 7 November, and by myself on 7 December to my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran) at columns 304-5. We will continue to draw on the British Overseas Trade Board's advice and guidance in directing DTI's export services and on issues affecting international trade in general.

Defence Exports

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of total visible exports were accounted for by defence exports in (a) 1986 and (b) 1987.

Mr. Alan Clark: Defence equipment accounted for 0·9 per cent. in 1986 and 1·1 per cent. in 1987 of total United Kingdom visible exports.

Exports

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of the United Kingdom's total exports of goods and services to the rest of the EEC in the financial years 1981-82 to 1987-88, respectively, was represented by the products of (a) the manufacturing industries, (b) the food, drink and tobacco industries, (c) the textile, clothing and footwear industries and (d) oil and oil-related products.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information on a financial year basis is not available. Figures by calendar year are in the following table:

United Kingdom exports of goods and services to the European Community
Balance of Payments basis

	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
	Proportion accounted for by: (percentage)

[2]Standard International Trade Classification Sections 0 and 1
[3]Standard International Trade Classification Divisions 65, 84 and 85
[4]Standard International Trade Classification Division 33

Note:
Textiles, clothing and footwear, and oil are available only on the overseas trade statistics basis. Thus the shares of total exports are very slightly overstated.

Garment Labelling

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what measures the Government intend to take to ensure that the European Commission enforces working EEC rules on accurate labelling in garments.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 8 December 1988]: Fibre content labelling rules in the European Community are based on Directive 71/307/EEC, as amended by Directive 83/623/EEC. The relevant authorities in each member state are responsible for enforcing the national leglislation which implements these directives, although the Commission has indicated that it is willing to consider any evidence put to it suggesting that there is widespread misdescription of fibre content.

After an investigation into garments made from Italian fabrics in 1987 the Commission concluded that the evidence available did not show that such garments were often significantly mislabelled. Further information has recently been brought to the attention of my officials who are considering the position.

ENVIRONMENT

House of Commons (Lighting)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer of 28 November, if he will take steps to install chandeliers of a similar style to those which lit the House before being destroyed in the bombing of 1941.

Mr. Chope: No. It would be for the House to resolve to make any changes to the present lights in the Chamber.

Sports Clubs

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision he will make, under the Local Government Finance Act, for mandatory relief for non-profit making sports clubs.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under the Local Government Finance Act 1988 non-profit making sports clubs are eligible for up to 100 per cent. rate relief at the discretion of the charging authority. We have no plans to amend this provision.

Augustine Road Hostel

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether, when giving approval for the costs involved in building the proposed hostel in Augustine road, in the London borough of Harrow, investigations were made into the allegations by the hon. Member for Harrow, West that the figures provided by the borough were inadequate; and if he will publish the details of the responses made by his officials to the appraisal of the scheme by Kenchington, Little and Partners;

(2) what weight he gave in giving approval for the total indicative costs involved in building the proposed hostel in Augustine road, Harrow (a) to the susceptibility of a brickwork construction on the proposed site to movement and cracking, (b) to the requirement for piled foundations using a bored pile system designed for negative skin friction and (c) to the suspension of the ground floor slab or similar allowances against upward pressure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: It was primarily the responsibility of the London borough of Harrow to satisfy itself that the cost estimates provided by Network Housing Association were adequate for the works proposed, taking into account ground conditions and all other relevant factors. Payments of Housing Association grant will normally relate to the cost estimates approved by the Department. The report by Kenchington Little and Partners was received by the Department after the project was approved; the council's observations on it have been requested.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect of a reduction of 85 per cent. of chlorofluorocarbons by the year 2000 on the time needed for the ozone layer shield to recover completely.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The second report of the Department's stratospheric ozone review group, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House, calculated the reductions of chlorofluorocarbon emissions required to stabilize concentrations of chlorine in the atmosphere. In the case of CFCs 11 and 12, these reductions are 77 per cent. and 85 per cent. respectively. After such reductions, further depletion of the ozone layer would not occur. A complete phase out of CFCs would lead to a slow decrease in atmospheric chlorine concentrations and recovery of the ozone layer. Because of the long atmospheric lifetime of chlorofluorocarbons, however, chlorine concentrations would not return to their 1975 levels until the second half of the next century.

The Government have called for a reduction in luchlorofluorocarbon emissions of at least 85 per cent. as soon as possible, in response to the review group's report. At the Environment Council held on 24 November the United Kingdom proposed that the Community should call for the Montreal protocol to be strengthened by requiring an 85 per cent. reduction of world-wide emissions of chlorofluorocarbons by the turn of the century.

Fauna and Flora

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the member states which supported the draft European Community directive on the protection of natural and semi natural habitats and their wild fauna and flora at the European Community Environment Council on 24 and 25 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 8 December.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the scope and terms of reference of the review he has asked the Nature Conservancy Council to undertake with regard to its landholdings and other functions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what actions he has taken to encourage the transfer of ownership of national nature reserves to voluntary conservation bodies;

(2) what plans he has for the selling of national nature reserves; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Nature Conservancy Council is conducting a comprehensive review of policy towards national nature reserves (NNRs). As part of that review they are considering the size and management of the NNR network and the scope for reserves owned by the NCC to be sold to the private sector (including voluntary bodies) under appropriate conservation safeguards. We expect to receive a report from the council by the end of the year.

Water Authorities

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all (a) sites of special scientific interest and (b) national nature reserves owned by water authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I regret the information is not readily available and could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much, in cash terms, each of the water authorities in England and Wales borrowed, per year, from 1983 to the latest year available, broken down by year and authority.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 5 December 1988]: The external finance requirements of each of the English water authorities for the years from 1983-84 are set out in the table. External finances comprised borrowing and a small element of specific grant. The Welsh water authority is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Westminster City Council

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the level of rate support grant paid to Westminster city council over the last 12 months.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 7 December 1988]: The Westminster city council is not at present in receipt of block grant under the rate support grant system. My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, has however received several representations about Westminster's contributions to the London rate equalisation scheme.

Office Space (London)

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total area of London office space occupied by Government Departments on 25 March for each of the last five years.

Mr. Christopher Chope [holding answer, 7 December 1988]: The available figures relate to Government accommodation in Greater London as a whole and do not take account of marginal changes in the Property Services Agency's regional boundaries which affect only a small proportion of the total area. They are:

at 25 March	Square metres
1984	2,074,490
1985	2,001,116
1986	2,016,123

at 25 March	Square metres
1987	2,025,612
1988	1,971,093

Air Pollution

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what are his projections of likely carbon dioxide emissions from the United Kingdom in 1990, 1995 and 2000;

(2) what have been the carbon dioxide emissions produced in the United Kingdom for 1987 from coal, oil, natural gas and non-fossil fuel sources, respectively, in million metric tonnes;

(3) what have been the 1987 carbon dioxide emissions from the industrial, domestic, commercial, public and transport sectors, respectively, in million metric tonnes;

(4) what have been the 1987 carbon dioxide emissions from coal used in power stations and other uses, respectively, in million metric tonnes, respectively;

(5) what have been the carbon dioxide emissions in 1987 produced from power stations operated by the Central Electricity Generating Board, South of Scotland Electricity Board, North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board and independent companies, respectively, in million metric tonnes;

(6) what have been the 1987 carbon dioxide emissions from coal, oil and gas-fired power stations, respectively, in million metric tonnes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 5 December 1988]: Estimates of United Kingdom CO_2 emissions from fuel combustion will be published for the first time in the "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics" early next year. Preliminary estimates covering the hon. Member's specific questions are given in the table. The Department has no plans to publish projections of CO_2 emissions given that these are subject to a wide range of uncertainty in estimates of economic growth and its relationship to energy use, fuel pricing and fuel availability.

Hardwood

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government in respect of the use of tropical rain forest-produced hardwood in its buildings and furniture.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 30 November 1988]: PSA and the Crown suppliers use mainly private sector contractors for the provision respectively of Government buildings and furniture. These firms will seek to use materials which best meet the users' requirements, bearing in mind the need for economy and design. The Government take account of advice issued publicly from specialised organisations such as the Princes Risborough laboratory, the Furniture Industry Research Association (FIRA) and the Timber Research and Development Association (TRADA) about the suitability and availability of alternative materials to tropical rain-forest produced hardwood, and about the availability of this product from countries that have a policy of replacing rain-forest as it is used.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Vishnu Statues

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken in response to the telegram from Mr. Son Sann, President of Khmer People's National Liberation Front, on 3 November asking him to intervene in the sale of two statues of Vishnu which are alleged property of the Khmer people.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have received no telegram from Mr. Son Sann. We have no locus for intervention in a commercial matter of this kind.

Soviet Jews

Mr. David Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a list of those Soviet Jews known by his Department who were refused permission to emigrate from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, together with the date they first applied, since 1970.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am writing to the hon. Member.

Raoul Wallenberg

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Governments of (a) Sweden, (b) the United States of America and (c) Israel concerning the case of Raoul Wallenberg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We regularly raise the case of Raoul Wallenberg with the Soviet Union both bilaterally and in multilateral fora such as the conference on security and co-operation in Europe. We also keep in touch with other Governments concerned.

United Nations Convention (Ratification)

Miss Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government will be in a position to ratify the United Nations convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Mr. Waldegrave: The instrument of ratification was yesterday—8 December—lodged with the Secretary-General of the United Nations in New York. The convention will come into effect for the United Kingdom 30 days from that date.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Lotteries Regulations

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to lay before the House any amendments to the lotteries regulations.

Mr. John Patten: We expect to lay regulations to prohibit "multiple" lotteries, by insertion in the Lotteries Regulations 1977, before Christmas.

Pet Animals (Convention)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has now completed his consultations regarding the European convention for the protection of pet animals; and if the United Kingdom will sign the convention without any reservation on article 10 on surgical operations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 1 December at column 401.

Fire Cover (West Yorkshire)

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when inspectors last inspected standards of fire cover provided by the west Yorkshire fire and civil defence authority.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The west Yorkshire fire service was last inspected in June. As is usual, Her Majesty's inspector of fire services paid attention to the level of fire cover provided by the brigade.

Children (Attacks)

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to prevent and reduce the number of violent and sexual attacks upon young children.

Mr. John Patten: Attacks on young children are particularly abhorrent. It is important that parents and others know how best to advise them on reducing the risks of being attacked or molested. Such advice is contained in the crime prevention handbook "Practical Ways to Crack Crime". It deals with the threat from people known to the potential victim as well as from strangers. Since its launch in March this year more than 1·5 million copies of the handboook have been distributed, and a revised edition is now available.

Identity Card Scheme

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the introduction of a national identity card scheme.

Mr. John Patten: We receive a steady flow of correspondence and comments from right hon. and hon. Members and the public on the introduction of a national identity card scheme. The Association of Chief Police Officers has been asked for its views on the introduction of national identity cards and we will consider its response together with other views on the subject.

Police National Computer

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the maximum delays being experienced in the transfer of annual records of convictions on to the police national computer.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The definitive record of convictions which is used to supply information to the courts is maintained on microfiche by the national identification bureau. It is updated continually and a conviction would normally be recorded on the microfiche record within 10 days of its notification to the bureau. In normal circumstances, local forces would inform the bureau of the result of a conviction within two months.

The convictions application on the police national computer is a limited record of the convictions of those who first offended in 1981 or later Details of relevant convictions may take up to six months to be recorded on this application, depending on the circumstances.

Parking Enforcement

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals to transfer parking enforcement functions in London from the Metropolitan police to the London boroughs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am awaiting the report of the parking enforcement working party which has reviewed the effectiveness, efficiency and acceptability of the existing arrangements for parking enforcement. I understand that proposals for extending the role of local authorities in parking enforcement are among the issues being considered by the working party.

Breath Tests

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by police force the following infomation relating to the Christmas period of 1987 (a) the number of breath tests, (b) the number of breath tests which were positive, (c) the percentage of breath tests which were positive, (d) the number of personal road traffic injury accidents, and (e) the number of fatal road traffic accidents.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested on breath tests is published in table 6 of Home Office "Statistical Bulletin" issue 23/88—"Statistics of breath tests, England and Wales 1987", a copy of which is in the Library. I understand from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport that the information requested on road accidents is as shown in the table.

Rape

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, how many crimes of rape have been committed in the Greater Manchester area during 1987 and 1988 to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: 110 rapes were recorded by the Greater Manchester police in 1987 and 118 rapes were recorded in the period 1 January to 30 September 1988. Annual figures are published in table 3.1 of "Criminal statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary tables, Volume 3".

Dog Fights

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to amend the Protection of Animals (Amendment) Act 1988 so that persons who organise, aid and abet or watch dog fights face either a prison sentence or community care orders to assist such bodies as the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals on conviction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no proposals for amending the present law. Organising or attending a dog fight is an offence under the Protection of Animals Act 1911. The maximum penalty for organising a dog fight is six months imprisonment or a fine of £2,000 or both. The maximum penalty for attending a dog fight is a fine of £1,000. With imprisonable offences, where the offender is aged 16 or over, the courts may make a community service order. The work performed under the order is a matter for the probation service. It may include work with a voluntary body like the RSPCA.

Protection of Animals

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance is issued to chief constables to implement the Protection of Animals (Amendment) Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Home Office Circular 80/1988, of which a copy is in the Library, was issued on 1 September this year. It notified Chief Officers of Police and courts of the coming into force of the Protection of Animals (Amendment) Act 1988.

Prisoners

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average amount of time spent by a prisoner in his cell each day; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not collated centrally. The daily routine for prisoners varies widely depending on the role of the establishment and other factors. The prisons board statement of the functions of establishments makes clear to governors that a continuing objective is to enable prisoners to spend the maximum possible time out of their cells.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have the opportunity of working or learning new skills in prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The most recent figures available provide estimation of the number of prisoners engaged in work, education or training courses during 1987, based on the average number so employed per weekday in male establishments. There are no available figures for female establishments. The figures are detailed in the table:

	Numbers
Vocational/Trade Training	2,460
Other Full-time Education	3,590
Pre-release Courses	440
Industrial Farms or Gardens	10,140
Other Work	15,190
Total	31,820

The opportunities for prisoners to participate are subject to constraints such as the availability of work, staffing requirements, existing facilities and regimes in establishments and the suitability of inmates for particular activities.

The prison department attaches great importance to training, education and work experience for inmates as this helps individuals reach their full potential and eventually to play a more constructive role in custody and after release.

In addition to the acquisition of accredited skills in vocational training courses, further consideration is presently being given to the greater integration of learning opportunities and work experience.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to allow private companies to employ prisoners in prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans for private companies directly to employ prisoners in prison workshops. Under the existing arrangements, a significant source of employment for prisoners is light assembly work for private companies, with the prison service providing the labour in prison workshops, but the private companies supplying the materials and equipment and distributing the finished goods.

Domestic Assaults

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ask police forces in England and Wales to provide his Department with regular information regarding the number of reported domestic assaults each year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 7 December 1988]: Information on recorded offences of domestic violence is published in the annual reports of some police forces, for example the annual reports of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. Information for England and Wales on domestic violence was published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" in 1979 and 1980. However, this was judged to be incomplete because not all police forces recorded domestic violence separately. An ad hoc survey of violent crime (including domestic assaults) recorded by the police is currently being undertaken and the results will be evaluated in 1989.

WALES

Community Care

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines his Department has issued to health authorities with regard to remedying the problems of community care in cases where the transition from institutions to the community is costing more than anticipated.

Mr. Grist: Our strategic planning guidance requires health authorities to develop services flexibly so as to ensure that they meet identified needs appropriately and cost-effectively. Additional Welsh Office funding under the all-Wales mental handicap strategy is based on approved county plans which set out the costs of proposals and the sources for meeting them. These plans are subject to annual review and are amended as necessary. We propose similar arrangements in our consultation document on the development of services for those suffering from mental illness.

Mental Health

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by health authority the amount of money spent on mental health services each year since 1979, the percentage increase in real terms and the percentage of overall spending on health services, both in the National Health Service and in the private sector.

Mr. Grist: The information requested cannot be provided, since only limited data on mental health services' expenditure within the National Health Service in Wales is available for the years before 1987-8 and information on health-care spending within the private sector is not collected by the Department.

The more comprehensive information now available on NHS spending on mental health services in 1987-88 is as follows:

National Health Service mental health services expenditure: 1987-88[1]

District health authority	Mental health services' expenditure[2] (£000)	Total as a percentage of overall district health authorities' services expenditure (per cent.)
Clwyd	7,974	0·99
East Dyfed	7,649	0·95
Gwent	13,923	1·73
Gwynedd	4,384	0·55
Mid Glamorgan	18,563	2·31
Pembrokeshire	768	0·10
Powys	5,587	0·70
South Glamorgan	12,070	1·50
West Glamorgan	6,396	0·80
Wales	[3]77,315	9·63

[1] The figures presented are provisional at this stage.

[2] The figures in respect of mental health services relate to hospital services' expenditure and community health services' expenditure (where this can be separately identified) in respect of the mentally ill, the mentally handicapped, child and adolescent psychiatry, forensic psychiatry and psychotherapy. The hospital services' figures relate only to direct clinical and diagnostic services to patients and therefore do not include any attribution of expenditure in respect of general services such as administration, transport, hotel services or estate management. Similarly the community health services' figures relate only to the nursing element of community services for these client groups.

Source: District Health Authorities Financial Returns.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the methods of monitoring the use of the proceeds from the sales of National Health Service buildings used for the mentally ill and mentally handicapped; and if he will seek to ensure that these proceeds are put back into those services rather than the regional budget.

Mr. Grist: County plans, produced by Social Services and health authorities and other interests provide the basis for the development of services under the all-Wales mental handicap strategy and make clear the source of investment. Similar arrangements are proposed in our draft proposals for the future development of services for those suffering from mental illness. In addition, the strategic, operational and capital plans of district health authorities provide details of the proposed use of Health Service resources, and their source, including capital receipts.

Sheep Premium

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with European Economic Community agriculture Ministers about the future of the sheep variable premium scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: My right hon. Friend, the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, represents the United Kingdom at the Council of Ministers (Agriculture) which has twice considered the European Commission's proposals for review of the sheepmeat regime. The negotiations, are as yet at an early stage.

Fertilisers

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to further restrict the use of nitrogen fertilisers in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on 24 November 1988 by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with farm animal welfare groups in Wales regarding long-term use of the milk production hormone bovine somatotropin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: None. Last year, the Farm Animal Welfare Council consulted a wide range of interests, including animal welfare organisations, on the welfare implications of using bovine somatotropin. The council has drawn attention to certain longer term aspects of animal welfare where further information is required. These are being considered in ongoing field trials.

Research and Development

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with both the farming unions in Wales regarding his proposals to cut his Department's budget on research and development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: My noble Friend, the Parliamentary Secretary, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, has had discussions with the farming unions and other representatives of the industry about the Government's proposals to withdraw public funding from near market research and development. My officials have also had contacts with the farming unions. The Welsh Office has no budget for agricultural research and development.

Water Authority

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many professional staff are employed in the legal department of the shadow National Rivers Authority unit of the Welsh water authority.

Mr. Grist: This information is contained in Welsh Water's summary scheme of organisation for the Welsh regional unit of the National Rivers Authority, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House on 2 December 1988.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caerphilly, on 5 December, Official Report, column 22, what was the value of the land sold by the Welsh water authority for each year since 1983.

Mr. Grist: The information is more readily available on a financial rather than a calendar year basis. The receipts from land sold by Welsh Water since 1 April 1983 are as follows:

1983-84	319,385
1984-85	351,676
1985-86	199,097
1986-87	758,266
1987-88	204,095
1988 to date	302,486
Total	2,135,005

NATIONAL FINANCE

Government Revenue

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when was the last surplus of central Government revenue over expenditure; if he will express it in 1988 prices; what is the latest forecast for the current year in 1988 prices; and if he will forecast the likely change in (a) money supply and (b) the national debt in the current year.

Mr. Lilley: Before 1987-88, the public sector was last in surplus in 1969-70, when the surplus amounted to £0·6 billion, equivalent to £3·8 billion at 1988-89 prices. For the latest forecasts of the public sector surplus and growth of the money supply I refer the hon. Member to the autumn statement, paragraphs 20.2 and 2.48 respectively. To estimate the likely change in the national debt in the current year would involve revealing forecasts of items which by convention the Government never publish.

Platinum Coins

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has regarding the amount and value of platinum coins held off-shore by British investors in order to avoid payment of value added tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 8 December 1988]: None.

Single Parents

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many single parents are expected to claim the additional personal income tax allowance for 1988-89 and how many are widows; how many single parents claim one-parent benefit and how many widows with children receive a child dependency addition in respect of how many children; to what extent these two benefits have been increased to take account of the reduction in the real value of child benefit and the effect of inflation on the amounts payable in March 1986; and if he will bring up to date the benefit figures quoted in paragraph 4.10 of Cmnd. 9756.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

It is estimated that 470,000 lone parents, including 60,000 widows, will claim the additional personal income tax allowance in 1988-89.

There are some 670,000 lone parents claiming one parent benefit. In March 1988 there were 61,176 widows claiming child dependency additions in respect of 92,086 children. These benefits have been increased in line with the increase in the index of retail prices since March 1986. No account has been taken of changes in the real value of child benefit.

The current rate of one parent benefit is £4·90 weekly (£5·20 from April 1989). Widowed mother's allowance is £41·15 weekly and the child dependency addition £8·40 for each child (£43·60 and £8·95 respectively from April 1989).

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his estimate of the number of single parents and the number of their children; how many are widows and with how many children; how many are covered by one-parent benefit and the child dependency addition and at what cost to Revenue; whether either or both of these benefits are taxable; and how many single parents claiming the additional personal income tax allowance do not claim one-parent benefit or child dependency addition, and at what saving to the Revenue;

(2) what is his estimate of the number of single parents and the number of their children; how many are widows and with how many children; how many are covered by one-parent benefit and the child dependency addition and at what cost to the revenue; whether either or both of these benefits are taxable; and how many single parents claiming the additional personal income-tax allowance do not claim one-parent benefit or child dependency addition, and at what saving to the revenue.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

The latest available statistics on the numbers of lone parents and their children, provided by OPCS, are for 1984 when there were 940,000 lone parents with 1·5 million children. These figures include 98,000 widows with 147,000 children.

In 1984-85 565,000 lone parents received one parent benefit at a cost of £120 million. No statistics are kept on the numbers of lone parents among recipients of child dependency additions, which are payable with certain national insurance benefits on the basis of the claimant's contribution record. One parent benefit and child dependency additions are not subject to taxation.

A total of 460,000 lone parents, including 70,000 widows, qualified for the additional personal income tax allowance in 1984-85. Statistics are not kept on how many of these were or were not also claimants of one parent benefit or child dependency additions.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Nurses (Grading)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nursing staff there are at Belvoir hospital; how many of the staff have now been advised of their grades; and how many appeals against their grades have been received.

Mr. Needham: There are 280 nursing staff employed at Belvoir hospital, all of whom have been advised of their grades. No formal appeals have been received but 48 nurses have been involved in informal discussions with management about their grades.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the value of the salary increase payable to a night sister expressed as a percentage increase over salary received prior to re-grading.

Mr. Needham: As a result of the clinical regrading review for nurses, midwives and health visitors, night sisters can be placed on one of three new pay scales. The value of the salary increase expressed as a percentage over salary received prior to re-grading for each payscale is as follows:

Scale	Range of percentage pay increase
F	4·2-13·3
G	16·0-33·6
H	27·9-49·4

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nursing staff there are at Ards hospital; how many staff have now been advised of their grades; and how many appeals against their grades have been received.

Mr. Needham: There are 293 nursing staff employed at Ards hospital, all of whom have been advised of their grades. No formal appeals have been received but 42 nurses have been involved in informal discussions with management about their grades.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nursing staff there are at Forster Green hospital; how many of the staff have now been advised of their grades; and how many appeals against their grades have been received.

Mr. Needham: There are 81 nursing staff employed at Forster Green hospital, all of whom have been advised of their grades. No formal appeals have been received but 13 nurses have been involved in informal discussions with management about their grades.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why charge nurses and ward sisters are required to write to the director of nursing services to request positions or positional changes at Purdysburn hospital; whether this is normal procedure at hospitals within the Eastern Board area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Charge nurses and ward sisters are not normally required by the director of nursing services to write to him regarding positions or positional changes at Purdysburn hospital, nor is such a procedure normal practice at any hospital within the eastern board area. Management does however reserve the right to require such requests in writing.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nursing staff there are at Purdysburn hospital; how many of the staff have now been advised of their grades; and how many appeals against their grades have been received.

Mr. Needham: There are 526 nursing staff employed at Purdysburn hospital, all of whom have been advised of their grades. No formal appeals have been received but 109 nurses have been involved in informal discussions with management about their grades.

Nurses

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many night sisters are employed in East Antrim hospitals.

Mr. Needham: Ten.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many night sisters have been regraded upwards in East Antrim hospitals.

Mr. Needham: Ten.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nurses at all levels have appealed against the grade allocated to them.

Mr. Needham: There have been no formal appeals by nurses against the grades allocated to them but a number have been involved in informal discussions with management about their grades.

Elected Authorities

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the Official Report the anticipated increase in voters in each of the individual assembly seats and district council seats expected as a result of the provision in the Elected Authorities (Northern Ireland) Bill.

Mr. Needham: The Bill brings the local government franchise in Northern Ireland broadly into line with the parliamentary franchise. The franchise for the Northern Ireland Assembly has already been amended in a similar way. On the basis of the current electoral register, the total increase in the number of local government electors would be approximately 10,500.

An analysis of the number of parliamentary electors and local government electors on the current register, by constituency, is contained in the report of the Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland for 1987-88 (HC 572), a copy of which is in the Library. Comparable information for individual districts could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Income Support

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of families with children in Northern Ireland are expected to be (a) entitled to and (b) claiming income support or family credit in 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Needham: Reliable information on those entitled to these benefits is not available. The available information is as follows:

Families with children under 19 receiving:	Numbers (estimated)	[1]Per cent.
Income support:
1988-89	55,600	26
1989-90	55,500	25
Family credit:
1988-89	20,000	9
1989-90	30,000	14

[1]Represents the percentage of all families receiving child benefit.

Disabled Persons (Staff)

317. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of his Department's staff are classed as disabled.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Within the Northern Ireland Civil Service the number of officers who have identified themselves as being registered as disabled persons under the Disabled Persons Act (Northern Ireland) 1945 was 1·4 per cent. at 1 January 1988.

The Northern Ireland Civil Service, conscious that this percentage may understate the true extent of disabled people among its staff, is currently carrying out an exercise to obtain more accurate statistics. The results of this exercise are expected to be available next year.

None of the Home Civil Service staff of the Northern Ireland Office is currrently registered as disabled.

Housng Executive

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what damage, disruptions or losses have been suffered by the Housing Executive in respect of their offices, sites vehicles and housing stock as a result of paramilitary activities.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 8 December 1988]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I am advised by the Chief Executive that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HEALTH

Hospital Beds

Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital beds there were in (a) the Oldham health authority area, (b) the Greater Manchester area and (c) the rest of the country in May 1979 and at the latest date for which figures are available; what was the percentage change; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is shown in the table.

Average daily available beds, Oldham HA, Greater Manchester and the rest of England, 1979 and 1987-88

	1979	1987-88	Percentage change
Oldham	1,045	993	−5
Greater Manchester	17,618	16,202	−8
Rest of England	326,419	280,575	−14

Because of advances in medical treatment, periods of in-patient care have reduced and more patients are now treated as out-patients or on a day care basis. The latest figures available centrally show that patient activity increased as follows;

NHS hospitals activity, in Oldham, Greater Manchester and in rest of England

In-patients treated	1979	[1]1987-88	Percentage change
Oldham	23,542	30,707	30·4
Greater Manchester	350,892	444,237	26·6
Rest of England	5,049,228	6,175,117	22·3
Out patients attendences (total)
Oldham	140,972	158,079	12·1
Greater Manchester	2,363,459	2,602,003	10·1
Rest of England	31,736,266	34,148,210	7·6
Day cases		1986
Oldham	2,085	3,612	73·2
Greater Manchester	45,283	83,009	83·3
Rest of England	546,778	967,149	76·9

[1] Patients attending out-patient clinics soley for attention of a minor nature and not seen by a doctor, eg. to have a dressing changed, are no longer counted. Prior to 1987-88 new outpatient attendances were first attendances at an individual hospital for a continuous series of treatments, but are now first attendances within the district when the attendance has not been initiated by the consultant or one of his staff.

Day case figures for 1987-88 are not yet available. 1986 day case figures are given in the table.

Radiographers

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cancer patients attending Cookridge hospital are not receiving treatment as a result of the recent shortage of radiographers.

Mrs. Currie: None. I understand that some treatments recently had to be rescheduled, because of equipment malfunction. The hon. Member may wish to contact the Leeds western health authority for a full explanation.

Hospital Services (Epping)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the alternative arrangements to be put into effect to provide National Health Service hospital services for patients in Epping in the event of services being reduced at St. Margaret's hospital.

Mrs. Currie: We announced approval in principle in May this year for a £30 million scheme for the Princess Alexandra hospital, Harlow, to develop it as the district general hospital for West Essex and enable improved facilities to be provided for the population of the district, including patients in Epping. The centralisation of acute facilities from the Herts and Essex hospital, Bishops Stortford, and St. Margaret's hospital, Epping, to the Princess Alexandra has been accepted by the local community health council. Services remaining at St. Margaret's, after the redevelopment is complete, will include beds and a day hospital for the elderly and the elderly mentally ill, out-patient clinics and a breast screening unit.

Preventive Medicine

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is considering to promote preventive medicine.

Mrs. Currie: We recognise the essential role that preventive medicine has to play in improving people's health. A wide range of preventive activity including vaccination and immunisation, health screening, health education, genetic counselling and medical research is already taking place.

We consider that prevention is not simply a question of medicine but of lifestyle. In the coming months we will be launching the next phase of the national heart disease prevention campaign "Look After Your Heart", and we will be playing an active part in next year's "Europe Against Cancer" initiative. Following the successful launch of the measles, mumps and rubella vaccine last October we hope to achieve target uptake of 90 per cent. In June we are planning a conference on the health of elderly people entitled "The Time Of Your Life". We expect to receive advice in the first part of next year from the standing medical advisory committee on the cost-effectiveness of cholesterol screening.

Implementation of health authorities' plans for prevention will continue to be monitored through the ministerial review process to ensure they are effective, well-organised and reflect the pattern of preventable disease in the country.

Babies

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the recommendation that all babies should be fully examined within 24 hours of birth made in the third report from the maternity services advisory committee has yet been implemented.

Mrs. Currie: Yes, as far as we are aware. All babies are given a physical examination by the midwife attending the birth. We have no details at the moment on the examinations carried out by the doctor.

It is however, the responsibility of the local health authorities through the maternity services liaison committees to ensure that recommendation A.16 is implemented.

Child Health

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to receive the report of the joint working party on child health surveillance.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that the report of the independent joint working party on child health surveillance, "Health for All Children", is due to be published by the end of February 1989 and I expect to receive a copy at that time.

Asset Registers

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will compile asset registers of land owned by the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: We do. Registers are compiled by district valuers and are kept at the Department. We also require health authorities to keep similar records including open market value and existing use value.

Mercury (Fish)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to the acceptable level of mercury in fish beyond which they become unfit for human consumption.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 29 November 1988, c. 198]: The provisional tolerable weekly intake of mercury should have been given as 0·3 mg per week of which no more than 0·2 mg should be organic mercury.

TRANSPORT

Roads

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much he has budgeted for motorway and trunk road renewal in each of the three years 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The public expenditure provision for renewal of motorways and other trunk roads for the years in question is:

Year	£ million
1989-90	240
1990-91	249
1991-92	253

In addition the provision for the renewal and strengthening of bridges associated with those roads is:

Year	£ million
1989-90	101
1990-91	103
1991-92	101

Disabled Persons (Staff)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of his Department's staff are classed as disabled.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: As at 1 December 1988, the percentage of staff classed as disabled was 3·40 per cent. including 1·27 per cent. registered disabled persons.

Coach Drivers

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the role of his Department's officials in assisting the Kent police to apprehend 41 coach drivers travelling from France, most of whose vehicles were overladen with excess beer, wines and spirits; if he will bring this behaviour to the attention of the relevant licensing authority; if he will take steps to reduce to 50 mph the speed limit on coaches; and if he will restrict coaches to the inside two lanes of three-lane motorways in order to reduce intimidatory driving.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The check on coaches which took place between the hours of 1800 to midnight on Saturday 3 December was organised by the Department's traffic examiners in conjunction with the Kent police. Traffic examiners weighed all the coaches stopped and directed by the police to the A2 Boughton weighbridge site near Canterbury. Documents including tachograph charts were also checked. The Department's vehicle examiners also attended to carry out safety and mechanical checks on the coaches. Appropriate prosecution action will be taken in the name of the South Eastern Traffic Commissioner against bus operators and drivers who were found to be in contravention of the law.

We have no plans to reduce coach speed limits or to restrict coaches to the two left-hand lanes of three-lane motorways.

Regulations require British coaches to be fitted with road speed limiters. These limiters will physically limit coach speeds to the legal maximum of 70 mph. The fitment programme will be phased over the next few years.

Many millions of motorway miles are already travelled safely by coaches.

Hammersmith Broadway

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has made any assessment of the implications for traffic management in London of the re-development of Hammersmith broadway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The London borough of Hammersmith and Fulham is both the highway authority and the planning authority for the Hammersmith broadway redevelopment.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has made any assessment of the implications for access for emergency service vehicles to the Hammersmith transport interchange of the proposed development of Hammersmith broadway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The borough is both planning and highway authority. I understand that the London fire brigade has been involved in discussions about access for emergency service vehicles with the developers and the London borough of Hammersmith and Fulham.

Designs for the underground station will be submitted for approval to the railways inspectorate, which will consult the London fire brigade before making recommendations to me.

Accidents (Heavy Goods Vehicles)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people were killed in accidents involving heavy goods vehicles for each year between 1979 and 1987.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The table shows the number of fatalities in accidents involving heavy goods vehicles in Great Britain between 1979 and 1987.

Fatalities in accidents involving heavy goods vehicles: Great Britain: 1977-1987

	Number
1979	1,063
1980	859
1981	851
1982	875
1983	811
1984	876
1985	811
1986	908
1987	910

These numbers have to be associated with distance travelled to establish the trend in the casualty rate.

London Assessment Studies

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many houses would be demolished and how much expenditure would be involved if he decided to proceed with the schemes contained in option 10 of the south London assessment study, option 5 of the east London assessment study, option 3A of the west London assessment study and option E of the south circular assessment study as a package.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 8 December 1988]: Information on the effects of the preliminary options is contained in the consultants working papers, copies of which have been placed in the Library. The options now being developed are aimed at improving conditions within each study area. It would not be appropriate to package them in the way suggested.

SCOTLAND

Pupils (Intellect)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number of pupils in each region and division whose intellectual functioning has been defined as (a) normal or above normal, (b) moderately impaired, (c) severely impaired or (d) profoundly impaired.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The range of intellectual functioning of pupils in local authority special schools and departments at September 1987 is set out in the table. Information on pupils in other schools is not available.

Fish Farms

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate what forms of assessment of the effects of predation by birds and seals at marine fish farms are taking place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In-house and externally commissioned research is in progress at present. The need for further research will be considered in the light of results from current studies.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under what circumstances the killing of predatory birds by marine fish farmers is sanctioned by him; if he is in a position to indicate the number and species of birds so killed in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No licences have been granted to permit marine fish farmers to shoot predatory birds in coastal waters.

Seal Conservation

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what use he has made of his powers, under the Conservation of Seals Act 1970, to grant to marine fish farmers licences for the shooting of seals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has granted licences to marine fish farmers only under section 10(1)(c)(i) of the Conservation of Seals Act 1970 for the prevention of damage to fisheries.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland with which interested parties he consults before issuing, under the Conservation of Seals Act 1970, licences to kill seals; how many of these licences have been issued in each of the past 17 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend consults the Natural Environment Research Council on his policy regarding the granting of licences to shoot seals.

I regret that information relating to the numbers of licences issued in each of the past 17 years is not available.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he has any plans to introduce legislation to exempt fishermen and marine fish farmers under section 9 of the Conservation of Seals Act 1970, from the prohibition order, issued under section 3 of the aforesaid Act, which outlaws the killing, injuring or taking of common seals around the coast-line; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to seek to amend the Conservation of Seals act 1970, in terms of the current licensing system and other matters relating to the indentification of the periods of protection, afforded at different times of the year to the grey seal and the common seal; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he has plans to seek to extend section 9 of the Conservation of Seals Act 1970, so as to cover marine fish-farm cages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to amend the Conservation of Seals Act 1970.

Pesticides

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any proposals to prohibit the use of the pesticides Dieldrin and Aldrin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: On 1 August 1988 the Ministers responsible for matters relating to the control of pesticides announced their decision to revoke all remaining approvals for the use of products containing Dieldrin by 30 March 1989 and for the use of products containing Aldrin by 31 December 1992.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the value of land sold by the Forestry Commission in each year since 1981.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Receipts from the disposal of land and property since 1981 have been as follows:

Year to 31 March	£ million
1982	6·9
1983	13·8
1984	23·6
1985	22·1
1986	17·0
1987	14·7
1988	12·9

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion, by area and percentage, respectively, of the land sold by the Forestry Commission in each year since 1981, was (a) under plantations, (b) other woodland, (c) to be planted, (d) agricultural and grazing and (e) unplantable.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The areas of land sold by the Forestry Commission since 1981 which were under plantations or were to be planted, and the percentages of the total land sales represented by these two categories, were as follows:

Year to 31 March	Plantations		To be planted
	Area (hectares)	Percentage of total land sales	Area (hectares)	Percentage of total land sales
1982	1,821	17·5	526	5·0
1983	5,490	45·3	1,142	9·4
1984	15,363	34·5	1,144	2·6
1985	13,889	48·1	2,183	7·6
1986	7,291	44·0	1,023	6·2
1987	5,518	50·4	668	6·1
1988	5,361	60·0	1,026	11·5

Composite records of sales of other woodland, agricultural and grazing land, and unplantable land are not held centrally, and the information asked for could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the areas of land, offered for sale by the Forestry Commission since 1981, which have been bought by (a) conservation bodies and (b) public bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Comprehensive records of purchasers of land from the Forestry Commission are not held centrally, and the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Pacemakers

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any further information on the alleged shortfall of pacemakers from Greater Glasgow health board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Further investigation has shown that all the pacemakers for which the board was previously unable to account have been implanted in NHS patients. I regret that the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith) has chosen to suggest that there might have been any impropriety in their use, and hope that he will apologise to the staff and members of Greater Glasgow health board.

ENERGY

Plutonium

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy why the figure for the amount of plutonium produced by British civil nuclear power stations for the year ended 31 March was rounded up to the nearest 50 kg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The figures have to be rounded to take account of the fact that the plutonium content of irradiated fuel elements is calculated.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many applications he has received for a licence for new independent power stations; and if he will list the sites, size in mw and proposed base load fuel.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Under existing legislation, private generators do not require a licence from Government to build or operate an independent power station but they must obtain all the relevant local planning consents.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the cost of one kilo watt hour unit of electricity generated by (a) coal, (b) oil, (c) gas and (d) nuclear power, respectively.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of electricity generation depends upon nuclear power for each country within the European Community.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North (Mr. Speller) on 14 November 1988 at column 422.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of the 13 GW extra generating capacity needed by year 2000, as outlined in his White Paper, "Privatising Electricity", he anticipates to be produced by nuclear power.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 11 May 1988 at column 112.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he plans to stipulate a minimum or maximum length for contracts between former generating companies and area supply boards; and whether such contracts are to be published.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government are seeking a range of contract periods, to enable competition to develop. The terms of the contracts will be commercially confidential.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much generation, other than by National Power and Power Generation, he expects by the year 2000.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 7 December 1988 at column 193.

Gas

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the twin advanced gas cooled reactor installations at Hartlepool and Heysham A are awaiting licensing consent from Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate, before the operators are permitted to undertake refuelling operations whilst the reactors are on load; whether, currently and since the commissioning of these reactors, each reactor has to be completely closed down for refuelling operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the CEGB. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is the anticipated dividend yield that will be paid to investors in the privatised electricity supply industry;

(2) whether the Government have yet made any provisional estimate of the asset value of the electricity supply industry on privatisation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is premature to make any such estimates.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the anticipated total staffing level of the office of the Director General of Electricity Supply.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Electricity Bill currently before the House would provide for the appointment of a Director General of Electricity Supply, who would be supported by the staff of the office of electricity regulation (OFFER). We shall be consulting the Director General, as soon as he is identified, on the level of staffing of his office. We presently anticipate a need for a net increase of about 115 public sector posts. His staff will deal with consumer matters and meter examining as well as the regulation of the industry.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy towards the European Commission's proposals to harmonise the methods used by energy authorities to calculate prices; what effect the proposals will have on the privatisation of the electricity supply industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The EC Commission has said that it will shortly be tabling proposals on the transparency of energy prices for major consumers of gas and electricity. These will be carefully considered by the Government.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how the merit order system for power stations will work in the privatised electricity supply industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Stations will be despatched on the basis of prices bid to the National Grid company, so ensuring that demand is met from the cheapest stations while maintaining the stability of the transmission system.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether, after electricity privatisation, one area board will be allowed to make a takeover bid for another area board.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Arrangements will be made to safeguard the independence of the privatised distribution companies.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what, after electricity privatisation, the consequences will be of the insolvency of an area board.

Mr. Michael Spicer: As with previously privatised industries, such as British Gas, existing insolvency law would apply.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has made any estimate of the impact of 1992 and the single European market on the ability of the Government to prevent nationals of other EEC member countries owning shares in a privatised electricity supply industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is not the Government's intention to prevent nationals of other EEC member states from owning shares in the privatised electricity supply industry.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the cost of transferring the national grid to the distribution companies.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The benefits of promoting competition will outweigh any costs that might arise.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he anticipates publishing the regulatory framework for prices under the Electricity Bill.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We intend to make draft licences, which will include descriptions of the price controls, available for the Committee stage of the Electricity Bill.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether, after electricity privatisation, contracts between large users direct with generators will be subject to any regulation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. Competition law will apply to such contracts but the licences issued to National Power and PowerGen will contain a non-discrimination provision.

Generating Costs

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has made any estimate of the anticipated generating and operating cost per kilowatt hour of (a) nuclear power and (b) fossil fuel power up to the year 2000.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Atomic Energy

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the budget allocation to atomic energy research made by his Department for each financial year from 1979-80 to 1988-89; and what is his Department's anticipated expenditure for 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Expenditure was, and is expected to be, as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	146
1980-81	188
1981-82	203
1982-83	212
1983-84	204
1984-85	196
1985-86	190
1986-87	158
1987-88	141
1988-89	145

Notes:

Figures are rounded to the nearest million.

The 1979-80 and 1980-81 figures are outturn figures taken from the 1983-84 Public Expenditure White Paper.

Outturn figures for 1981-82 to 1986-87 are based on the Cabinet Office annual reviews of Government funded R and D which were first published in 1984.

Figures for the years before 1986-87, when the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority was put on a trading fund basis, include some expenditure on non-R and D work.

Figures for 1987-88 and 1988-89 are the costs incurred and expected to be incurred by the UKAEA on nuclear R and D work for the Department.

Expenditure forecasts for 1989-90 will be published in the 1989 Public Expenditure White Paper.

Energy Efficiency Office

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the budget allocated for the Energy Efficiency Office for each financial year from 1979-80 to 1988-89; and what is his Department's anticipated expenditure for 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Energy Efficiency Office was established on 31 October 1983. Its net budget allocation has been as follows:

	£ million
1984-85	16·8
1985-86	20·5
1986-87	26·0
1987-88	24·5
1988-89	20·8

Figures for my Department's estimated expenditure for 1989-90 will be published in the Public Expenditure White Paper.

Advanced Gas Cooled Reactors

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many years the advanced gas cooled reactors at (a) Dungeness, (b) Hartlepool and (c) Heysham 1 are behind schedule; and what has been the cost of delay for each individual advanced gas cooled reactor to date.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Sulphur Emissions

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department has any plans to research into magnetohydrodynamics as a means of reducing sulphur emissions from coal-fired power stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Magnetohydrodynamics is not considered to have sufficient promise to justify the substantial funds required to develop it. The advanced coal based generators—such as pressurised fluidised bed and the integrated coal gasification combined cycle generators—reported in Energy Paper 56 (a copy of which is in the Library of the House) are considered preferable and sufficient to meet United Kingdom requirements.

Electricity Industry

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what were the staffing levels for the electricity supply industry for each financial year from 1979-80 to 1988-89; and what is the planned level for 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The number of staff employed by the electricity supply industry of England and Wales in post on 31 March of each year from March 1979 to March 1988 and the planned levels for March 1989 and 1990 are as follows:

Year	Total Staff (all grades)
Outturn[1]
March
1979	159,825
1980	158,780
1981	154,910
1982	146,655
1983	141,385
1984	137,210
1985	133,718
1986	131,446
1987	131,087
1988	130,217
Planned[2]
March
1989	130,200
1990	129,580

[2] Industry forecasts.

Electricity Disconnections

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many domestic electricity disconnections were there in the years 1979-80 to the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Electricity Council informs me that the figures for disconnections in England and Wales are as follows:

Year	Number
1979-80	98,894
1980-81	118,221
1981-82	108,266
1982-83	91,334
1983-84	90,722
1984-85	91,039
1985-86	102,714
1986-87	98,823
1987-88	88,870

There is a continued downward trend in disconnections and in the 12 months ending 31 October 1988 the total was 80,592, the lowest since records began in 1976.

Advertising and Promotional Budgets

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the advertising and promotional budget for the Central Electricity Generating Board, including the area boards for the years 1978-79 to 1987-88; and what is the anticipated expenditure for the next five years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the industry. I have asked the chairman of the Electricity Council to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the advertising and promotional expenditure by his Department for each of the last five and next five years.

Mr. Parkinson: Advertising and promotional expenditure for the years 1986-87 and 1987-88 was £37 million (of which £24·6 million represents advertising costs associated with the privatisation of British Gas) and £5·6 million respectively. The provision for 1988-89 is £6·5 million. It is not possible to identify separately all advertising and promotional expenditure before 1986-87. Forecasts of the Department's advertising and promotional expenditure for future years are not available. Further information on the Department's publicity budget will be published in the 1989 public expenditure White Paper early in the new year.

Nuclear Plants

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much money has been set aside by the Central Electricity Generating Board in each of the last 10 years for (a) the decommissioning of nuclear plant and (b) the disposal of nuclear waste.

Mr. Michael Spicer: These figures are available in the CEGB's report and accounts for the relevant years, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Pressurised Water Reactors

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the anticipated cost of building the family of four new pressurised water reactors.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the CEGB.

Power Stations (Construction)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the major projects in hand for the construction of power stations by companies or groups other than National Power and Power Generators.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The details of the proposed projects are provided to the Department on a commercial-in-confidence basis. It is for the companies to announce details of their plans.

Electricity Supply (Channel Link)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has plans to increase the capacity of the Channel link between the Central Electricity Generating Board and Electricite de France.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is for the CEGB and, after privatisation, the successor companies to bring forward any proposals for a second link.

Coal-fired Power Stations

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the intention of the Central Electricity Generating Board on proceeding with the coal-fired power stations at West Burton and Kingsnorth.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend is currently considering the CEGB's application for consent to construct a coal-fired power station at West Burton.

He has received no application from the CEGB for consent to construct a coal fired power station at Kingsnorth. It is for the CEGB to decide whether and when to apply for consent to construct any new power station.

Chapelcross Nuclear Installation

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what contribution has been made by the Central Electricity Generating Board towards the cost of decommissioning the Chapelcross nuclear installation; and what further contributions the board or its successors will make towards these costs;

(2) what contributions have been made by Departments of State and public corporations, other than the South of Scotland Electricity Board, the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board and the Central Electricity Generating Board, to the costs of decommissioning the Chapelcross nuclear installation; and what further contributions such bodies will make towards these costs;

(3) on what basis the various contributions towards the costs of decommissioning the Chapelcross nuclear installation, whether from the Scottish electricity boards, the Central Electricity Generating Board, or from other public bodies and Departments of State, have been calculated;

(4) what contributions have been made by the South of Scotland Electricity Board and the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board towards the cost of decommissioning the Chapelcross nuclear installation; and what further contributions the boards or their successors will make towards these costs.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Neither the Central Electricity Generating Board nor its successors has any liability for the costs which will be incurred in decommissioning the nuclear facilities at Chapelcross.

No contributions have yet been made by customers towards the costs of decommissioning the Chapelcross facilities, since these facilities are still in operation. The eventual contributions of British Nuclear Fuels plc and other bodies towards these costs will be assessed on the basis of the relevant share of usage of the facilities. Where appropriate, provisions have been made for such decommissioning in the accounts of the bodies concerned on the basis of current cost estimates.

EMPLOYMENT

Training Statistics (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish his Department's operating statistics for each completed month of employment training for Nottingham, specifying (a) the end of month profile for each region, (b) the actual number in training in each region, (c) the number of starts in each month in each region, (d) the number of leavers each month, (e) how many of the trainees are on employment training training allowance and (f) how many are still receiving wages from the Community programme.

Mr. Nicholls: Most of the information requested is given in the following table. Regional profiles for starts are used for internal management purposes only. It is not yet possible to give figures on employment training leavers as the Training Agency's management information system does not differentiate between those who were on the new job training scheme or the community programme and those who were entrants to employment training.

Employment Training Statistics—Nottingham

	September 1988	October 1988
Starts	319	667
In-training on allowances	970	1,319
In-training on CP wages	2,513	2,118
Total in-training	3,483	3,437

Vacancies (London)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the level of unfilled vacancies in Greater London.

Mr. Lee: In October 1988 the number of unfilled vacancies registered at jobcentres in the Greater London region, seasonally adjusted was 29,000. This figure does not include all vacancies in the economy. A survey conducted in June 1988 showed that there were around 150,000 vacancies in total in Greater London, around four and a half times the level of vacancies recorded at the jobcentre at that time.

Skills Shortages

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to reduce skills shortages in British industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I refer my hon. Friend to the chapter on training in the White Paper "Employment in the 1990's" and the statement by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State of Monday 5 December 1988.

Radiation

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects the Health and Safety Commission working group on ionising radiations to report on its review of dose limits for acceptable levels of exposure to radiation.

Mr. Nicholls: The working group on ionising radiation is currently finalising its end of year report which will include advice on dose limitation. The report will be submitted to the Health and Safety Commission in the new year.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment at what time the last set of monthly unemployment figures were made available to the press (a) in Nottingham and (b) nationally.

Mr. Lee: The latest unemployment figures, both national and regional were first available to all enquirers at 11.30 am on 17 Novermber 1988.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his Department's estimate of the number of economically inactive people who would like a job.

Mr. Lee: It is estimated from the labour force survey (LFS) that in spring 1987 there were 2,180 thousand people without a job who were economically inactive using the ILO/OECD definition—that is, either not seeking or not available for work—aged 16 and over in Great Britain, who said they would like a job.

Playground Accidents

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of children who turn up at hospital because of playground accidents for every month since his Department started collecting figures; and if he will make a statement about those figures.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows the available information. Before 1986 reports of playground injuries cannot be separately identified. While a large number of these major injuries would have required attention at hospital I have no information on the exact numbers. Non-fatal injuries in playgrounds other than those specified as major are not reportable. I shall be writing to the hon. Member about the monthly breakdown of the figures.

Injuries to children, 18 years of age or younger, reported to the Health and Safety Executive's Factory and Agriculture Inspectorates for years beginning 1 April

	1986-87		[1]1987-88
	Fatal	[2]Major	Fatal	[2]Major
Resulting from sports activities in school playgrounds	0	995	2	765
Resulting from indoor and outdoor play activities in school	0	2,161	1	1,234

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Atomic Energy (Departmental Unit)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people have been employed in the Atomic Energy (Unit C) section of his Ministry in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The information requested is as follows:

	Number
1978-83	3 or 4
1984	6
1985	8
1986	9
1987	14
1988	16

I am satisfied that Unit C of the Ministry's food science division, now known as the food safety (radiation) unit, has been adequately staffed to carry out its duties throughout this period.

Radioactive Caesium Deposition (Cumbria)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has made the preliminary contour map of radioactive caesium deposition resulting from the aeriel survey of Cumbria available to all the farmers in the restricted area of that county; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: No. Only the final report on this survey will be published.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make the preliminary contour map of radioactive caesium deposition resulting from the aerial survey of Cumbria available in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I have nothing to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member on 28 November at column 190.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers and landowners (a) from the restricted area of Cumbria and (b) from outside the restricted area attended the meeting at Edenbridge house, Carlisle on 23 November to discuss the aerial survey of post-Chernobyl radioactivity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The farmers and landowners who attended the meeting on 23 November were chosen by their representative organisations. I understand that all of them farm within the original restricted area of Cumbria, though the farms of three of them are no longer under restriction.

Veterinary Products

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his powers to ban a veterinary product if that product has satisfied the Veterinary Products Committee in terms of its safety, quality and efficacy and has therefore been granted a product licence were last used; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It has rarely been necessary to use my power in this way, the last occasion being The Medicines (Hormones Growth Promoter) (Prohibition of Use) Regulations 1986, re-enacted in 1988, made to implement a Community decision which we had contested.

Pollen Beetle

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Ministry is taking to contain the spread of the metogethes, or pollen beetle.

Mr. Ryder: The pollen beetle is indigenous to and widespread in the United Kingdom. There are a number of approved pesticides which are effective against it.

Improvement Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the expenditure by county in England and Wales under the agricultural improvement scheme for each of the last three years.

Mr. Ryder: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested.

Total expenditure under the Agriculture Improvement Scheme was as follows:

£ million	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	[1]1988
England	0·127	6·670	14·572	4·672
Wales	0·054	3·249	5·88	1·396

Chickens (Salmonella Enteritidis)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many chickens slaughtered for meat are tested for the presence of salmonella enteritidis; and how many are found to carry the bacteria.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Testing is not a statutory requirement and no firm information is available. Advice has been issued to enforcement authorities on the identification and rejection of birds showing visible signs of salmonella enteritidis at post-mortem inspection. We have asked the industry to consider urgently what other steps can be taken. Salmonella is destroyed if poultry is cooked properly.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Cash Limits

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on which social security benefits expenditure is cash-limited; and which are not so limited.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None.

Child Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) fathers and (b) mothers claim child benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information available relates to men and women rather than fathers and mothers—child benefit is sometimes claimed by someone other than the parent, for example a grandparent. In Great Britain at 31 December 1987, about 135,000 child benefit claimants were men and about 6,545,000 claimants were women.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the rate of child benefit in 1979; and by what percentage the rate has increased between April 1979 and April 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The April 1979 rate of child benefit was £4.00; the increase in the rate between that date and April 1988 was 81.3 per cent.

Disability Benefit

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims in Stoke-on-Trent, North for disability benefit and for reduced earnings allowance are currently pending; what is the average length of time claimants in Stoke-on-Trent, North are having to wait from the date when their claim is first submitted to the date when the medical examination is done; what is the average waiting time between the receipt by his Department of the medical examination report and the payment of benefit; if he will consider paying disability benefit and reduced earnings allowance in cases which are pending; and how many consultants are currently available to undertake medical examinations to claimants in Stoke-on-Trent, North.

Mr. Scott: Claims from people living in Stoke-on-Trent, North constituency are dealt with by Stoke North local office, but their boundaries are not coterminous. The information which can be provided without incurring disproportionate cost is as follows.

As at 6 December, Stoke-on-Trent, North local office had 68 claims for disablement benefit and reduced earnings allowance at the stage of initial enquiries and which had yet to be medically examined.

Because payment of benefit is directly linked to an initial medical assessment of the degree of disablement, payment of benefit pending that assessment would not be appropriate.

There are 79 NHS consultants in the Stoke-on-Trent area who may be asked to carry out medical examinations of claimants.

Crisis Loans

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security why local offices of his Department will not give crisis loan applications forms to local advice agencies.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Local offices of the Department are authorised to issue representative samples of social fund forms, including the crisis loan application form, to local advice agencies. I am satisfied that this arrangement is operating effectively. To issue other than representative quantities would be counter-productive as both the forms and the information contained within them are constantly under review.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the relative merits of (a) the Leeming and (b) the Newcastle weather stations to determine the eligibility for cold weather payments for people in the Hexham constituency.

Mr. Scott: The Newcastle weather station is not used for the purposes of the social fund cold weather payments scheme since its location in the City tends to make it warmer than the area covered by the Department's local offices in the Hexham constituency. The weather station at Leeming, in the Vale of York, though further away, experiences temperature more representative of the Hexham constituency.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he is taking to trace the women who are entitled to back-payments of the invalid care allowance in consequence of the decision by the European Court of Justice in the case of Lucy Mabel Hood of Horsham:; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The case of Mrs. Hood's claim to invalid care allowance has not been before the European Court of Justice. She was however recently awarded benefit by a Social Security commissioner. We are now considering carefully the wider implications of the commissioner's decision.

Income Support

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he intends to implement the recommendation in the report "I can't go back to Mum and Dad", published by Barnados of a premium payment for care leavers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are monitoring the impact of the reformed benefit on all income support recipients, including the young people covered by the report. Once that exercise has been completed, we shall consider what, if anything, needs to be done.

Retirement Pension

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the basic national insurance pension in 1958 (a) as a percentage of average earnings in 1958 and (b) in 1988 prices and as a percentage of average earnings in 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In January 1958 the full basic national insurance retirement pension was 19·8 per cent. of the average earnings of all male manual workers. In April 1988 it was 20·5 per cent. The full basic pension in 1958 at 1988 prices was £21·75.

Mortgage Interest

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be (a) the overall varying and (b) benefit to the Exchequer for 1989-90 from calculating benefit increases on the retail prices index calculated without the inclusion of mortgage interest payments.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 6 December 1988]: Between September 1987 and September 1988 the retail prices index excluding the cost of mortgage interest payments rose by 5·2 per cent. If the April 1989 uprating has been calculated using this figure the cost would have been reduced by around £160 million, as shown in the table:

Benefit	£ million
Retirement pension	− 137
Widows benefit	− 6
Unemployment benefit	− 6
Invalidity benefit	− 26
Attendance allowance	− 8
Mobility allowance	− 5
Other benefits	− 13
Income support	+ 32
Rent rebate and allowance	+ 10
Total	− 159

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 12 December 1988

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Patrick Ryan

64. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement as to the progress of the extradition of Patrick Ryan from the Republic of Ireland.

The Attorney-General: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers which I gave to the private notice question tabled by the right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris) on 1 December and on 7 December to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow). At present, I have no further developments to report.

Extradition

65. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the operation of extradition procedures between the United Kingdom and other countries; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Where the United Kingdom has an extradition treaty with a foreign state other than a member of the Commonwealth, the provisions of that treaty and of the Extradition Act 1870 presently apply. With effect from a day to be appointed by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary provision for new extradition arrangements with foreign states will be made by part I of the Criminal Justice Act 1988.

Extradition procedures involving a fugitive from a Commonwealth country apprehended here are governed by the Fugitive Offenders Act 1967, and those sought by our own prosecuting authorities who are within the jurisdiction of one of our Commonwealth partners are subject to reciprocal legislation in substantially the same terms.

Finally, the position of the Republic of Ireland is different again and is unique. Extradition procedures depend upon reciprocal legislation enacted by both nations in 1965. The Irish Extradition Act was amended in certain significant respects at the end of last year. Our own legislation has not been altered correspondingly.

The Government are satisfied that the procedures under the United Kingdom legislation and associated treaties with foreign states provide the basis for satisfactory extradition arrangements.

66. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General what is the number of outstanding extradition warrants against residents of the Irish Republic who are wanted in connection with terrorist offences.

The Attorney-General: Warrants issued in the United Kingdom for the arrests of 24 fugitives believed to be in the Republic of Ireland are presently outstanding. I do not think it would be in the public interest to specify how many of these warrants have been issued in connection with terrorist offences.

Entry Clearances

Mr. Darling: To ask the Attorney-General what is the average cost to public funds of all work in connection with an appeal against refusal of entry to the United Kingdom including the time expended in preparing the entry clearance officers' report, the appeal hearing and the ultimate determination of the case.

The Attorney-General: The average cost to public funds of all work in connection with an appeal against refusal of entry to the United Kingdom is not readily identifiable. The Home Office, Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Lord Chancellor's Department all incur expenditure in relation to such appeals but it is not possible for those Departments to identify separately costs attributable to particular types of work related to appeals against refusal of entry only.

However, the average cost to the FCO of preparing an entry clearance officers' explanatory statement in 1987-88 (the last complete year for which figures are available) was estimated to be £85. The average cost to the Lord Chancellor's Department of the work done by the immigration appelate authorities in hearing and determining an appeal against refusal of entry is currently estimated to be £113.

The Coventry Four

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General what discussions took place between his Department and the office of Mr. Justice Leonard in the case of those persons known as the Coventry four.

The Attorney-General: None.

Mortgage Fraud

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Attorney-General whether, in view of the recent court judgments which prevented the police restraining convicted defendants from profiting from assets obtained as a result of mortgage fraud, there are any legislative measures proposed to close this loophole.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.

Part VI of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 empowers the courts to restrain and confiscate property in proceedings for serious offences, including offences of the kind alleged in this case. We expect to bring these provisions into force in April 1989.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Disabled Students

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if the disabled students' allowance will remain index linked following the recent Government announcement to introduce top up loans for students.

Mr. Jackson: The amount of the allowance is at the discretion of local education authorities, subject to a ceiling—at present £730. That ceiling is not index linked. No decision has been taken on what it should be in the future.

Student Grants

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the figures for the percentages of (a) full-time students receiving the full grant from their local educational authority, (b) students receiving (i) 1 to 9 per cent., (ii) 10 to 19 per cent., (iii) 20 to 29 per cent., (iv) 30 to 39 per cent., (v) 40 to 49 per cent., (vi) 50 to 59 per cent., (vii) 60 to 69 per cent., (viii) 70 to 79 per cent., (ix) 80 to 89 per cent., (x) 90 to 99 per cent., respectively, of their grant from their local educational authority and (c) students receiving minimum grant from their local educational authority.

Mr. Jackson: The available data are as follows:

Mandatory awards (England and Wales) 1986-87

	Student numbers	Percentage of award holders
Full maintenance	[1]145,307	36·9
Maintenance reduced by assessment:
(i) Numbers of dependent students with parental contributions of:

£401-£600	19,114	4·8
£601-£800	17,625	4·5
£801-£1,000	15,932	4·0
£1,001-£1,200	14,140	3·6
£1,201-£1,400	11,924	3·0
£1,401-£1,600	9,491	2·4
£1,601-£1,800	7,600	1·9
£1,801-£2,000	5,331	1·4
Over £2,001	4,323	1·1
(ii) Dependent students who contribute to grant from their own income	509	0·1
(iii) Indpendent students	4,954	1·3
Nil maintenance[2]	[1]88,188	22·4

[1] Includes dependent and independent students.
[2] The minimum grant was abolished with effect from 1985-86. For these students only the course fees are paid.

Teachers (Exchanges)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to encourage the development of the overseas teachers exchange scheme with particular reference to the Commonwealth.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department continues to encourage the development within available resources of the teacher exchange schemes administered by the Central Bureau for Educational Visits and Exchanges and the League for the Exchange of Commonwealth Teachers. An evaluation of teachers exchange commissioned from the National Foundation for Educational Research is currently under consideration by the Department.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he is giving to local education authorities on the formation of local financial management schemes to ensure that the costs of teachers' exchange schemes do not fall disproportionately on individual schools.

Mr. Butcher: My Department's officials have indicated that it will be open to local education authorities to propose, as part of their local management schemes, to retain as an exception from delegation the additional costs incurred by individual schools participating in teacher exchange schemes.

Arts (Young People)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which bodies will take over responsibility for the present arts projects for young people after the abolition of the Inner London education authority.

Mrs. Rumbold: The inner London councils will be responsible for all aspects of their education service, including relevant arts activities, from 1 April 1990. Boroughs have an opportunity to set out their development plans, to be published by 28 February 1989, proposals for this aspect of their service. Certain arts projects, including theatres, have already been discussed jointly by the boroughs.

Student Loans

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is his policy on providing timely information to local education authorities in order to enable them to respond to individual inquiries about the proposed introduction of top-up loans for students;

(2) what arrangements he made for the distribution of copies of the White Paper "Top-up Loans for Students" to local education authorities; whether there was any delay in this distribution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Department sent copies of the White Paper to the local authority associations and copies were available for purchase by individual authorities when it was published on 9 November. The Department does not normally distribute copies of priced publications to local education authorities. Local education authorities received copies of the Department's press notice announcing the publication.

Science Base

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish a policy statement on science in the light of discussions on the document "A Strategy for the Science Base" by the Advisory Board for the Research Councils.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: When I am ready to do so.

Capital Spending

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what allocations for capital spending, by local education authorities in respect of maintained schools, including voluntary schools, and in respect of grant maintained schools, he is making for 1989-90.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I expect to announce allocations shortly.

Teachers (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress he has made towards finalising the guidance given by his Department to education authorities on monitoring the numbers of teachers recruited from ethnic minorities, their promotion pattern and related matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: We expect to issue a circular on the collection of ethnically based statistics on teachers shortly. The circular will require authorities to make first returns to the Department in January 1990.

Bradford City Technology College

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the estimated revenue costs for the city technology college in Bradford over each of the 10 years from 1990; and who is going to pay the revenue expenditure over this period.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend will pay a per capita grant to meet the normal running costs of each city technology college in line with average costs in local education authority maintained secondary schools in similar areas. It is too early to say what grant will be payable to the city technology college proposed for Bradford since this will depend on factors yet to be decided, such as the size of the city technology college and the rate at which pupils will be recruited.

PRIME MINISTER

Retired Officers

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what restrictions exist on emigration to a Communist country of retired security service officers.

(2) what restrictions exist covering the emigration of retired officers from the British independent nuclear deterrent programme to the Soviet Union.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 8 December 1988 at column 268.

Nuclear Accidents

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if any progress has been made in plans to produce a comprehensive co-ordinated arrangement to deal with emergencies arising from nuclear accidents in the United Kingdom, or in nearby countries.

The Prime Minister: Following the Chernobyl accident, extensive consultations were held with emergency services and those authorities who would be involved in dealing with a nuclear accident in the United Kingdom. These consultations have confirmed the availability of contingency plans which would permit an effective response to be made to any nuclear accident, including those with more widespread effects than the specific site and off-site plans are designed to cater for. These plans are kept under continuous review and are regularly exercised.

The procedures for responding to an accident in nearby countries are set out in the Department of the Environment booklet "The National Response Plan and Radioactive Incident Monitoring Network (RIMNET): A Statement of proposals" published by HMSO, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. Forty six monitoring stations throughout the United Kingdom became operational in June. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment expects to accept the associated computer and telecommunications systems for phase 1 of RIMNET from the contractor shortly.

Nuclear Initiatives

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her recent visit to Washington DC, she discussed with the President and President-elect Bush any new initiatives to be developed by the Western Alliance on nuclear proliferation, the 1990 non-proliferation treaty review conference, and methods to combat nuclear terrorism.

The Prime Minister: These are subjects which are frequently discussed between the United States and ourselves.

Radioactive Fallout

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to request President Gorbachev, during his forthcoming visit to the United Kingdom, to provide financial compensation for British farmers who have suffered economic hardship following contamination of their land and livestock by radioactive fallout from the Chernobyl nuclear accident.

The Prime Minister: President Gorbachev's planned visit to the United Kingdom has had to be postponed because of the devastating earthquake in Armenia. The position with regard to compensation remains as stated in the reply to the hon. Member of 21 July 1986 at column 5.

Nurses and Midwives (Pay)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received on the nurses and midwives pay award for the coming year; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: None.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister when she expects to receive the report of the nurses and midwives pay review body for 1989.

The Prime Minister: The review body has been asked to submit its report to me in time for decisions to be made on its recommendations by mid-February.

Official Gifts

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister how much has been spent by her office on official gifts for presentation to Heads of Government, Heads of State and officials in each of the three financial years.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 8 December at columns 267-8.

CPRS (Costs)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister how much of the cost of £1,109,000 for the Central Policy Review Staff in 1982-83 was wholly attributable to staffing costs; how many staff were employed; and what were the costs in 1979-80, 1980-81 and 1981-82.

The Prime Minister: Actual figures for the cost of the CPRS are not available and it is not possible, therefore, to identify actual staffing costs. The estimated figure of £1,109,000 quoted in my answer of 1 December 1988 at column 348 is based on a staff-in-post figure for 1982-83 of 35. The estimated costs of the CPRS, on the same basis, for the years prior to 1982-83 are:

1979-80	662,000
1980-81	797,000
1981-82	932,000

No. 10 Downing Street (Furnishing and Decoration)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if competitive tenders were sought for the current programme of furnishing and decorating of No. 10 Downing street.

The Prime Minister: Schedules of rates for the redecoration of No. 10 Downing street were obtained from two firms, on the basis of which one of them was invited to tender. The tender was evaluated by an independent consultant, and the contract price was determined in further negotiations with the tenderer.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will give a breakdown of the expenditure on (a) furnishing and (b) decoration at No. 10 Downing street for all items over £500 in the current financial year to date.

The Prime Minister: No. The information is not readily available in the form requested and cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost.

South Africa

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the occasions on which, during the course of her official duties, she has expressed the view of Her Majesty's Government over the failure of the South African authorities to return four alleged criminals to the United Kingdom to stand trial.

The Prime Minister: This matter was thoroughly aired in the House at the time. I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by the then Minister of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 23 October 1984 at columns 559-569.

WALES

Health Service (Grading)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of clinical nursing and midwifery staff have been assimilated to each of the new clinical grades by district health authority.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Sir R. Gower) on 1 December 1988 at columns 349-50 by my right hon. Friend.

Acid Rain

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to limit acid rain deposition in Wales; and whether he is taking any special measures to limit acid deposition in the Snowdonia national park.

Mr. Grist: Limitation of acid deposition over Wales is dependent upon the reduction of emissions throughout the United Kingdom and Europe. The United Kingdom is party to a European Community directive which commits us to significant reductions in emissions from large combustion plants and sets stringent standards for emissions from new plans. Compliance will entail a substantial effort over and above the existing £1 billion programme by the Central Electricity Generating Board to retrofit 6,000 megawatts of generating capacity with flue gas desulphurisation, and all 12 major coal-fired power stations with low nitrogen oxide burners.

We are also introducing more stringent standards for car exhaust emissions following agreement on a European Community directive in December 1987 and the meeting of Environment Ministers in November this year.

These measures will affect deposition in all parts of Wales including the Snowdonia national park.

Gwent-Glamorgan Archaeological Trust

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will sanction the grant of £50,000 by the Welsh Development Agency to the Gwent-Glamorgan archaeological trust to enable the wall surrounding the Salt house at Port Eynon, Gower, to be rebuilt.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Welsh Development Agency has been given approval to include the project in its programme.

Mental Health

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provisions the National Health Service in Wales has made for back-up services for mentally ill patients who have been discharged from hospitals.

Mr. Grist: The provision of appropriate services for people with mental illnesses who have been discharged from hospital is a matter for district health authorities in collaboration with a range of other bodies, including social services departments, housing bodies and the primary health care and voluntary sectors. The Welsh Office provides central support for the development of community-based mental illness services. In 1988-89 some £2·4 million of additional central funds have been allocated to Welsh health authorities for new projects for the care of people with mental illnesses.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what proposals he has to deal with those mentally ill patients in Wales discharged from hospitals without alternative accommodation.

Mr. Grist: The Department's draft mental illness strategy makes it clear that patients should only be discharged when appropriate alternative services are available to meet their individual needs.

Marketing Initiative

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the cost to public funds of his Welsh agricultural and food products marketing initiative announced on 19 July at the Royal Welsh show.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am delighted that all three of the marketing advisers have agreed to carry out their work without salary.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the terms of reference of his Welsh agricultural and food products marketing initiative announced on 19 July at the Royal Welsh show.

Mr. Peter Walker: The marketing advisers have an open remit to use their extensive commercial expertise to examine the broad range of Welsh agriculture and food processing in Wales and to come forward with as many constructive ideas and proposals as they see fit without any bureaucratic control or direction from me.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what have been the achievements of his Welsh agricultural and food products marketing initiative announced on 19 July at the Royal Welsh show.

Mr. Peter Walker: So far, the marketing advisers have been examining and evaluating the structure of Welsh production and marketing systems. More specifically they are looking at:

the development of the image of Wales and high quality Welsh products;
the marketing of Welsh lamb and associated products;
the marketing of milk-based products;
fresh foods and farm-scale food speciality operations.

I am confident that the results of this work will become apparent in due course.

Planning Applications

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether his Department will now start collating statistics on planning applications in national parks in the same way as the Department of the Environment.

Mr. Grist: The Welsh Office already collates and makes available statistics on planning applications in national parks in Wales.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the percentage of planning applications to his Department granted on appeal; and what percentage of these relate to national parks.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies I gave him on 2 December at columns 418-19.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) whether he is reconsidering the level of rate support grant to be paid to Cardiff city council for the 1987-88 financial year;

(2) whether he will restore to Cardiff city council the £2·3 million which was due to that council until the moment of his rate support grant statement on 7 July;

(3) in what circumstances the undertaking, made to the House in his statement of 8 December on the rate support grant in Wales, to consider amended figures that local authorities might submit in respect of the 1987-88 financial year and to amend their actual grant as a consequence will apply; and in what circumstances it will not apply.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend's decisions on the grant entitlement of all Welsh local authorities for 1987-88, based on the information known to him and using amount of total expenditure determined in accordance with the provisions of section 1 of and schedule 1 to the Rate Support Grants Act 1988, are set out in the Welsh Rate Support Grant Supplementary (No. 2) Report 1987-88, laid before the House on 8 December. It remains open to all authorities to make further representations as to the total expenditure figures used in calculating their grant entitlement. If my right hon. Friend is able to agree that, under the provisions of the Act, a different amount of total expenditure should be used for an authority, that authority's grant entitlement will be recalculated accordingly.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on local authorities planning their spending ahead in accordance with the details and information provided by him in formal statements to the House and in official communications from his officials to those authorities.

Mr. Grist: Within the statutory framework, local authorities have discretion to determine their own spending plans.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Visa Applications

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his replies to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) of 30 November, Official Report, columns 310-16, to what causes he attributes the disproportionately high rate of refusals to applicants in Bangladesh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The causes remain those identified in paragraphs 31 to 37 of the Home Affairs Committee's second report on immigration from the Indian sub-continent, Session 1985-86, (House of Commons Paper 67-I).

Albino Cimini

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action has been taken by Her Majesty's embassy in Ankara concerning Albino Cimini.

Mr. Waldegrave: Mr. Cimini was transferred on 8 December 1988 to the United Kingdom under the provisions of the Council of Europe convention on the transfer of sentenced persons, which came into force for Turkey on 1 January 1988. During his time in prison, Mr. Cimini received monthly consular visits.

Her Majesty's embassy, Ankara, liaised with Turkish and British authorities over Mr. Cimini's application under this convention.

Turkey

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Kingdom subjects are held in Turkish prisons; for what period they have been held; and what representations have been made by embassy officials concerning their plight.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are two British subjects currently in prison in Turkey. One has been on remand for three months awaiting trial, and has legal representation. The other was imprisoned in August 1988. We do not make representations about judicial procedures in other sovereign states. Her Majesty's embassy has provided consular assistance to both prisoners.

Angola

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any information on the number of Soviet bloc advisers in Angola at the present time.

Mrs. Chalker: We do not have reliable information on the number of Soviet bloc advisers in Angola.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what progress has been made by Her Majesty's Government in encouraging African intermediaries to promote and facilitate national reconciliation in Angola;

(2) whether Her Majesty's Government will act as an honest broker in bringing the MPLA-PT Government and UNITA together in a conference to promote national reconciliation in Angola;

(3) whether his Department has had any contact with third parties to promote national reconciliation in Angola;

(4) what assistance he will be giving to the organisation and supervision of free and fair elections in Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: We would welcome any move to establish internal peace in Angola which had the support of both sides. We believe, however, that African leaders in the region with whom we are in touch are best placed to mediate. It is not for us to prescribe how elections should be conducted in another sovereign state.

Coventry Four

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether representatives of Her Majesty's Government corresponded with representatives of the South African Government of the question of the remanding of those persons known as the Coventry four on charges of breaching arms embargo regulations;

(2) on what date representatives of the South African Government petitioned for the repatriation to South Africa of those persons known as the Coventry four;

(3) what representations were made by the British Government to representatives of the South African Government on the question of action being taken in the case of those persons known as the Coventry four, following upon their repatriation to South Africa;

(4) what representations were received by Her Majesty's Government from the South African embassy on the question of the remanding of those persons known as the Coventry four in March 1984;

(5) in what way relations with Pretoria were affected following upon South Africa's refusal to co-operate with the British courts in the case of those persons known as the Coventry four;

(6) how many summaries of developments on the inquiries by his Department into the case of those persons known as the Coventry four were written; and to whom they were despatched.

Mrs. Chalker: This matter was thoroughly aired in the House at the time. I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by the then Minister of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 23 October 1984 at columns 559-69.

South Africa

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the South African ambassador; and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State last met the South African ambassador on 23 September. They discussed a range of issues of common interest.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for the nuclear non-proliferation treaty of South Africa having the means and skills to build atomic weapons.

Mr. Waldegrave: We would be seriously concerned by the acquisition of nuclear weapons by a non-nuclear weapon state. We continue to urge South Africa to remove the element of ambiguity in its position by acceding to the non-proliferation treaty and placing all its nuclear facilities under full scope International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards.

Mr. Dassam Abu Sharif (Meeting)

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the meeting of the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave), with Mr. Dassam Abu Sharif on 9 December.

Mr. Waldegrave: This meeting was arranged after Mr. Abu Sharif agreed to make a public statement which met in full the conditions we have maintained since 1985 for ministerial contact with the PLO. This is an important step forward. I am arranging for copies of the agreed text and of the statement as delivered from memory by Mr. Abu Sharif to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Abu Sharif emphasised that the Palestinians were serious in seeking peace with Israel and that the decisions of the PNC in Algiers superseded the PLO charter. I welcomed this and his clarification of the PLO's recognition of Israel and opposition to all forms of terrorism and violence, which I hoped would be confirmed by Mr. Arafat's speech to the United Nations General Assembly in Geneva.

We hope that the Government of Israel will respond constructively and now agree to attend an international conference on the basis of Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Westminster Cemeteries

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what were the relevant facts which his Department became aware only after 23 November which led an official of his Department to telephone a Westminster City councillor to tell him to disregard the contents of a letter dated 23 November stating that his Department would not be making an inquiry into alleged fraud by companies which purchased land from Westminster council, or through whose hands ownership of land subsequently passed, related to Westminster cemeteries.

Mr. Maude: The relevant facts were media references to a report which might shed light on the affair. This was later identified as a report under section 15(3) of the Local Government Finance Act 1982 to Westminster city council by the auditor appointed by the Audit Commission. In the telephone conversation to which the hon. Member refers, an official underlined the substance of the Department's letter of 23 November that whilst there were no grounds for a Companies Act investigation any further information would be considered on its merits.

Insolvency Service

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many items of correspondence he has received about the work of the insolvency service since 1 July from hon. Members.

Mr. Maude: Fifty nine. Ministers have also received other correspondence which has, in part, concerned the work of the insolvency service.

Exports

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the 10 largest markets for British exports with the percentage of United Kingdom exports given to each.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is as follows:

United Kingdom exports 12 months to October 1988

	Percentage of total exports
United States of America	13·1
Federal Republic of Germany	11·8
France	10·0
Netherlands	7·0
Belgium-Luxembourg	5·1
Irish Republic	5·0
Italy	5·0
Spain	3·1
Sweden	2·8
Canada	2·5

Investment Services

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will outline the nature of the proposals relating to the operation in the United Kingdom of home country authorised investment firms and financial intermediaries in the investment services directive; when the directive will be considered by the Council of Ministers; and if it will fall to be considered by majority vote in the Council.

Mr. Maude: The European Commission is still preparing its proposal for a directive on investment services for consideration by the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has consulted the Securities and Investments Board and the FIMBRA organisation about the implications of the investment services directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My Department is in regular contact with the Securities and Investments Board and FIMBRA on the range of matters of concern to them and will consult them on the investment services directive when a proposal has been presented to the Council of Ministers by the European Commission.

Coventry Four

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will identify those firms that agreed to discuss the supply of arms to South Africa following upon discussions with those persons known as the Coventry four.

Mr. Alan Clark: No.

GATT

Mr. Waller: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the outcome of the mid-term meeting of the GATT Uruguay round in Montreal.

Mr. Alan Clark: The task of the mid-term meeting which my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture and my right hon. and noble Friend attended was to consolidate the past two years' work of the Uruguay round and to lay down guidelines and frameworks for the second half of the negotiation. Substantial progress to this end was made on a number of the issues of particular concern to the United Kingdom. Detailed frameworks for further negotiations on liberalisation of trade in services, multilateral tariff reductions and strengthening of GATT procedures including dispute settlement were agreed on a provisional basis. There was also agreement to liberalise the import regime for tropical products. The European Community will put in place from 1 January 1989 tariff reductions on tropical products which can be implemented under the generalised scheme of references.

Disappointingly, however, there was no agreement on a more detailed framework for negotiations on the reform of agriculture, despite substantial and positive efforts by the European Community, the Cairns group of agricultural exporting countries and others. The United States insisted on pressing for the total elimination of agricultural support by a time to be agreed. This was not acceptable to the Community, nor was it in the 1986 Punta del Este declaration which set the guidelines for the round. Nor was progress possible in negotiation on international trade in textiles, nor on the better protection of intellectual property. Since in those three cases agreement could not be achieved in Montreal it was decided to suspend the work there with a view to further negotiation in preparation for a meeting of senior trade policy officials in Geneva early in April. The objective then will be to endorse formally the agreements reached provisionally last week, and if possible to establish common ground on the way forward on the three issues in dispute at Montreal.

It is disappointing that for the time being further progress could not be made on agriculture, but it is a suspension rather than a breakdown of negotiation, and over the coming months the Government will continue to work for a positive outcome. In other areas of importance to United Kingdom industry and commerce positive results have been secured. The Government will be working with our partners in the Community to resolve outstanding issues and to ensure that the gains made at Montreal are consolidated in April and that in the remaining two years of the Uruguay round continuing progress is made on the full range of issues covered by the negotiations.

Textiles and Clothing (Exports)

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current value of textile and clothing exports; and what proportions go to the European Community, Japan and the United States of America.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is in the following table:

United Kingdom textile and clothing exports[1]
12 months to October 1988

	£ million	Per cent. of total
Total	3,356	100
European Community	1,882	56
Japan	172	5
USA	303	9

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Rating Reform

Mr. Key: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what steps the Church Commissioners are taking to assist the churches in adjusting to the introduction of the Community charge.

Mr. Alison: The commissioners are closely consulting dioceses about what charges would be desirable in the stipends arrangements of the clergy when they and their spouses become liable to pay a personal community charge in 1990. Because most of the clergy have hitherto lived in their accommodation free of rates, the commissioners hope to make substantial additional sums available for stipends in 1990 to reflect the extra costs which will fall on them.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Nurses

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether all nurses in East Antrim hospitals have been notified of their new grading.

Mr. Needham: Yes.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nurses are employed in East Antrim hospitals; and how many are in each grade at present.

Mr. Needham: There are 420·82 whole-time equivalent nursing staff employed in East Antrim hospitals. The numbers in each grade at present are as follows:

Grade	Whole-time equivalent
A	70·09
C	90·51
D	96·73
E	97·83
F	22·66
G	33·00
H	7·00
I	3·00
Total	420·82

Sewage Disposal

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money will be made available to Northern Ireland as part of the amount announced by the Secretary of State for the Environment for improving the coastal sewage disposal systems throughout the United Kingdom over the next four years.

Mr. Needham: None. The accelerated programme of capital improvement for sewage treatment works announced by the Secretary of State for the Environment relates only to England and Wales.

Mr. Ronald Allen

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State responsible for education will reply to the letter of 7 October from Mr. Ronald Allen of "Roalan", Lower Ballo road, Groomsport BT19 2LU.

Dr. Mawhinney: A reply was issued on 8 November, signed by my private secretary.

ENVIRONMENT

Yorkshire Water Authority

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield on 28 November, he will give the reasons for his conclusion that the information supplied to his Department by the Yorkshire water authority in its annual return for 1987 detailing the discharge and monitoring of list one substances does not constitute a breach of the relevant European Community directives governing discharges of these substances.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is going to take against Yorkshire water authority for breaching the European directives for mercury and cadmium being found in river sediment in addition to breaches for the pesticide lindane; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I apologise to the hon. Member that only the first paragraph of the five-paragraph answer which I had prepared was given to him. The full answer should have read as follows:

On the basis of the periodic returns supplied by Yorkshire water authority, the Department does not consider that the requirements of the relevant European Community directives governing discharges of these substances have been breached. Measures taken by Yorkshire water authority have resulted in considerable reductions in the discharge of mercury and cadmium in recent years, and all authorised discharges meet the requirements of the relevant directives. The directives also specify that concentrations of these substances in sediments must not increase significantly with time, and again the monitoring carried out by Yorkshire water authority demonstrates a general downward trend, although because of the persistence of these substances some time lag can be expected before the improvements in water concentrations show up fully in improved sediment concentrations.

The 1987 sediment monitoring results do show a small increase in the mercury concentration at one location, but this is not considered to be significant against the overall trend at that location since 1984. The 1986 sediment monitoring results also showed an increase over the previous year in the measurement of cadmium at one location, but the 1987 results shows no further increase, and it is too early to establish a reliable trend. In neither case is the increase believed to be due to the effects of any current discharge, but future results at these locations will be monitored carefully and appropriate action taken if any significant upward trend should emerge.

The levels of lindane in some Yorkshire rivers have been a matter of concern, though these are due largely to past use of this highly persistent pesticide. The Department receives regular reports from Yorkshire water authority about its programmes to eliminate any remaining sources of pollution and is satisfied with the considerable efforts that the authority has made.

There has been a steady decline in the concentration of lindane at all monitoring points in recent years, and this trend is expected to continue. The latest data supplied by Yorkshire water authority indicate that the quality standard in the relevant European Community directive is now exceeded at only one monitoring point, and the concentration here is expected to fall within the standard in the near future. The water authority has not identified any current source or user of lindane whose discharge could be linked to this particular reading. However, they are continuing to monitor the position and to search for any possible unknown sources.

Conservation (Staffordshire)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amount of nature conservation work carried out by the voluntary sector on water authority land in Staffordshire.

Mr. Moynihan: I have no information on this, but I suggest that the hon. Member contacts the Severn Trent water authority.

Rents

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish for (a) Great Britain, (b) England and (c) each region, the average of local authority rents and fair rents registered for unfurnished dwellings, for each year since 1979, indicating the percentage in each year on annual and cumulative basis.

Mr. Trippier: I have today laid in the Library tables giving the available information at national and regional levels.

Rating Reform

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish his Department's proposed timetable for publishing further material relating to the community charge, giving the manner and type of publication and the amounts budgeted both in total and by individual category; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I am completing consideration of these arrangements and shall be making an announcement shortly.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the amounts to be allowed to each local authority in (a) England and (b) Wales to meet the setting up costs of the community charge, indicating in each case the division between specific and block grant, and where available the local authorities' estimates of the costs involved.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In England capital allocations totalling £25 million in respect of expenditure in 1988-89 were announced on 13 April. A list of individual authorities' allocations was placed in the Library on that date. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 21 October that a further allocation of £135 million would be made for 1989-90. Individual allocations from this total will shortly be made.

My right hon. Friend also announced on 21 October that half the provision of £110 million included in the 1989-90 rate support grant settlement for the current costs of preparing for the community charge will be met through a specific grant. A list showing individual authorities' share of this £55 million specific grant was placed in the Library on that date. The remaining half of the expenditure will be supported by rate support grant in the normal way.

We do not have comprehensive figures for local authorities' own estimates of these costs. The capital allocation of £135 million for 1989-90 was derived from the mid point of the range forecast for England in the Price Waterhouse report published in June this year. The provision of £110 million for current costs is also in line with the estimate made in that respect and is higher than the equivalent figure then postulated by local authority associations.

The information requested in respect of Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Crichel Down Rules

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to make mandatory the Crichel Down rules on the disposal of Government property; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: It is already Government policy that the Crichel Down rules will be applied to all disposals of Government property falling within the terms of Department of the Environment circular 18/84 (Welsh Office circular 37/84). The general principles underlying these rules and procedures are commended to local authorities and other public bodies.

Listed Buildings

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many areas of the United Kingdom have still not been surveyed for the purpose of revising the statutory lists of buildings of special architectural or historical significance; how many people are currently employed to do this work; and how long it will be before the revised list is completed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Southwell (Nottinghamshire), West Malling (Kent) and the Isles of Scilly and Lundy have not yet been resurveyed; a further five areas are in the process of being resurveyed. English Heritage and the Department of the Environment each employ seven people in the exercise, which will be completed by spring 1989.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conclusions as to the disposal costs of high-level radioactive waste arisings were reached by recent studies commissioned by his Department; and if this cost includes the present and future storage of the high-level waste and the vitrification of the waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Accurate cost estimates are not possible as high-level waste will not be disposed of for at least 50 years. An indicative estimate is in the order of £500 per litre, exclusive of the costs of storage and vitrification.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's report on Magnox fuel dry storage and direct disposal, assessment of the Central Electricity Generating Board/South of Scotland Electricity Board reports; and if he will make a statement about the report's estimate of the cost of disposing of (a) high-level and (b) intermediate and low-level nuclear waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A copy of the report was placed in the Library on 26 May 1988. For high-level wastes, accurate cost estimates are not possible as waste in this category will not be disposed of for at least 50 years. The report gives an indicative estimate of £500 per litre.

The costs estimated in the report of the disposal of low and intermediate-level wastes are consistent with the costs currently estimated by UK Nirex Ltd. which are:

Intermediate-level wastes—Land based deep repository £2,000-£7,000 per cubic metre.

Low-level wastes—Deep repository £750-£2,000 per cubic metre.

Local Authorities (Shareholdings)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to restrict local authorities from holding shares in publicly quoted companies.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Our proposals are set out in the consultation papers issued earlier this year: "Local authorities' interests in Companies" (especially paragraphs 31 and 32) and "Local Government in England and Wales: Capital Expenditure and Finance" (especially paragraphs A.37 and A.38). These proposals will not apply to the investment of superannuation funds or of charitable funds of which the local authority is trustee. Copies of the consultation papers are in the Library of the House.

Housing (Islington)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what have been the housing investment programme bids and the amounts allocated to the London borough of Islington for each year since 1983; how many new dwelling units have been constructed and rehabilitated for each year, and how many new dwellings have been added to the authority's stock as a result.

Mr. Trippier: Local authorities are able to supplement their allocations by the use of capital receipts and we would expect them to spend more on rehabilitation than on new construction. The bids, allocations and total spend; and new build and net additions by conversion reported by Islington council are as follows:

	Bid	Allocation (£ million)	Spend	New Build (units)	Conversion
1983-84	74·675	35·103	40·189	121	49
1984-85	72·806	34·449	49·165	80	—
1985-86	103·227	29·319	31·899	42	—
1986-87	121·397	29·486	64·259	135	75
1987-88	121·641	26·307	67·336	90	—
1988-89	104·226	27·009	—	—	—

In addition the council reported 18,292 dwellings renovated or improved between 1 April 1983 and 31 March 1988.

Unused Land

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many acres of unused land, currently listed on the register, belong to (a) water authorities, (b) the electricity industry, (c) the Ministry of Defence and (d) the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Trippier: The following are the amounts of unused and underused land on the land registers at 30 November 1988 for these owners:

	Acres
Water authorities	2,231
Electricity industry	2,952
Ministry of Defence	617
Property Services Agency	936

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate by how much the public debt would be reduced if all public unused land currently listed on the register was realised on the open market.

Mr. Trippier: At 30 November 1988 there were throughout England 8,134 sites on the land registers, covering 85,200 acres. The value obtainable for all these sites would depend on numerous site-specific and external factors which vary widely. It is therefore not possible to make any realistic estimate of how much would be realised if all the sites on the land registers were sold.

Disposal Notices

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many directions he has made under the Local Government Act as amended by way of disposal orders in each of the last three years; and if he will list in tabular form the acreage involved and the location.

Mr. Trippier: The statutory procedures leading to the issue of a direction require a notice of the proposed direction to be given. In many cases, the issue of the notice is sufficient to get the land brought into use or sold. Over 200 notices were issued in the last three years, and in some cases, were followed up by directions, as shown in the table below.

Electrical Transformers

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals to control the disposal of obsolete or redundant electrical transformers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Disposal of electrical transformers is controlled under part 1 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974. Where they contain polychlorinated biphenyls, they are also subject to the Special Waste Regulations 1980. A code of practice for the disposal of PCBs is contained in Waste Management Paper No 6.

South Wiltshire Structure Plan

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce modifications to the south Wiltshire structure plan following his examination in public.

Mr. Chope: I will do so soon.

Commissioner for Local Administration

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what administrative redress is available from him to a complainant, against a decision of a local authority when the Commissioner for Local Administration has ruled in a council's favour and against the complainant.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None: the commisioner for Local Administration (the local ombudsman) is independent of both local authorities and central Government.

Radon Gas

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will consider reducing the action level of radon gas attracting grant aid by 50 per cent. to 200 bq/cu m measured by an approved laboratory following a 12-month continuous survey; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will consider when recommending new action levels for radon gas, setting the same level for domestic and occupational exposure; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The action level for radon was recommended by the National Radiological Protection Board. The board has a statutory responsibility to advise Government on matters of radiological protection. They are keeping the level under review. Any recommendation from the board to reduce levels would be considered very carefully. The responsibility for administering regulatory controls on occupational exposure to radon rests with the Health and Safety Executive, which is also advised by the board.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider an extension to the provisions of mandatory house renovation grants to include all dwellings with radon levels above the action level irrespective of their age or their ability to meet the other qualifying condition of grant aid for housing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: No.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider producing advice and guidance for local authorities on the administrative procedures to be adopted when giving grants for work in dwellings with levels of radon above the action level as proposed by the Institution of Environmental Health Officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My Department wrote on 30 November to the local authority associations inviting their comments on draft guidance on the way in which authorities might consider applications for improvement grants toward the cost of radon remedial work. We await their comments.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider the inclusion within any forthcoming legislation on housing, reference to external factors that may affect the internal environment of the dwelling caused by poisonous substances including radon gas, methane from refuse tips or contamination from industrial operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: We are considering the scope of the work which will be eligible for grant aid under our proposals for legislation to reform the improvement grant system.

Ministerial Vehicles

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will detail by make and model the vehicles allocated to each of the Ministers in his Department.

Mr. Chope: Ministers in the Department of Environment have been allocated vehicles as follows:
Secretary of State—Rover 827
Minister for Local Government—Austin Rover Montego
Minister for Housing, Environment and Countryside—Ford Sierra Sapphire Minister for Water and Planning—Austin Rover Montego
Parliamentary Under Secretary of State (Mr. Trippier)—Austin Rover Montego
Parliamentary Under Secretary of State (Mr. Chope)—Austin Rover Montego (temporarily allocated a Rover Fastback 820 on trial)
Parliamentary Under Secretary of State (Mrs. Bottomley)—Vauxhall Cavalier
Parliamentary Under Secretary of State (The Hon. Colin Moynihan)—Ford Sierra Sapphire

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if there exists any hierarchy in terms of vehicle allocation for Secretaries of State, Ministers of State and Parliamentary Under-Secretaries.

Mr. Chope: Cabinet Ministers, unless security reasons demand otherwise, are allocated Austin Rover 820 series vehicles. Other Ministers are allocated Austin Rover Montegos, or equivalent models.

Tidy Britain Group

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the particular reasons for the selection of the A1-Grantham service area as one of the experimental projects currently being carried out by the Tidy Britain Group.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Grantham service area, being on a trunk road as opposed to a motorway, was chosen by the Tidy Britain Group to enable comparisons to be drawn with a similar project being undertaken on the Keele motorway service area. The hon. Gentleman may approach the Tidy Britain Group for more information.

Drinking Water

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements exist within his Department to keep London local authorities informed of progress in meeting the standards of directive 80/778/EEC.

Mr. Moynihan: Specific arrangements have not been established as London boroughs have a duty to ascertain the wholesomeness of drinking water in their respective areas.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which areas of London fail to meet the standards set out in the European Community drinking water directive 80/778/EEC.

Mr. Moynihan: There are no drinking water supplies to areas of London regularly exceeding the standards set in the EC drinking water directive.

Consultation Papers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the consultation papers issued by his Department during this Parliament giving for each: the numbers issued, the date of issue, the date consultation closes/closed, the number of responses received and whether they are available in the Library; if summaries of responses are available; and whether additional publicity materials were developed, and at what cost.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 25 November 1988]: The information the hon. Gentleman has requested is given in the table:

Sewers

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the approximate mileage of sewers, currently the property of regional water authorities, that are serviced and maintained by locally elected councils.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 7 December 1988]: This information is not available.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make arrangements to enable local authorities which currently service and maintain sewers under contract to regional water authorities to become exclusive contractors to their successor bodies.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 7 December 1988]: No.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with representatives of local authorities concerning the future servicing and maintenance of sewers which are currently the property of regional water authorities.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 7 December 1988]: The Government issued a consultation paper on the future of sewerage agency arrangements in November 1986, and invited comments from a range of interested organisations. Among those who responded were the Association of District Councils, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, NALGO, and the Water Authorities Association. The subject has also been raised since then in discussions between Ministers and the ADC.

Defective Dwellings

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when and how residents of the Galleys Bank estate in Kidsgrove were issued with statutory notices under section 563 of the Housing Defects Act.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 8 December 1988]: Section 563 of the Housing Act 1985 requires public sector bodies selling designated properties to notify the purchaser, specifying the qualifying defect and stating that no assistance will be available under the housing defects legislation. We understand that purchasers at Galleys Bank estate, Kidsgrove were not notified by British Coal until October 1986.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he will take to make sure that those residents who purchased their homes from a private owner, and who had no means of knowing that their homes were classified as defective under section 563 of the Housing Defects Act at the time of purchase, could be made eligible for grant aid under the Act.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 8 December 1988]: We have no plans to amend the housing defects legislation in this respect; the 12-month period of grace following the cut-off date, provided for by the Act, should have allowed sufficient time for knowledge of the defects to reach all those involved with the buying and selling of properties.

Water

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average annual domestic water bill at constant prices deflated by the retail prices index in 1979, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 8 December 1988]: The information requested by the hon. Member is presented in the following table. The RPI deflator for 1988-89 is based on the Autumn Statement made by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Average domestic water bill at constant (1987-88) prices and deflated by the RPI.

72·88	98·81	101·11

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan on 5 December, Official Report, column 16, he will set out functions of water authorities for which development is and will be allowed in their land.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 8 December 1988]: Schedule 2 to the Town and Country Planning General Development Order (SI No. 1813/1988) contains general permissions which may apply to water authority land. In addition, parts 10, 14, 15, 16 and 17 (class E) of schedule 2 all specify particular kinds of development for which the GDO grants general permission, unconditionally or subject to specified conditions, and which may be particularly relevant to water authorities. If a water authority's development proposal requires specific planning permission, the application will be determined on its merits by the local planning authority.

Rates

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the rate increase for Leeds city council for 1989-90, assuming expenditure by the council at the Government's grant-related expenditure allocation level; and what is his estimate of the corresponding increase for Bradford city council on the same assumptions, based on the information contained in the rate support consultation paper for 1989-90 issued on 11 November.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 8 December 1988]: We estimate that, if Leeds city council's total expenditure for 1989-90 were to equal its GRE, and the council use the same amount of balances as in 1988-89, its rate increase for 1989-90 would be 12 per cent. We estimate that for Bradford the corresponding figure would be a rate decrease of 12 per cent.

Local Government Commissioners (Rulings)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek powers to enable him to consider cases where the decision of a local government commissioner in ruling on a case appears to a constituent to be at variance with a previous decision.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 9 December 1988]: No. It is essential that the independence of the Commissioners for Local Administration in carrying out investigations is retained.

Water Authorities

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the area of land sold by each water authority in England as being surplus to operational requirements for each year since 1983.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 9 December 1988]: The acres of land disposed by English water authorities from the Land Register each year from 1984 are as follows:

Size in acres

	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988
Anglian	10	178	70	15	44
Northumbrian	3	17	3	16	3
North West	8	5	1	12	9
Severn Trent	2	—	27	—	—
Southern	4	—	—	—	16
South West	2	21	10	21	—
Thames	7	44	—	65	53
Wessex	6	—	10	—	—
Yorkshire	—	9	—	—	32

Mr. Ron Davies To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the value of the land sold by each water authority in England for each year since 1983.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 9 December 1988]: Receipts from the sale of fixed assets are published in the water authorities' annual reports. Copies are available from the Library.

Darenth Park and Swan Farm

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he is likely to issue his decision on the Darenth park site and the Swan farm planning inquiries.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 9 December 1988]: My right hon. Friend hopes to issue his decisions shortly.

Water Pollution

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much his Department intends to spend on measures to combat water pollution in the north-west area between now and the proposed privatisation of the water industry.

Mr. Moynihan: Water pollution is usually the result of industrial or agricultural activities or unsatisfactory discharges of sewage effluent. The North West water authority is responsible for sewage effluent discharges within its area and is engaged in major programmes to replace inadequate and outdated sewerage systems and to upgrade its sewage treatment works. The costs of these programmes are still being drawn up. Expenditure on measures to reduce the impact of industrial and agricultural discharges will be borne by the dischargers in line with the polluter pays principle.

THE ARTS

Libraries

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many replies to his financing libraries Green Paper (a) support and (b) oppose his proposals; and when he expects to make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Most of the 7,000 respondents neither directly supported nor opposed the proposals as a whole. Six respondents supported all the recommendations; 106 rejected them all. As I said on 7 November in reply to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) at column 14, I intend to make a statement in due course.

CIVIL SERVICE

Foreign Office (Disbursements)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will provide the most convenient breakdown of the disbursements made by his Department to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in the last financial year.

Mr. Luce: The total of disbursements made by my Department to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in 1987-88 was £209,756.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation Offences

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what progress has been made on investigations into alleged offences under the Taxes Management Act 1970 and the Taxes Act 1988 in respect of Messrs. Lewis and Tucker of 16 Hanover square, London W1;

(2) what progress has been made on investigations into alleged offences under the Taxes Management Act 1970 and the Taxes Act 1988 in respect of Wisland Investment Group Ltd;

(3) what progress has been made on investigations into alleged offences under the Taxes Management Act 1970 and the Taxes Act 1988 in respect of Bestwood Property Ltd;

(5) what progress has been made on investigations into alleged offences under the Taxes Management Act 1970 and the Taxes Act 1988 in respect of Royal Investments Ltd;

(6) what progress has been made on investigations into alleged offences under the Taxes Management Act 1970 and the Taxes Act 1988 in respect of Platemede Ltd.;

(7) what progress has been made on investigations into alleged offences under the Taxes Management Act 1970 and the Taxes Act 1988 in respect of Cemetery Assets UK Ltd.;

(8) what progress has been made on investigations into alleged offences under the Taxes Management Act 1970 and the Taxes Act 1988 in respect of Clive Warren Lewis of Lewis and Tucker, of 16 Hanover square, London W1.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Such information is confidential.

Earned Income

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate women's earned income as a percentage of total earned income for the years 1958, 1960, 1970, 1980, and the latest available figure.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information is for years ending on 5 April. For single women, estimates are confined to those with total income above the PAYE threshold, and for married women, to those where the combined total income of husband and wife is above the threshold. For the years 1980-81, and the latest readily available year, 1985-86, earned income is net of superannuation contributions. I regret that information for 1958-59 and 1960-61 is not available. The nearest years for which an estimate can be compiled are shown in the table:

Women's earned income as a percentage of total earned income

	Per cent.
1954-55	16
1962-63	15
1970-71	20
1980-81	22
1985-86	26

Taxation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give a breakdown of the marital status of those caught in the poverty and employment traps; what effect his proposals for the separate taxation of husbands and wives will have on the numbers caught in each trap; and whether he will publish in the Official Report figures for his revised proposals corresponding to those in chart 3.2 of Cmnd. 9756 on the Green Paper basis and on the present basis together with the number of low-earning households which will be worse off than at present as a result of the restriction on the transfer of any part of the husband's personal allowance to the wife.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The number of families in the poverty and unemployment traps is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security. The introduction of independent taxation will have a negligible effect on the number of families in either trap in 1990-91.

An update of the figures underlying chart 3.2 of Cmnd. 9756 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. There are transitional provisions which ensure that no married couple will suffer a cash reduction in their total tax allowances simply as a result of the change to independent taxation.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, further to paragraphs 12 and 13 of annex 4 to Comnd. 9756, he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the changes in the number paying tax and average gain or loss in each case as a result of his revised proposals at current rates of income tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: When independent taxation is introduced in April 1990, the number of higher rate taxpayers will fall to about 1 million and the provisions for wives' earnings elections will be withdrawn. Details of the average gains to individuals from the introduction of independent taxation were included in the Inland Revenue press release of 15 March 1988. Further estimates were provided to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 19 May at columns 574-76. I regret that further estimates could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the economic case for reducing income tax on investment income in the case of those with an income in excess of the ceiling below which there is an entitlement to income support; and if he will publish in the Official Report an estimate of the saving to the Revenue from increasing the tax on investment income by eight percentage points.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The reduction in tax rates in the 1988 Budget will have improved incentives for all taxpayers both to earn and to invest. A surcharge on investment income of 8 per cent. would yield just over £1·5 billion per annum at 1989-90 income levels. This estimate takes no account of any behavioural changes that would follow the introduction of the surcharge. The estimate is based on a projection of the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes and is therefore provisional.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table comparing the changes in the numbers paying tax and the average gain or loss in each case with his revised proposals at current rates of income and tax along the lines of paragraphs 9 and 11 of annex 4 Cmnd. 9756.

Mr. Norman Lamont: When independent taxation is introduced in April 1990, the number of elderly married couples liable to income tax will fall by about 160,000. The reduction in the number of married couples of working age liable to tax will be small.

Details of average gains from independent taxation, analysed by income, were included in the Inland Revenue press release of 15 March 1988. Further estimates were provided to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 19 May at columns 574-76.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will be reconsidering the use of negative taxation as set out by the Government of the day in 1972 in their White Paper on this subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the take-up of the tax cuts announced in his Budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The cut in the basic rate of income tax and the double indexation of personal allowances benefited all 25 million income taxpayers. The abolition of all higher rates above 40 per cent. benefited the 1·6 million people who pay income tax at the higher rate. In addition, some 750,000 people were taken out of the income tax net altogether by the increase in personal allowances.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will consider introducing a scheme for gradually drawing back personal income tax alllowances on the lines of the present age allowance.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the number of unmarried couples eligible for two additional personal allowances, the number claiming two allowances, and the estimated saving to the Exchequer from reducing their entitlement to one additional allowance in 1989-90.

Mr. Norman Lamont: We estimate that about 20,000 unmarried couples may be affected by the change made in section 30 of the Finance Act 1988 restricting unmarried couples with children to only one additional personal allowance between them. There should be a small tax yield of around £5 million.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, whether, in advocating the conversion of additional personal income tax allowance into one-parent and other benefits as suggested in paragraph 4.11 of Cmnd. 9756, he was also considering targeting the payment of one-parent and other benefits after the conversion of the additional personal allowance; to what extent the considerations set out in paragraphs 4.11 to 4.16 have been affected by his revised proposals for the separate taxation of husband and wife; and whether he has considered freezing, reducing or abolishing the additional personal allowance and/or one-parent allowance and/or child dependency addition to enable him to target the benefit to those families which he considers in most need of financial help.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to him on 5 December at column 54.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the starting rates of income tax in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Germany, (c) the Netherlands, (d) Belgium, (e) Denmark, (f) France, (g) Japan and (h) the United States of America, for (i) 1969-70, (ii) 1979-80, (iii) 1984-85 and (iv) 1987-88 or the last available year, in £ sterling.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information requested is given in the table.

Single Internal Market

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what types of potential problems of differing direct, indirect and corporate taxation rates have been raised with him, or with the Bank of England, arising from progress towards completion of the single internal market.

Mr. Norman Lamont: We have received a number of representations about the tax system in relation to the completion of the single market. These have ranged from representations about maintaining VAT zero rates and about the levels of excise duties proposed by the European Commission to questions of the interaction of the United Kingdom tax system and the free internal market in areas of the financial sector. I have been unable to trace any representations about direct and corporate tax rates as such.

Life Assurance

Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the life assurance companies concerning the Inland Revenue review of life assurance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont I have received a number of substantial responses and I am studying them carefully. I will take account of all that has been said in coming to decisions on the future of the life assurance tax regime.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to close his consultation on his document, "The Taxation of Life Assurance"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I am currently considering responses to the Inland Revenue consultative document on the taxation of life assurance. There is much to digest before I can decide the best way forward and the extent of further consultation.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was (a) the growth in tax yield from life offices and (b) the growth in life assurance business between 1982 and 1987, measured by total funds, taxable funds and taxable income.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The figures requested are not available from official sources and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The Association of British Insurers in its response to the Inland Revenue consultative document on the taxation of life assurance offered estimates of the growth rates described in the question based on a sample of life offices. I am sure that the association would let the hon. Member have details on request.

Child Benefit

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the effect on the tax threshold of a one-earner married couple with an income equal to that of the average earnings of an adult male manual worker; and how many additional adults and children would fall into the poverty and employment traps if child benefit were terminated.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The level of child benefit has no effect on the thresholds at which married couples become liable to income tax; these are determined solely by eligibility for personal tax allowances and reliefs. The effect of the abolition of child benefit on the numbers in the poverty and unemployment trap is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

Pensions

Mr. Lester: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish figures showing the different tax concessions for pension contributions, distinguishing between contributions to the state pension and to private pensions and between the maximum tax-deductible amounts or percentage that can be contributed by employees, employers and the self-employed, and also summarising the regulations regarding tax-free lump sums.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information is set out in the table:

1. Private Pensions
Table

	Maximum tax-relievable contributions as percentage of earnings
	Employer	Employee	Maximum lump sum benefit
Occupational Pension Schemes	No limit[1]	15[2]	Lesser of 1·5 times final earnings or £150,000[3]
Personal Pension Schemes	17·5[4]	17·5[4]	Lesser of 25 per cent. of value of individual's benefits or £150,000
Retirement Annuity[5] Contracts	None	17·5[6]	Three times the annual annuity after commutation[7]

Notes:
[1] Employer contributions should not exceed the amount required to provide the benefits promised under the scheme rules, taking into account any employee contributions.
[2] The self-employed cannot be members of an occupational pension scheme.
[3] Lump sums normally accrue at 3/80ths of final earnings for each year of service, up to a maximum of 40 years, giving a maximum of 120/80ths. But maximum benefits may be given for 20 years' service to normal retirement age. Finance (No. 2) Act 1987 introduced a proportionate link between maximum pensions and lump sums for people joining pension schemes on or after 17 March 1987. The £150,000 ceiling does not apply to members who joined before that date.
[4] The limit of 17·5 per cent. applies up to the age of 50. The limit applies to aggregate contributions by employers and employees. For higher ages the contribution limits are:
51-55 20 per cent.
56-60 22·5 per cent.
60-74 27·5 per cent.
The same limits apply to contributions by self-employed people.
[5] Retirement annuity contracts were superseded by personal pensions on 1 July 1988, although contracts in existence on that date may continue.
[6] Contribution rates are identical to those for personal pension schemes.
[7] In relation to contracts issued on or after 17 March 1987 an upper limit of £150,000 applies to the lump sum.

2. State pensions

(a) State retirement pension: The state retirement pension consists of a basic pension, and, in some cases, an additional pension (the state earnings-related pension scheme—SERPS) and a graduated pension. All are funded from national insurance contributions. There is no tax relief for employees' contributions. Employers' contributions may be deducted from profits as a business expense.

(b) Contracted-out personal pension schemes: When an employee uses a personal pension scheme to contract out of SERPS the tax treatment of his and his employer's national insurance contributions is the same as under SERPS. But the employee's share of the contributions—known as "minimum contributions"—paid to the personal pension scheme by the Department of Social Security (DSS) is grossed up at the basic rate of income tax.

(c) Contracted-out occupational pension schemes: Contributions by employers and employees paid towards a "Guaranteed minimum pension (GMP)" or "protected rights" qualify for tax reliefs in the manner described in the table above. The GMP or protected rights represent under DSS legislation a minimum level of pension which be paid to a scheme member by a contracted-out scheme. They are broadly equivalent to the amount of pension the member would have received under SERPS.

(d) State pensions and those in substitution for them cannot be taken as lump sums.

Trade Deficit

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the loss of revenue to the Exchequer as a result of the deficit of £14 billion in trade in manufactures.

Mr. Major: The effect of the deficit of trade in manufactures on Government revenues depends on what would otherwise have happened to a wide range of economic variables. Any estimates would be highly speculative and subject to wide margins of error. Even the direction of the effect is ambiguous. Revenues could be either higher or lower.

Payroll Giving

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate the level of public support for the payroll-giving scheme; and how much money has been donated to charities for each year since the introduction of the scheme to the latest available date.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many people participated in the payroll giving scheme in each of the past three years;

(2) what total sums of money were distributed to charities through the payroll giving scheme in each of the past three years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In 1987-88, the first year of the payroll giving scheme, about 60,000 employees participated and £1 million was donated. These estimates are provisional. Information for 1988-89 is not yet available, but donations and the number of participants in the scheme are expected to be considerably higher than in the first year.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he will publish a list of charities who have benefited from the payroll giving scheme;

(2) what arts charities have benefited under the payroll giving scheme in each of the past three years; and to what extent.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The extent to which all charities benefited from the payroll giving scheme in the year 1987-88, the first year of its operation, is estimated to be around £1 million. I am unable to supply details of individual charities which have benefited, because the information supplied to the Inland Revenue on individual charities is confidential.

EC (Revenue)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the sources of revenue for the EEC in 1988 along with the latest estimates of the amounts to be raised in pounds sterling.

Mr. Brooke: Information on the own resources figures in the Community budget is included in the "Statement on the 1988 Community Budget", Cm. 525, tables II and IIa. The Community also has miscellaneous items of revenue and, in 1988, benefited from a surplus carried forward from 1987. These additional items amount to some 811 mecu (£541 million). Table III of the statement provides a slightly more up-to-date estimate of what the United Kingdom is likely to pay this year.

Civil Service (Leavers)

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to provide more scope for people who leave the Civil Service to return to it later in their careers.

Mr. Brooke: New arrangements come into force today by which former civil servants may be reappointed, at the discretion of the Civil Service Commissioners, at a grade higher than that occupied when they left the service, without the formality of an open competition. In the past it has only been open to former civil servants in such circumstances to return at the same or a lower grade than they previously occupied.

My right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Privy Council Office and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs have approved an appropriate amendment to the Civil Service Commission General Regulations 1986 in respect of both the home Civil Service and Diplomatic Service.

Tobacco Tax

Mr. Parry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the percentage of households paying more in tobacco tax than in income tax; and if he will conduct an inquiry into this area.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 1 December 1988]: Sufficiently reliable and up-to-date information is not available to provide an estimate of the numbers requested. While the Government have no plans to conduct an inquiry into this specific issue, tobacco duties are reviewed annually. Their levels are set to strike a careful balance between revenue requirements and health considerations.

Growish Limited

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made on investigations into offences under the Taxes Management Act 1970 and the Taxes Act 1988 in respect of Growish Limited.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 5 December 1988]: I cannot comment on the tax affairs of an individual taxpayer.

Pensioners

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what income tax is received from those over pensionable age by decile or quartile with respect to total numbers of people over pensionable age; and what is the median weekly income tax received from those over pensionable age.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 5 December 1988]: In 1988-89, about 2·6 million single people aged 65 or over and married couples in which at least one partner is 65 or over will be liable to income tax. This represents about one third of all elderly tax units. The median level of income tax taken over all such tax units is therefore nil. The level of income at the upper quartile point is about £100 per week and income tax paid is about £7 per week. The corresponding figures for the highest decile point are £200 and £25. The total income tax liability of elderly tax units is given in the table.

Income tax liability of aged tax units 1988-89

Quartile	Tax units (thousand)	£ billion
Top 10 per cent.	790	3·1
Next 15 per cent.	1,185	0·9
Next 8 per cent.	625	0·2
Remainder	5,300	—
Total	7,900	4·2

Estimates are based on a projection of the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes and are provisional.

Privatisation (Advertising)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total cost of advertising the sale of shares in respect of each company privatised since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 5 December 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) on 3 March 1988 at column 629. This lists the cost to the Government of corporate and flotation advertising and advertising agency fees, exclusive of VAT, for each privatisation and residual share sale since the British Telecom sale of December 1984. Comparable figures for previous sales are not readily available.

Disposable Income

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the average net disposable income after taking account of housing costs for each region of the United Kingdom in 1988.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 9 December 1988]: The latest available regional information on average per capita disposable income after taking into account housing costs is from the family expenditure surveys for 1985 and 1986. Data for 1985 and 1986 combined are:

	£ per person per week
North	50·12
Yorkshire & Humberside	50·14
North West	52·08
East Midlands	53·92
West Midlands	50·17
East Anglia	56·29
Greater London	67·72
Rest of South East	62·08
South West	57·99
Wales	52·41
Scotland	54·60
Northern Ireland	44·88
United Kingdom	55·85

Housing costs consist of mortgage repayments, gross rent including owner occupiers' imputed rent, rates, water charges etc. less housing benefit, rebates and allowances.

Pension Funds

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to permit or require pension funds to build up a margin of reserve against expected future liabilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 9 December 1988]: It is a matter for the trustees of individual pension funds to decide what reserves should be held against expected future liabilities.

Pensions Holidays

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what proposals he has to review the practice of taking pensions holidays; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what proposals he has to extend to 20 years the period over which pension surpluses should be eliminated; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what proposals he has to abolish or restrict contribution holidays for employer sponsored occupational pension schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 9 December 1988]: I have no such proposals.

Contracts (Tendering)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Government have made any study of the impact on British industry of the EEC draft directive requiring all companies in the private and public sectors to put out to tender contracts for supplies above £500,000 and capital schemes above £3,000,000; when he expects this draft directive to come into effect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major [holding answer 9 December 1988]: Recent proposals by the European Commission to extend rules on purchasing to bodies outside central and local government cover undertakings in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors which operate on the basis of special or exclusive rights or an authorisation granted by a competent authority of a member state. The rules are intended to make purchasing more open, but let undertakings negotiate with selected suppliers or contractors instead of putting contracts out to tender. Individual contracts would be affected when their estimated value, net of VAT, exceed £142,000 for supplies (and software service contracts in the case of the proposal on telecommunications) and £3·3 million for building and civil engineering works; supplies requirements which were expected to exceed £500,000 in a product area over 12 months would be the subject of periodic indicative notices.

The proposals are part of the single market programme due to be completed in 1992. The Government are consulting closely with relevant purchasers and suppliers in the United Kingdom on possible changes to the proposals which would reduce any burdens the rules may impose. The rules should enable United Kingdom suppliers and contractors to compete more effectively in markets which in some cases have been difficult to enter.

MIRAS

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total cost to the Treasury in terms of MIRAS of a 1 per cent. increase in mortgage lending rates.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 8 December 1988]: A one percentage point increase in gross mortgage interest rates would increase the cost of mortgage interest tax relief by about £450 million in a full year at 1988-89 levels. If other interest rates were also to change, there would be other effects on Government revenues.

Fixed Capital Formation

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish general government gross domestic fixed capital formation, total gross domestic fixed capital formation, net general government fixed capital formation and net domestic fixed capital formation for each quarter of 1978, 1979, 1987 and 1988 at constant prices, specifying in each case which deflator has been used.

Mr. Major [holding answer 8 December 1988]: The latest constant price estimates together with the implied deflators are given in the tables. The net figures are available only on an annual basis.

Gross domestic fixed, capital formation at constant 1985 prices, seasonally adjusted in £ million, together with the implied deflators[1]

Year per Quarter		Total	Deflator for total (1985 = 100)	General Government	Deflator for General Government (1985 = 100)
1978	Q1	13,957	53·5	1,994	58·3
	Q2	13,738	55·4	1,944	59·2
	Q3	13,629	57·7	1,931	60·8
	Q4	13,590	59·7	1,815	64·2
1979	Q1	14,000	60·3	1,814	65·3

	Q2	17,445	116·3	1,563	103·8

Net domestic fixed capital formation at constant 1985 prices in £ million, together with the implied deflators[1]

Year	Total	Deflator for total (1985 = 100)	General Government	Deflator for General Government (1985 = 100)
1978	20,587	56·4	4,606	56·9
1979	21,250	64·7	4,208	67·1
1987	20,546	107·6	4,057	104·3

[1] A large number of deflators are used in the calculation of capital formation at constant prices. The CSO's "United Kingdom National Accounts, Sources and Methods, 1985", Chapter 12, gives further details.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

UNICEF

71. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next proposes to meet representatives of UNICEF to discuss common priorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I hope to see Mr. Grant, the executive director of UNICEF, in March.

Aid (Women)

72. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to increase the number of staff in his Department responsible for monitoring the effect of aid projects on women.

Mr. Chris Patten: Executive departments in the Overseas Development Administration are responsible for monitoring all aspects of projects, including their impact on women. The staffing of these departments is adequate to fulfil their full range of responsibilities. Professional advice available to the Department on social development issues has been significantly strengthened in the past year.

European Community

73. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met his European Economic Community counterparts; and what was the content of the discussion.

Mr. Chris Patten: I met them at the Development Council on 23 November. We agreed on the fundamental importance of food security and adopted a resolution which provides valuable guidelines on this. We discussed whether the Community's Asia/Latin America programme should be focused on the poorest countries and the progress made to date on renegotiating the Lomé convention. We also reviewed the Community's special programme of assistance for debt-distressed countries in sub-Saharan Africa, under which over £200 million has been allotted over the last year.

Kampuchea

75. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his Department's co-operation with British voluntary agencies in the provision of aid for Kampuchea.

Mr. Chris Patten: I announced on 25 October an additional allocation of £500,000 to support projects, including humanitarian projects in Cambodia, proposed by British voluntary agencies for assistance under the joint funding scheme.

Aid (Environmental Impact)

76. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether British overseas aid projects are scrutinised for environmental impact.

Mr. Chris Patten: Aid managers in the Overseas Development Administration are required to ensure the environmental soundness of projects from the earliest stage to completion and evaluation. A new ODA manual to help project managers decide how much environmental assessment is required in each case is currently being field tested; over 50 international agencies and non-governmental organisations have been asked for their comments.

Ethiopia

77. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Ethiopia.

Mr. Chris Patten: I visited Ethiopia from 6 to 9 November. The main purpose of my visit was to see the refugee camps in the Ogaden and on the Sudanese border. I also had talks with Ethiopian Ministers and officials and with representatives of the international and voluntary agencies. My main impression was of the appalling degree of human suffering which is being caused by the conflicts in Sudan and Somalia. We shall continue to do all we can to urge a peaceful resolution of these conflicts and, meanwhile, to ease the plight of the refugees.

India

78. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total of overseas aid given to India between 1981 and the latest available year.

Mr. Chris Patten: Gross British bilateral aid to India was £825 million for the calendar years 1981-87 inclusive.

81. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent British is assisting the development of primary education in India.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have carried out an innovative pilot project in four districts of the state of Andhra Pradesh providing a total of £1·3 million to construct 200 classrooms to new, improved designs and to train teachers and teacher educators in child-centred learning techniques. A recent appraisal mission has been looking at ways of extending the project to all 23 districts of Andhra Pradesh. We look forward to working with the state Government on this major undertaking.

Sub-Saharan Africa

79. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was (a) Britain's and (b) other members of the OECD development assistance committee's net official development assistance disbursement to sub-Saharan Africa between 1980 and 1987.

Mr. Chris Patten: Britain's net official bilateral development assistance to sub-Saharan Africa between 1980 and 1987 amounted to $2·7 billion. In the same period disbursements by the other 17 DAC members totalled $44·8 billion.

Aid (Distribution)

80. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy with regard to the geographical distribution of British overseas aid.

Mr. Chris Patten: Policy on the geographical allocation of bilateral aid is governed principally by the needs of recipient countries, how effectively the aid can be used, what other donors are doing and the United Kingdom's historical links with many developing countries, particularly in the Commonwealth.

Forestry

82. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British aid for forestry in developing countries.

Mr. Chris Patten: Details of our existing forestry activities are given in a supplement to this month's British Overseas Development, a copy of which I am placing in the Library. In future we will encourage recipient countries to direct more of our aid to forestry and will increase commitments through international research and British charities.

Central African Federation

83. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to enable increased pensions to be paid to former public servants of the Central African Federation.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Governments of Zimbabwe, Zambia, Malawi and the United Kingdom, as joint guarantors of the central African pension fund, have agreed that pension increases averaging 300 per cent. should be paid, with effect from 1 October 1988. The cost of financing these increases is approximately £9 million, which the trustees of the fund would like to see funded in sterling. In response to requests from the three African Governments, I have agreed that the British Government should meet the full cost of the increase.

We are considering what further action is necessary to assist those central African pensioners whose pensions have been particularly eroded by currency depreciation.

European Integration

84. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what assessment has been made by his Department of the effects of European economic integration in 1992 on the Third world; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Commission in its statement of 19 October made clear that the single market should be seen as a contribution to the global liberalisation of trade. The economic growth resulting from completion of the Single Market should benefit Community and non-Community countries alike, including developing countries. We share this view. At their meeting in Rhodes, Heads of Government declared that Europe after 1992 will be a partner and not a "Fortress Europe".

Bangladesh

85. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will make a statement on the current level of British aid to Bangladesh.

Mr. Chris Patten: I expect total expenditure in the current financial year to exceed £50 million. This includes £7·5 million of emergency relief aid provided following the recent disastrous floods.

Bilateral Aid

86. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the use of British bilateral aid to bring political trade or military advantages to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chris Patten: The basic aim of the aid programme is the promotion of sustainable economic and social progress and the alleviation of poverty. That aim is entirely compatible with serving our political and commercial interests. It is not Her Majesty's Government's policy to use the aid programme for military purposes.

China

87. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on official aid to the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Chris Patten: Britain has a growing aid programme to China. In September I visited Peking to sign a new agreement which will provide aid and trade provision support for development projects to a total value of £300 million. Grant aid for technical co-operation in the current financial year is likely to be about £5 million.

Rain Forest

88. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will meet the chairman of the World bank to discuss the possibility of writing off debts of developing countries in return for guarantees about the protection of areas of tropical rain forest.

Mr. Chris Patten: I hope to meet the president of the World Bank in 1989 and to discuss the bank's increasing concern with environmental issues, including the protection of areas of tropical rain forest. I do not have specific plans to discuss the introduction of any direct linkage between the protection of rain forests and the wider question of measures to deal with developing countries' debt difficulties.

UN (Voluntary Funds)

89. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contributions Her Majesty's Government will make in 1989 to the voluntary funds of the United Nations system.

Mr. Chris Patten: So far I have made the following pledges for 1989:

UN Development Programme (UNDP)	26 million
UN Children's FundUNICEF)	8 million
UN Population Fund (UNFPA)	5·5 million
UN Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM)	50,000
UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR)	3·6 million
Industrial Development Fund of the UN Industrial Development Organisation (IDF)	500,000

Contributions to special appeals are decided during the course of the year. They add considerably to our funding of United Nations agencie.

International Debt

90. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding the problem of international debt.

Mr. Chris Patten: I receive a number of letters on this subject from hon. Members and their constituents, as well as from representatives of non-governmental organisations. International debt is a frequent topic of discussion at the international meetings I attend.

Aid (Ecology)

91. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has plans to increase the amounts of aid for projects which restore, protect and improve the ecological basis of development in Third world nations.

Mr. Chris Patten: Allocations to particular projects and sectors within our country programmes are agreed with recipient Governments and this involves weighing up competing priorities. I aim to agree with interested Governments more support to the forestry sector.

Senegal

92. Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what development assistance he is giving in support of Senegal's economic reform programme.

Mr. Chris Patten: During the state visit of President Diouf last month my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister offered a grant of £2 million. The grant is in the form of balance of payments finance in support of Senegal's continuing IMF-backed economic reform programme. It is in addition to our ongoing technical co-operation programme.

New Zealand Dairy Imports

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what would be the impact on the United Kingdom dairy producers quota, in percentage terms, if all New Zealand dairy imports were stopped.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Community rules do not provide for any increase in United Kingdom milk quotas if New Zealand imports of dairy products were eliminated.

Common Agricultural Policy

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the European budget is devoted to the common agricultural policy and what was the figure in 1979.

Mr. MacGregor: In 1988 it is currently estimated that spending under the common agricultural policy will take up 71 per cent. of the Community's budget, of which 3 per cent. is for depreciating old agricultural stocks and therefore relates to liabilities incurred in previous years. The equivalent figure for 1979 is 76 per cent.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will estimate how much land would be no longer needed (a) in the EEC as a whole, (b) in the United Kingdom and (c) in each of the four countries to support milk production in the event of bovine somatotropin being freely available and universally used in the EEC.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No. To produce an estimate of any value would require detailed data, which are not available, and a variety of assumptions about the commercial application of bovine somatotropin were it to be approved.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the progress being made in compiling additional scientific information on each of the seven areas detailed by the chairman of the Farm Animal Welfare Council in his letter to him dated 26 October 1987, Official Report, 17 December 1987, column 740, regarding the use of bovine somatotropin to increase milk production.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information necessary to allow a full exploration of the areas identified by the Farm Animal Welfare Council is being generated in field trials conducted under the terms of animal test certificates issued by my Department.

Chernobyl

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about steps taken by the European Community to guard against the export to developing nations of foodstuffs contaminated as a result of the Chernobyl accident.

Mr. Ryder: I am satisfied of the safety of all United Kingdom foodstuffs exported following the Chernobyl accident. At EC level, I understand that the Commission has taken administrative action to ensure that all food aid consignments to developing countries meet the same standards as those applied to post-Chernobyl imports from third countries.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to protect agriculture and fisheries in the area of Cumbria which were found by the post-Chernobyl aerial survey to have radioactivity readings in excess of 300,000 bq/sq m.

Mr. Ryder: The figures from the aerial survey need to be put in perspective. They relate to total caesium in the rocks and soil as well as in the vegetation. Monitoring on a regular basis of foodstuff in Cumbria area has shown there is no need to take additional measures to protect agriculture and fisheries.

Furnace Ships

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department has undertaken any studies to monitor the environmental impact in the North sea of furnace ships moored there.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Two incineration vessels are currently approved to use the internationally agreed incineration site in the Dutch sector of the North sea. The environmental impact of the emissions from the vessels is kept under review by the Oslo and London dumping conventions. They are advised by a group of experts who include representatives of my Department.

Chickens

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list, for each year since 1983, the apparent number of egg-producing chickens and the number of establishments that they are kept in by (a) battery methods, (b) deep litter and (c) free range.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Details of the size of the laying flock and number of holdings in the United Kingdom, taken from the UK annual agricultural census, are given in the table below. Very small holdings which only make occasional returns are excluded from these figures.

	Number of fowls (millions)	Number of holdings (thousands)
1983	40·760	51·9
1984	40·304	48·1
1985	39·268	46·4
1986	37·827	44·6
1987	38·229	41·9

Separate census data are not collected on the type of farming system used. However, I estimate that the number of birds kept in deep litter and free range systems over the last three years are:—

	Number of fowls on deep litter	Number of fowls on free range
1985	25,000	319,000
1986	11,000	908,000
1987	17,000	1,148,000

Information for earlier years is not available.

Salmonella

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of salmonella have been reported for each year since 1983 in (a) battery chicken farms, (b) deep litter chicken farms and, (c) free range eggs for sale to the consumer and carcases for sale to the consumer.

Mr. Ryder: The reporting of salmonella in food producing animals is required under the zoonoses order 1975. The total number of incidents reported in live chickens in Great Britain since 1983 is as follows:

	Incidents
1983	514
1984	446
1985	456

	Incidents
1986	519
1987	497

It is not possible to distinguish between incidents occurring under different management systems.

There is no statutory requirement to test poultry carcases or eggs specifically for salmonella and therefore no firm information on the number of cases is available.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline the work he is doing to monitor the effects of environmentally sensitive area designation on (a) farm incomes and (b) employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I have commissioned the universities of Manchester and Newcastle to carry out a detailed examination of the economic impact of ESA designations. I shall be publishing a report which will cover progress on this and a number of other fronts early in the new year.

Fruit Orchards

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the hectares of fruit orchards that have been replaced on a county by county basis for each year since 1985 as a result of farmers receiving payment under the capital grant scheme; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the reduction in hectares of fruit orchards on a county by county basis for each year since 1985 as a result of farmers receiving payment under the capital grant scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I regret that this information is not available and could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Fisheries Council

Sir Michael Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Fisheries Council meeting in Brussels on the 9 and 10 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement that I gave earlier today.

Wheat

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average price paid to producers for wheat in each country of the EEC in 1986 and 1987 and that period in 1988 for which figures are available.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 9 December 1988]: Annual average producer prices for wheat in 1986, 1987 and the first quarter of 1988 are as follows:

National currency/tonne	1986	1987	198
Belgium (BFR)	8,301	8,016	7,678
Denmark (DKR)	1,469	1,401	1,365

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the average prices paid to producers for wheat in each year from 1979 to 1987 and also for the period of 1988 for which figures are available; and if he will express these at 1979 prices and 1987 prices.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer Friday 9 December 1988]: The price information requested for each of the years 1979 to 1987 is set out in the table. Final figures for 1987 and forecast figures for 1988 will not be available until published in "Agriculture in the United Kingdom" early next year.

	Weighted average price of United Kingdom wheat of point of first sale £ per tonne	At 1979 prices[2] £ per tonne	At 1987 prices[2] £ per tonne
1979	95·92	95·92	174·00
1980	99·30	82·92	150·44
1981	108·92	81·58	147·91
1982	113·74	79·16	143·54

Pollen Beetle

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research is being sponsored by his Ministry into the damage caused by, and control of, the metogethes, or pollen beetle; whether such research will be affected by the transfer of responsibility for funding from the public to the private sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 9 December 1988]: My Department is supporting work by the Agricultural and Food Research Council (AFRC) on the pollen beetle as part of a research programme on the ecology, behaviour and control of pests of oilseed rape. The Agricultural Development and Advisory Service (ADAS) is also monitoring the pollen beetle under the pest monitoring service and for crop intelligence reports. A very small proportion of the AFRC work and most of the ADAS work is regarded as appropriate for industry funding and we are seeking such support for it.

SCOTLAND

VAT

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessments he has made as to the likely effect on (a) his Department's capital building programme and (b) the rent the Department will pay under occupational leases of implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on value added tax on non-domestic buildings.

Mr. Rifkind: Implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on VAT will have no effect on my Department's capital building programme, since compensating adjustments have been made to the relevant expenditure provisions. At this stage, before landlords have decided whether to exercise their option to tax rents, it is not possible to offer meaningful estimates of the effects of the judgment on rental costs.

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, following the European Court's judgment that value added tax should be applied to new non-domestic buildings with effect from 1 April 1989, he has reviewed the levels of grant available under the local capital grants scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have reviewed the levels of grant available and have decided to increase the maximum grant from £80,000 to £100,000 with effect from 1 April 1989. In addition our 1989-90 allocation for this scheme has been fixed at £1·045 million representing an increase of 17 per cent. over the 1988-89 amount. This increase takes into account both the imposition of value added tax on new buildings and increased costs.

Disabled Persons (Staff)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of his Department's staff are classed as disabled.

Mr. Rifkind: 1·4 per cent.

Special Educational Needs

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number of pupils in special schools who are neither ascertained nor recorded, giving the breakdown by region and by division.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of these pupils in special schools and departments at September 1987 are set out in the table.

	Number

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number of ascertained or recorded students in primary schools and secondary schools with significant special educational needs arising from (a) severe/profound hearing impairment, (b) pronounced visual impairment, (c) severe physical impairment, (d) severe pervasive communication difficulties, (e) social and emotional difficulties and (f) moderate, severe or profound learning difficulties; and if he will give the breakdown by region and by division.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on the range of impairments of pupils in primary and secondary schools was collected for the first time in the 1988 school census and I will write to the hon. Member early next year when it has been collated.

Language Teachers

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans there are to revise the draft review of staffing standards to include primary school language specialists;

(2) what is the number of primary school language specialists which the Government projects is needed for 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no such plans. Pilot studies on the inclusion of a foreign language in the primary curriculum will start in 1989.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many modern language teachers have been employed in Scottish secondary schools in 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There were the equivalent of 1,856 full-time teachers of modern languages employed in Scottish secondary schools in 1987. Figures for 1985 and 1986 are not available, while those for 1988 are still being processed.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many modern language teachers have been employed in Scottish primary schools in 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: With the exception of specialist teachers of Gaelic, it is not usual to employ modern language teachers in that capacity in Scottish primary schools. There are some 15 specialist teachers of Gaelic who visit primary schools.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many modern language specialists are in training in Scottish colleges of education or Stirling University for (a) primary education and (b) secondary education.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are 45 students training at Scottish colleges of education or at Stirling university to teach modern languages at secondary level. This figure does not include students in colleges of education whose main teaching qualification is not in modern language, but who may be taking a subsidiary teaching qualification in one. There is no separate qualification for specialist modern language teachers in primary schools.

Health Service (Expenditure)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the additional planned expenditure on the National Health Service in Scotland for 1989-90 showing the amount of new cash and the amount of savings in each of (a) hospital and community services, (b) primary health care and (c) centralised services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend will announce shortly his plans for expenditure on the National Health Service in Scotland for the years 1989-90 to 1991-92.

Legal Aid

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report for each of the last 25 years (a) the hourly rate of remuneration payable under the section one legal aid scheme for time occupied in performance of all work other than attendance at court, conducting proof or formal debate, (b) the hourly rate of remuneration payable under the criminal legal aid scheme for time occupied in performance of all work other than attendance at trial and (c) the value of 10 units, being the level of hourly charges recommended by the Law Society of Scotland except in so far as prescribed by or under statute; and if he will show (a) as a percentage of (c) and (b) as a percentage of (c).

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The table provides the information for the last 13 years. Before then the Law Society of Scotland did not recommend a unit charge.

[1] Inclusive of an additional 12 per cent. to cover posts and incidents. An increase to the rates in Column C to cover such items may be charged by the solicitor according to the circumstances of the case.

Student Grants

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the percentage of full-time students in Scotland receiving (a) 1 to 9 per cent., (b) 10 to 19 per cent., (c) 20 to 29 per cent., (d) 30 to 39 per cent., (e) 40 to 49 per cent., (f) 50 to 59 per cent., (g) 60 to 69 per cent., (h) 70 to 79 per cent., (i) 80 to 89 per cent., (j) 90 to 99 per cent., (k) and 100 per cent. respectively, of the student grant.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest available complete figures, which relate to session 1987-88, are as follows. The analysis is based on Scottish domiciled full-time students in receipt of maintenance grants under the students' allowances scheme. The figures show the percentage of such students whose actual maintenance grant entitlement falls within each of the defined proportions of their full standard maintenance allowance.

Accident and Emergency Treatment

Mrs. Margaret Ewing To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Royal College of Surgeons about avoidable deaths in rural areas due to delays in transporting accident victims for emergency treatment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the future provision of accident and emergency departments in the Greater Glasgow Health Board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: All accident and emergency services in Glasgow are currently being reviewed. The strategy team has still to report to the board and no recommendations concerning any of the sites have yet been made. Any plan which may be proposed as a result of the review will of course be subject not only to board approval but also to the normal consultative process.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he can give regarding the future of the accident and emergency department of Stobhill hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 12 December to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith).

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he can give regarding the future of the accident and emergency department of the Southern General hospital, Glasgow.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 12 December to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith).

Strip Searches

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will issue a code of practice for police officers carrying out strip searches (a) in what circumstances strip searches should be authorised, (b) what rank of police officers should be empowered to authorise strip searches, (c) by whom strip searches should be carried out and (d) what records should be kept of strip searches.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Procedures for searching persons detained or arrested by the police are set out in force orders and instructions, with which all officers must comply. The evidence available at present to my right hon. and learned Friend does not suggest that there is a need for further guidance to the police service bearing specifically on strip searching.

North Sea Pollution

Mr. James Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to monitor the levels of polychlorinated biphenys along Scotland's North sea coast.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for monitoring coastal waters lies with the river purification authorities (river purification boards and islands councils) who undertake monitoring according to local circumstances.

Disabled People

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest information regarding the number of disabled people in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The most recent information about the number of disabled adults in Scotland is contained in the first report of a survey of disability in Great Britain, issued by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on 28 September 1988. The report's estimate of the number of disabled adults in Scotland is 611,000, of whom 125,000 are in the least severe of 10 severity categories. A report on the number of disabled children (which forms a part of the survey) will be issued next summer.

Salmonella

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest information regarding the number of cases of people affected by salmonella as a result of the consumption of (a) eggs and (b) poultry.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: So far in 1988, 2,847 cases of food poisoning in Scotland have been reported by general practitioners. In cases where it has been possible to identify the cause, 99 arising from five incidents have been attributed to salmonella in egg or egg-based products and 113 arising from 22 incidents to salmonella in poultry.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest information regarding hospital waiting lists in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde, (c) Lothian, (d) Edinburgh, (e) Glasgow, (f) Aberdeen and (g) Dundee.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on waiting lists is collated centrally only for health board areas. The latest available information on hospital in-patient and day case waiting lists is published in the statistical bulletin 1/88, "Waiting List Figures for 31 March 1988", copies of which are held in the Library.

Eye Treatment

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many new cases of (a) glaucoma and (b) blindness were treated in (i) Scotland, (ii) Strathclyde and (iii) Glasgow for each year since 1975.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on new cases of glaucoma and blindness is not available centrally. The number of in-patient discharges from hospital where the main diagnosis was glaucoma is shown below. This represents, however, only part of the glaucoma caseload as some treatment is provided on an out-patient basis.

Regional Development Grant

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many fraud investigations, in connection with payments of regional development grant, are in hand at present.

Mr. Lang: At present 24 cases are under investigation by the police in Scotland. In addition, a number of other cases are being reviewed and some of them may be brought to the attention of the police.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs were supported through the payment of regional development grant in each of the past five years; how many of these jobs were retained for at least 12 months; and how many he estimates to be still in existence.

Mr. Lang: Payments under the original regional development grant scheme (RDG1) were not tied to the creation of jobs. Jobs linked to payment authorisations under the revised regional development grant scheme (RDG2) since its inception in November 1984 are as follows:

	Number of new jobs
1984-85	nil
1985-86	4,490
1986-87	12,360
1987-88	13,720
1988-89 (to end Nov)	9,160

The RDG2 scheme encompasses capital grant, job grant and grant associated with the provision of both assets and jobs. The rules that govern payments under the scheme require that assets or jobs have to be retained for 36 or 18 months respectively. Completed projects are normally visited within this period. Although comprehensive figures for jobs retained for just 12 months are not available, these visits have revealed that around 1,400 of the 35,240 jobs created since April 1986 had been lost by the time of the visit. Beyond this, it is not possible to make reliable estimates for the number of jobs still in existence.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to detect and eliminate fraud to the payment of regional development grants.

Mr. Lang: Examination procedures to detect fraudulent claims have been in place since the inception of the scheme. It would not be in the public interest to give further details.

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to introduce new guidelines for the granting of regional development grants to private companies in Scotland in the next financial year.

Mr. Lang: No. The statutes and procedures under which the regional development grant schemes are operated throughout Great Britain provide an adequate framework. The administration of the schemes is under constant review.

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs have been created as a result of regional development grant in the last year.

Mr. Lang: Payments under the original regional development grant scheme (RDG1) were not tied to the creation of jobs. Payment authorisations for job grant under the revised regional development grants scheme (RDG2) in the latest financial year (1987-88) were linked to the creation of over 13,700 jobs.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, in view of the investigation by the fraud squad in Strathclyde region on alleged abuse of the regional development fund, he will take steps to tighten up the system for awarding such grants.

Mr. Lang: The administration procedures of regional development grant are under constant review. Many of the investigations presently being undertaken by the fraud squad of Strathclyde police are a direct consequence of the vigorous application of the existing scrutiny procedures.

Community Charge

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he or any of his ministerial colleagues have any plans to visit Millport to discuss the community charge.

Mr. Lang: I have no plans to do so. I am aware of the concerns that have been expressed about aspects of the community charge in Millport and I have responded to these concerns.

Forestry

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to privatise the Forestry Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government have not drawn up any plans to privatise the Forestry Commission, nor have the Government made any proposals which might lead in that direction.

Liquor Licences

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he has any proposals to amend the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976 to allow for a right of appeal against the granting of a liquor licence by persons living near to the premises to which the licence relates;

(2) if he has any proposals to amend the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976 to broaden the grounds on which an application for a licence can be objected to and to simplify the procedure for so doing;

(3) if he has any proposals to amend the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976 to allow the licensing boards greater flexibility in regulating licensed premises, including the power on cause shown to suspend a licence or to restrict its scope on an interim basis;

(4) if he has any proposals to amend the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976 so far as the consideration of application for regular extensions of hours of opening by licensed premises is concerned; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what representations he has received regarding amendments to the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to his question on 7 November 1988 about amendments to the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976.

Zircon

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, in the light of the raid on BBC Scotland relating to the Zircon film, the Lord Advocate plans to make any changes in the method of application for search warrants in cases originating outside his jurisdiction.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

Hypothermia

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what urgent steps is he taking in order to minimise the risks of hypothermia in Scotland this winter.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In addition to the information pack the Scottish Health Education Group supplies to health professionals annually, we recently launched the Scotish campaign "Keep Warm This Winter" to remind old people and other vulnerable groups of the simple, practical steps they can take to minimise risks in winter, and to encourage good citizenship among the population generally. The campaign comprises the distribution of 1 million copies of a leaflet, supporting publicity and a free telephone helpline.

Salmon Fishing

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate, by local government area, the anticipated cost of revenue to Scottish local authorities through the abolition of rates on salmon fishing.

Mr. Lang: The best estimates available of the maximum losses of income are:

	Total cost of revenue to authorities £000
Borders	81
Central	7
Dumfries and Galloway	52
Fife	0
Grampian	265
Highland	146
Lothian	0
Strathclyde	16
Tayside	199
Shetland	0
Western Isles	15
Scotland	781

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he intends to take to implement the recommendations of the Salmon Advisory Committee on the need for more accurate reports on salmon catches.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The recommendations made in the salmon advisory committee's report "Information on the status of salmon stocks" are still being considered.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish salmon proprietors have failed to report catch returns in each of the past five years; and if he will name those who have been in default on more than one occasion.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of proprietors (and occupiers) of salmon fisheries who failed to provide catch returns for the years 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987 are as follows. Accurate information for 1983 is not available. It is not my intention to name those individuals who have not provided catch returns.

	1984	1985	1986	1987
Number of catch returns not provided	118	214	113	103

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the salmon proprietors who failed to register catch returns for 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action is to be taken against salmon proprietors who failed to register catch returns for 1987 under the Salmon and Fresh Water Fisheries Act 1951.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend is reviewing the administrative arrangements for obtaining salmon catch statistics with a view to improving the rate of return of forms issued.

School Transport

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, in the light of the increasing number of roadside assaults on, and abductions of young children he intends to seek to change the current provisions for school transport within the Education Acts, and to make available additional resources for local authorities to use their discretion in providing transport in rural areas.

Mr. Rifkind: I have no plans to change the current provisions for school transport. Education authorities have a wide discretion in this area and they are in the best position to assess and determine arrangements in the light of local needs and circumstances.

The special circumstances of school transport in rural areas are fully taken into account in arriving at the provision for relevant expenditure in the calculation of revenue support grant; but it is for authorities individually to set their own budgetary priorities.

HEALTH

Ophthalmology (Waiting Times)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any information concerning the comparative average waiting times and numbers of patients currently on the waiting lists for ophthalmological procedure at present (a) in the Nottingham district health authority and (b) on average in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: There were 625 patients on the inpatient waiting list for ophthalmology in Nottingham at 31 March 1988 compared with an average of 420 patients for the 152 English health authorities which provide inpatient ophthalmology treatment. Nottingham health authority serves a much larger population than most health districts. The median waiting time for ophthalmology patients treated in the quarter ending 31 March 1988 was 10 weeks in Nottingham compared with 11 weeks for England as a whole.

Questions about waiting lists in Wales are for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Locum Doctors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the cost by year, for the last five years, to the Trent regional health authority, by area health authority, for employing locum doctors; what has been the national average over the same period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as can be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost as soon as possible.

Care in the Community

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Government's proposals for care in the community.

Mr. Mellor: We are currently framing our own proposals in the light of Sir Roy Griffiths' recommendations and the many views expressed on his report.

Nursing Homes (London)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to give additional resources to Inner London district health authorities for nursing home provision.

Mr. Mellor: We allocate funds to regional health authorities. It is for them to distribute funds to districts for the provision of health care, including long-term nursing care for elderly people, and in doing so they take account of local circumstances. We shall be announcing 1989-90 allocations to regions in the near future.

Cervical Smear Tests

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to ensure a quicker turnover of the results of cervical cancer smear tests.

Mrs. Currie: As at 1 September 1988, the latest date for which we hold information, almost 75 per cent. of health authorities reported that they were meeting the Department's target of ensuring that laboratories report the results of cervical smear tests within one month to the doctor who submitted the smear. Health authorities' performance is closely monitored and those not meeting this target are asked to detail the action they are taking to remedy the situation. Specific policy options are discussed with health authorities as appropriate and these include:

(a) recruitment of additional laboratory staff;
(b) consideration of staff grading structures in the light of the recently agreed new pay and grade structure for medical laboratory scientific officers and support staff;
(c) overtime working;
(d) use of other NHS laboratories;
(e) use of private laboratories;
(f) reducing the numbers of excess smears, for example those taken more frequently than the locally agreed interval.

Barnet Health Authority

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of patients registered with National Health Service general practitioners in Barnet health authority; and what is the population of Barnet health authority.

Mr. Mellor: There were 372,400 names registered with a general medical practitioner in October 1988 with an address in the Barnet family practitioner committee area. The latest available (mid-1987) population estimate for Barnet district health authority, which is coterminous with Barnet FPC, is 305,900.

Prescription Charges

Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will extend exemption from prescription charges to sufferers from (a) Crohn's disease and (b) other chronic and incurable conditions.

Mr. Mellor: We have no plans to do so.

Hepatitis B

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make additional resources available to district health authorities for vaccination of all Health Service employees at risk of hepatitis B infection.

Mr. Mellor: We have advised health authorities that it is the responsibility of their occupational health services to decide which staff should receive priority for vaccination against hepatitis B, in the light of guidance which we have issued from the joint committee on vaccination and immunisation. We believe that many authorities have already taken the necessary steps to ensure that this advice is followed.

Infant Mortality

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library the document entitled "Geographical Variations in Infant Mortality In Relation To Birthweight" referred to on page 50 of the chief medical officer's annual report for 1987.

Mrs. Currie: A copy of the draft paper "Geographical Variation In Infant Mortality In Relation To Birthweight" (dated April 1988) will be placed in the Library shortly. A revised version of the paper will be incorporated into the forthcoming OPCS "Decennial Supplement On Mortality And Geography" (series DS), to be published in 1989.

Hospital Buildings

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to his Parliamentary Under-Secretary's reply to the hon. Member for Coventry South-East of 6 December, concerning the average age of hospital buildings, he will place the results of the information collected in the Library and publish the results in the Official Report at the appropriate time.

Mrs. Currie: Information about the age of hospital buildings is used by health authorities in the management of their estates. But the condition of buildings is not necessarily related to age and we shall not be collecting the information centrally.

Salmonella

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether his Department issues guidance on the preparation and cooking of snipe and woodcock; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his assessment of the risk to the public of salmonella poisoning from the consumption of wild and reared game; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The ubiquitous nature of salmonella and other food poisoning organisms suggests that the meat of any food animal has the potential to be contaminated. I have no evidence that game is a significant vehicle for food poisoning. However, the Department advises that as a general rule it is safest to cook food thoroughly and game is no exception. If frozen, cooking should be preceded by adequate thawing. Additional advice to consumers on the preparation and cooking of game is deemed unnecessary.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is his assessment of the risk to the public of salmonella poisoning from the consumption of duck and goose eggs; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his assessment of the risk to the public of salmonella poisoning from the consumption of quails' eggs; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Duck eggs have always been recognised as being at risk of salmonella contamination but there is no evidence to suggest that there has been any increase in the level of contamination.

I understand that culinary practice is to hard boil duck and quail eggs. Goose eggs are rarely eaten.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his advice to the public concerning the risk of contracting salmonella poisoning from the consumption of turkey; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: As with any other food, turkeys should be thoroughly cooked. If frozen, cooking should be preceded by adequate thawing. Cross-contamination with other foods should be avoided.

The Department will be issuing the usual advice to consumers about thawing and cooking poultry at Christmas time.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many eggs were infected by salmonella in 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is not possible to give a precise estimate but, as I told the House on 5 December at column 19, the risk of infection to any individual is small and the risk to the healthy adult is very small so long as the egg is cooked.

Nurses and Midwives (Pay)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date the next nurses and midwives pay award will be implemented.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Decisions on implementation of the review body's recommendations will be taken in the normal way after the review body has submitted its report to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Hypothermia

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new measures his Department is seeking to implement in order to minimise the risks of hypothermia this winter.

Mrs. Currie: On 17 November the Government launched this year's "Keep Warm Keep Well" campaign. This is a health promotion campaign designed to give people information and advice about how to combat the risks of cold weather and is supported by the Departments of Health, Social Security, Environment, Welsh Office and Energy and several voluntary organisations.

As well as supporting the "Keep Warm Keep Well" campaign, the Department of Social Security provides cold weather payments, the Department of the Environment runs the home insulation grants scheme, and the Department of Energy supports neighbourhood energy action, which organises community insulation projects.

We printed around 750,000 copies of the campaign booklet and there has already been sufficient demand to order a reprint. The telephone help line on 0800-289404, the Winter Warmth line, is receiving around 200 calls a day.

Immunisation

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if children in the (a) Lewisham and North Southwark district health authority and (b) Camberwell district health authority will be able to have mumps, measles and rubella immunisation at the age of (i) one year, (ii) two years, (iii) three years, (iv) four years or (v) five years.

Mrs. Currie: Following advice from the joint committee on vaccination and immunisation, we recommended to health authorities that MMR vaccine should be offered to infants at age 15 months with an additional "catch-up" programme to take in four to five-year-olds at the time of their diphtheria, tetanus and polio pre-school boosters. Vaccination of children at other ages is a matter for decision by individual clinicians.

AIDS

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many persons in England and Wales have contracted (a) human immunodeficiency virus, (b) acquired immune deficiency syndrome and (c) hepatitis B since monitoring commenced.

Mr. Mellor: The available information is as follows:

(a) The recently published Cox report estimated that there were 20,000-50,000 cases by the end of 1987.
(b) 1,847 cases reported to the end of November 1988.
(c) 8,074 cases reported from 1982 to mid-1988.

Mental Health Services (Spending)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how his Department is monitoring the priority given to spending by health regions on mental health services.

Mr. Mellor: We look to regional health authorities, who are responsible for monitoring their services, to promote development of mental health services within their total financial allocations. The Department regularly assesses progress through the annual planning and review process.

Pharmacies

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the National Health Service review will consider the way in which the location of pharmacies is decided by family practitioner committees.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding reply 9 December 1988]: Separately from the review, we shall be issuing further advice on this matter in the light of experience of the operation of the current system and a recent court judgment.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will investigate the claim by Mrs. Eva Davison, now deceased, for attendance allowance in 1985; and why no final settlement has yet been made.

Mr. Scott: The attendance allowance board has completed its review of the late Mrs. Davison's claim and its decision will be sent to Mr. Davison as soon as possible. I regret the delay in dealing with this case and I am writing to my hon. Friend.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he intends to increase the level of cold weather payments this winter.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he intends to increase the level of cold weather payments this winter.

Mr. Scott: No. We believe the sum of £5 per week is a reasonable amount to pay towards the cost of extra heating needed in particularly cold weather.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much he would expect to spend on advertising cold weather payments if a spell of cold weather covered the whole of Great Britain.

Mr. Scott: Local office managers are required to advertise the availability of cold weather payments in the press immediately a spell of cold weather is declared. Costs will vary depending on the size of the geographic area covered by the particular newspaper and the extent of advertising needed. However, total expenditure for the winter of 1986-87, which included a particularly cold spell of weather, was £414,000.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what additional information local offices of his Department would need in order to identify income support claimants entitled to cold weather payments without requiring them to claim individually.

Mr. Scott: Payment in the manner suggested would require local offices to search through their entire live load of cases to identify case papers for those in the eligible groups. Information would then also be required to establish the amount of capital held by each potential beneficiary.

Leaflets

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations his Department has received about the difficulties experienced by public libraries in receiving an adequate stock of up-to-date leaflets from his Department in order to satisfy inquiries from members of the public about social security benefits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 7 December 1988]: I understand that the Department has received a number of letters about this matter. The Department has not sought libraries' agreement to their acting as a principal source of social security leaflets for the public and therefore no specific arrangements have been made. We do, however, recognise the valuable resource that libraries represent in directing members of the public to the appropriate agencies and providing reference materials and officials are exploring ways of resolving any supply difficulties.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to his reply of 14 November, Official Report, column 450, concerning leaflet FB23, what is the practice of his Department in relation to the inclusion of evaluative statements within explanatory leaflets issued for the guidance of the public.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department does not include evaluative statements in the information it provides on social security benefits in its explanatory leaflets. The additional information in FB23 concerning the Department of Employment's YTS scheme is fact and relevant to the decisions made by very many of the young people who are likely to consult this leaflet.

Taxes and Benefits

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he is able to estimate the latest figures for the numbers of family credit applications awaiting a decision; and if he is able to break down the reasons for the delays in processing them.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 8 December.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much a full uprating in 1989-90 of the illustrative rates of income support personal allowances would cost as published in the technical annex of the White Paper, "Reform of Social Security", in line with the retail prices index, less housing, in 1988-89, excluding compensation for the 20 per cent. contribution to rates.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 28 November 1988, at column 94.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people claimed unemployment benefit only; and what number and proportion of them had been on unemployment benefit alone for six months or more in each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available figures relate to the numbers in receipt of unemployment benefit only in November each year rather than to the number of claims.

Number of persons receiving unemployment benefit only

		Number receiving unemployment benefit only
	Total	For 6 months or more	For 6 months or more as a percentage of total
November 1979	386,619	78,369	20·3
November 1980	778,606	158,679	20·4
February 1982	837,230	238,650	28·5

November 1984	699,489	228,555	32·7
November 1985	679,005	219,994	32·4
November 1986	741,684	252,871	34·1
November 1987	548,765	189,441	34·5

Notes:

1. Figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample of cases taken on the second Thursday in November.
2. No figures are available for November 1981 owing to industrial action; information was, however, collected in February 1982.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) on what date he plans to implement section 7 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement;

(2) on what date he plans to implement section 11 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: As part of the discussions to implement section 7 of the Act, officials met local authority representatives on 17 November 1988. The timetable for implementation will depend on the outcome of further discussions with local authority and health authority representatives. The first report required under section 11 is expected to be laid before the House before the end of 1989.

Benefits

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were claiming supplementary benefit on 1 April; and how many were claiming income support on 1 May (a) for United Kingdom as a whole and (b) for each of his Department's local offices in the counties of : (i) Cleveland, (ii) Cumbria, (iii) Durham, (iv) Northumberland and (v) Tyne and Wear.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is available in respect of 17 November 1987 for supplementary benefit and 31 May 1988 for income support as follows:

	Supplementary benefit live load at 17 November 1987	Income support live load at 31 May 1988

Wallsend	9,202	8,035

(The source is a 100 per cent. count of cases in action. These figures may, however, overstate the number of people receiving supplementary benefit. Claims records were updated during the conversion to income support. The exercise showed that some claims were still recorded as live even though the person was no longer receiving supplementary benefit. This means that some counts of the number of supplementary benefit claims do not reflect the fall in the number of people receiving supplementary benefit.)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants will not receive any overall increase in their benefit income in April 1989 (a) for the United Kingdom as a whole and (b) for each of his Department's local offices in the counties of (i) Cleveland, (ii) Cumbria, (iii) Durham, (iv) Northumberland and (v) Tyne and Wear, both numerically and as a percentage of benefit claimants.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Estimates are readily available only for those receiving income support. The latest figures for Great Britain as a whole indicate that about ½ million or 11 per cent. of claimants will not receive any overall increase in their income support in April. The information is not available on an office by office basis.

Single Parents

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons in Shetland, who are in receipt of income support, receive the single parents supplement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 31 August 1988, the latest date for which information is available, 145 people were receiving the lone parent premium.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of single parents on income support who have ceased working since the change in the disregard rules.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret this information is not available.

Grants and Loans

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many applications for a loan or community care grant have been made for help with payment of a fuel supply since April 1988 to the Erdington and Perry Barr offices of his Department; how many of these have been awarded; and what is the total cost of such grants;

(2) how many applications for a loan or community care grant have been made for reconnection of a fuel supply since April to the Erdington and Perry Barr offices of his Department; how many of these have been awarded; and what is the total cost of such loans and grants.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Other than where the need arises as a consequence of an emergency or disaster, awards from the social fund in respect of the cost of mains fuel consumption and associated standing charges are excluded from payment by direction of the Secretary of State. In the period from April 1988 in the Erdington and Perry Barr local offices the latest available figures show that there has been a total of 72 applications for assistance with fuel meter reconnection, installation or re-siting costs of which 36 have received awards totalling £4,787·43.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many community care grant applications have been made each month since April 1988 to the Erdington and Perry Barr offices of his Department; how many have been awarded; and what is the total cost of such grants;

(2) how many applications each month have been made for a community care grant for families under stress; how much was awarded; and what percentage this represents of the community care grant budget each month since April to the Erdington and Perry Barr offices of his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the numbers, by month, of applications for social fund community care grants, together with the numbers and value of awards made is available in the Library. Details of applications for awards of such grants to families under stress are not recorded as a separate identifiable category and the information which the hon. Member seeks could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many social fund loan applications have been made each month since April to the Erdington and Perry Barr offices of his Department; how many of these have been awarded; and what is the cost of such loans.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on numbers of applications for social fund loans received, processed and awarded, listed by local office, including information on budget allocations and expenditure, is available in the Library.

Relocation of Work

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a further statement on the relocation of some work from London local offices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Our plans for relocating some work from some local social security offices in London are still under detailed consideration. Final decisions have not yet been taken, but we hope to make a full announcement shortly. The offices currently under consideration are Acton, Brixton, Camberwell, Chelsea, Cricklewood, Crystal Palace, Ealing, Euston, Finsbury Park, Greenwich Park, Harlesden, Highgate, Hither Green, Kensington, Lewisham, Neasden, Notting Hill, Oval, Paddington, Peckham and Southall.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants on transitional protection of housing benefit will lose all of it in April as a result of the application of the erosion factor.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Applications for transitional payments will continue to be received until 31 March 1989. Until they have all been received it is not possible to give figures on the numbers who will cease to receive payments when the erosion factor is implemented. However, as these transitional payments are to be reduced by £2 a week in April anyone receiving less than this amount will cease to receive payments in April 1989.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what way the treatment of payments for rental purchase of a house under the income support regulations differs from the treatment of such payments under the supplementary benefit regulations prior to 11 April.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There was no change. Payments under rental purchase schemes have not been met from supplementary benefit or income support since 1983, when help with such payments was transferred to the new housing benefit scheme. Housing benefit continued to be available to rental purchasers after 11 April 1988, and as I announced in my reply to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 14 November 1988 at columns 631-632 we have no plans to change this.

Availability for Employment

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether an income support claimant who is incapable of work but not entitled to sickness benefit, invalidity pension or severe disablement allowance can qualify for exemption from the requirement to be available for employment under paragraph 5 of schedule 1 to the Income Support General Regulations as amended with effect from 10 April 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Yes, so long as the claimant provides medical evidence which satisfies the adjudication officer that he is incapable of work.

Tax Liability

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total net tax liability on earnings of £6,500 for (a) two single people sharing accommodation where income is equally divided, (b) a married couple with a single wage, (c) a married couple with two equal wages, (d) a married couple on a single wage with two children, and (e) a married couple on a single wage with four children.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply. Information is given in the table.

Income tax liability less child benefit on earnings of £6,500 in 1988-89

		Income tax liability less child benefit
		£ per annum	£ per week
(a)	Two single people sharing accommodation, each earning £3,250	322·50	6·20
(b)	Married couple, husband earning £6,500	601·25	11·56
(c)	Married couple, each earning £3,250	—	—
(d)	Married couple, husband earning £6,500, with two children	−152·75	−2·94
(e)	Married couple, husband earning £6,500 with four children	−906·75	−17·44

Child Benefit

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many tax units paying the higher rate of tax receive child benefit; and how much these payments cost.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 17 May 1988 at column 419.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons (Psychiatrists)

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many full and part-time psychiatrists, respectively, are employed to treat persons detained in Her Majesty's prisons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None of the full-time medical staff in the prison service is employed wholly on psychiatric work but over 40 (about 40 per cent.) full-time medical officers have a qualification in psychiatry. Over 130 psychiatrists, most of consultant status, hold appointments to undertake sessional work.

Prison Staff (Psychiatric Training)

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training staff in Her Majesty's prisons receive in dealing with persons with psychiatric problems.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Opportunities are available to full-time medical officers to acquire additional psychiatric qualifications or experience by study and suitable attachments. Arrangements for medical officer training generally are to be reviewed in the light of the imminent report of an advisory working group chaired by the president of the Royal College of Physicians. Many (over 40 per cent.) full-time medical officers hold post-graduate qualifications in psychiatry.

A qualification in psychiatric nursing is held by some hospital officer and nurse grade staff. A substantial element of the induction training received by hospital officers is concerned with aspects of psychiatric care. Development training is also provided for both hospital officer and nurse grade staff in the form of prison service courses dealing with the principles of psychiatric care in a secure environment and opportunities exist for external studies and placements.

Extradition

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests for extradition in the last year have been made to the Irish authorities; how many have been refused; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: In the last year requests by police forces in England and Wales for arrest warrants to be backed in the Republic of Ireland have been made in respect of seven persons. None of these requests have been refused.

Disabled Persons (Staff)

Mr Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of his Department's staff are classed as disabled.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Excepting staff in prison officer grades (whose duties preclude the employment of disabled persons) the number of registered disabled represents 0·7 per cent. of the Department's staff. There is no record of the number of staff with disabilities who elect not to register.

Information (Security)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether specific changes of procedure have been introduced to improve the security of information from unauthorised use or disclosure that arise from the prosecution of Mr. C. Gumbrell for use of information from the police national computer for unauthorised purposes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that he has not considered it necessary at this stage to introduce any futher improvements in procedures to protect information available to the Metropolitan police from the police national computer, as a result of the prosecution of Mr. C. Gumbrell. The force is already able to trace the originating officer for all inquiries to the PNC from terminals in the force and indeed this facility was used in the case of Mr. Gumbrell. The procedures, however, are kept under constant review and in this task the force has the assistance of the Home Officer adviser on the protection of data held on the PNC.

Police Liaison Committees

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many London boroughs have police liaison consultative committees; how many are officially supported by the majority party of the local council; which borough council majority parties refuse to nominate representatives to their local police consultative committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Police/community consultative groups are now established in all London boroughs. The majority parties of five borough councils have refused to nominate representatives to their local group. They are: Brent, Ealing, Hackney, Haringey and Lambeth.

I congratulate the many people of good will who are working so hard to make the consultative process a success, and I deplore the decision by a small minority of councils not to participate. I hope that they will reconsider their position.

Police (Traffic Duties)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total amount of time spent by the Metropolitan Police on traffic matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At 31 December 1987, 881 police officers, 1,527 traffic wardens, 1,100 school crossing patrols and 150 civilian administrative support staff were deployed on specialist traffic duties by the Metropolitan police. The total police strength on that date was 27,438 and that of the civilian staff was 16,360.

Detailed information about man hours and about the time spent on road traffic matters by non-specialist personnel is not available.

Immigration

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons detained under the Immigration Act 1971 have been held at police stations in excess of seven days in (a) Scotland, (b) England and Wales and (c) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Renton: I am not aware of any such current case.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons detained under the Immigration Act 1971 are at present held in police stations in (a) Scotland, (b) England and Wales and (c) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Renton: On 7 December 1988 the number of persons detained in police stations under the Immigration Act 1971 were (a) in Scotland-nil (b) in England and Wales-37 and (c) in Northern Ireland-nil.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether immigration officers have been instructed to use endorsement under section 3(3)(b) of the Immigration Act 1971 in respect of all persons who are eligible for such endorsement.

Mr. Renton: No. Immigration officers are instructed to make use of section 3(3)(b), which enables conditions of leave already granted to be re-imposed, where the passenger's circumstances following examination on arrival warrant its use.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons have been deported under section 3(5)(a) of the Immigration Act 1971 since the coming into force of the Immigration Act 1988; and how any persons were so deported in the same period preceding the coming into force of the 1988 Act;

(2) how many voluntary supervised departures have been effected (a) in the period since the coming into force of the Immigration Act 1988 and (b) in the same period preceding the coming into force of the 1988 Act.

Mr. Renton: Information on the numbers of deportation orders enforced, and of persons removed under supervised departure procedures is published quarterly in table 14 of Home Office statistical bulletin "Control of Immigration: Statistics". Figures up to the second quarter of 1988—the period immediately preceding that in which the Immigration Act 1988 came into force—were published on 16 September 1988 in issue 27/88; figures for the third quarter—during which the Act came into force—will be published in the next bulletin in this series on 15 December. The extension of the supervised departure procedures under the Act came into force on 10 July 1988, and the other provisions of the Act relevant to deportation procedures on 1 August.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons deported from the United Kingdom in 1988 were detained, prior to their deportation, for (a) 110 days or less, (b) more than 110 days but less than six months and (c) more than six months.

Mr. Renton: The readily available information is given below and does not include those detained who were subsequently released before deportation. A total of 262 of the persons deported between 1 January and 30 September 1988 were detained under the Immigration Act 1971 prior to removal for the following periods:

	Number
Less than 3 months	217
3 to 6 months	35
More than 6 months	10

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in 1988 how many persons who were not held in detention were deported (a) 110 days or less, (b) more than 110 days but less than six months and (c) more than six months after the decision to deport was intimated.

Mr. Renton: The readily available information is as follows:

Ninety four persons who were not detained immediately prior to removal were deported under section 3(5)(a) and 3(5)(b) of the Immigration Act 1971 between 1 January and 30 September 1988. The number of cases and the respective periods between the issue of a notice of intention to deport and enforcement of the deportation orders were as follows:

	Number
Less than 3 months	11
3 to 6 months	6
More than 6 months	77

Information about deportation orders enforced under section 3(6) is not available in the same way. These deportations follow the recommendation of a court and the length of time taken to enforce deportation, if the recommendation is accepted, will vary considerably depending on the length of any custodial sentence imposed by the court.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to allowing persons seeking leave to enter the United Kingdom who were aged 18 years or under and who were refused leave to enter and who wish to re-apply for leave relying on a DNA test to prove relationship.

Mr. Renton: A person who makes a fresh application when he is 18 years of age or older will normally be expected to meet the requirements set out in paragraph 51 and 52 of the immigration rules. We have under consideration a number of cases of over-age reapplicants who do not qualify for admission under the rules, but we are not yet in a position to announce any general conclusion.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to introduce the DNA testing scheme for persons seeking leave to enter the United Kingdom; if he has determined what charges would be imposed for such a service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend announced on 26 July that we were considering whether DNA testing should continue to be left to private initiative or organised on a centrally run scheme. He indicated that the cost of any such scheme should not fall on the taxpayer. We shall announce our conclusions on these matters as soon as possible.

Rugby Match (Breathalysing)

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will call for and publish a detailed analysis of the offences committed by, or reasons given for stopping and breathalysing, the 300 motorists who were stopped and breathalysed on leaving the varsity match at Twickenham on 6 December.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the commissioner that 408 motorists were stopped in the vicinity of Twickenham rugby stadium on 6 December under the provisions of section 159 of the Road Traffic Act 1972. One hundred and seventy five drivers were required to provide speciments of breath under the provisions of section 7(1) of the 1972 Act. All the tests were negative.

Random Breath Testing

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make it his policy that random breath testing will not be introduced surreptitiously or in any other way without prior constitutional process following a full debate in the House.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Random breath testing should not be permitted without primary legislation to amend existing police powers contained in the Road Traffic Act 1972. Any such legislation would be subject to the normal process of debate in the House.

NUS Demonstration

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has responded to the National Union of Students' request to set up a public inquiry into the National Union of Students demonstration on student loans held on Thursday 24 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 29 November about the demonstration at columns 174-176. I see no grounds for a public inquiry and the National Union of Students is being advised accordingly.

Police Numbers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the allocation of additional police officers for Leicestershire for 1989-90.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend is not yet in a position to announce his decision on the Leicestershire application, and others, for more police posts. He hopes to do so soon.

Elections (Foreign Nationals)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will outline the nature of the proposals affecting the right of foreign nationals to vote in United Kingdom local elections and to stand for elected office which have been presented to the Council of Ministers by the Commission; when the directive will be considered; and if it will fall to be considered by majority vote in the Council.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commission's proposals are the subject of an explanatory memorandum the Home Office submitted to the Select Committee on European Legislation on 17 October, copies of which are available in the Library. I understand that the proposed directive is not being actively considered by the Council. Since it purports to be based on article 235 of the treaty of Rome, action would require the unaninous support of the Council.

Community Radio

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many areas are going to be designated for community radio franchises;

(2) by what date the first batch of community radio franchises will be allocated;

(3) what criteria will be used to decide which applications for community radio franchises are successful;

(4) if any stages of the scrutiny of applications for community radio franchises will be held in public;

(5) if he intends to have public consultations before allocating community radio franchises;

(6) whether he will publish the applications of those who successfully bid for community radio franchises;

(7) whether it is his intention that applicants for community radio franchises will be interviewed by the Independent Broadcasting Authority;

(8) when it is his intention to place advertisements inviting applications for community radio franchises.

Mr. Renton: The Independent Broadcasting Authority's proposal to issue contracts for 20 new community radio stations was approved on 2 November this year. The geographical distribution of the new stations, the application procedure and the award of contracts are matters for the Independent Broadcasting Authority itself to determine, having regard to the provisions of the Broadcasting Act 1981.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters of intent have been received by the Independent Broadcasting Authority prior to applications for community radio franchises.

Mr. Renton: I am told by the Independent Broadcasting Authority that it has received 530 letters expressing interest in applying for a community radio station contract.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on whether public bodies should be able to contribute funds to community radio stations for the purposes of specific community programmes projects or training schemes.

Mr. Renton: We propose that new legislation should permit public authorities (and voluntary bodies in receipt of public funds) to give reasonable financial support to local (including community) radio stations for the purposes of projects intended to provide a specific benefit to the community, to promote the arts, or to provide training under a scheme approved by the Government.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many community radio stations will be on (a) FM and (b) AM;

(2) whether any community radio franchises will be on the existing BBC FM sub-band.

Mr. Renton: Decisions on the assignment of frequencies will be taken after the IBA have received and considered formal applications for community radio franchises.

Satellite and Cable Television

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will apply the same regulatory standards to satellite and cable programmes, receivable in the United Kingdom, as presently apply to the pre-recorded video cassette industry under the Video Recordings Act 1984.

Mr. Renton: In our White Paper "Broadcasting in the '90s': Competition, Choice and Quality" (November 1988, Cm. 517) we propose that all United Kingdom satellite, cable and microwave services should be subject to the strict consumer protection requirements set out in paragraph 6.10. These are not directly comparable with the requirements for the pre-recorded video cassette industry, because viewers obtain access to broadcast services and pre-recorded video cassettes under different circumstances. Our proposals for deterring unacceptable foreign satellite services receivable in the United Kingdom are set out in paragraphs 7.13 and 7.14 of the White Paper. Copies of the White Paper were placed in the Library.

Interception of Communications

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria he uses in assessing whether a warrant is necessary in the interests of national security for the purposes of section 2(2)(a) of the Interception of Communications Act 1985.

Mr. Hurd: These matters are approached in the way set out when the 1985 Act was before Parliament—12 March 1985, col. 151-258—and in the preceding White Paper of February 1985 (Cm. 9438).

Security Service

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report the criteria he will use in assessing the extent to which, in given circumstances, national security will require the protection of the Security Service.

Mr. Hurd: No.

Unlicensed Vehicles

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to when the Metropolitan police intend to mount their next special campaign in London to enforce the law in respect of unlicensed vehicles.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Police enforcement of the law in respect of unlicensed vehicles within the Metropolis is an operational matter for the commissioner, and we do not consider it necessary to ask for a report on his intentions.

Prisoners (HIV)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many male and female prisoners in England and Wales have been found to have contracted the human immunodeficiency virus since monitoring commenced in March 1985.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Two hundred and eleven cases (181 male, and 30 female) have been reported up to and including 8 December 1988. There is no evidence in any of the cases that the infection was acquired after the prisoner came into custody.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many male and female prisoners in England and Wales have contracted acquired immunodeficiency syndrome since monitoring commenced in March 1985.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Three cases had been reported up to and including 8 December 1988. All were male. The prisoners concerned have since been released. In each case the infection appeared to have been acquired before the prisoner came into custody.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have contracted either human immuno-deficiency virus, acquired immunodeficiency syndrome or hepatitis B since March 1985 in the following prison establishments (a) Birmingham, (b) Lindholme, (c) Pentonville, (d) Wakefield, (e) Wandsworth, (f) Liverpool, (g) Maidstone, (h) Brixton, (i) Cardiff, (j) Manchester, (k) Wormwood Scrubs, (l) Parkhurst, (m) Long Lartin, (n) Reading, (o) Hull, (p) Leeds and (q) Leicester.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available information, shown in the table, relates to cases reported between March 1985 and 30 November 1988 (HIV antibody positive and AIDS cases) and between April 1985 and March 1988 (hepatitis B cases in the acute and carrier states). There is no evidence from the central monitoring of cases in categories (a) and (b) that any of the prisoners concerned acquired the infection in prison. Cases in categories (c) and (d) are not similarly monitored.

Establishment	(a) HIV Antibody Positive[1]	(b) AIDS[1,2]	(c) Hepatitis B (Acute)[3]	(d) Hepatitis B (Carrier)[3]

[1] Cases in columns (a) and (b) have been allocated to the establishment at which the identification was first made.
[2] There is no reported case of AIDS in the prison population of England and Wales at present.
[3] In columns (c) and (d) the figures for Maidstone and Wandsworth are for two years only. Statistics for 1985-86 are not available.

Animals (Experiments)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department and the Animal Procedures Committee have taken toward ending the use of animals in cosmetic and toiletry tests since the implementation of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 8 December 1988]: The Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 introduced a substantially more rigorous system of control over the conduct of scientific procedures on animals.

The purpose of all work now has to be authorised by project licences and all project licence applications for the testing of cosmetic substances are scrutinised by the animal procedures committee and modified as necessary.

In its first annual report laid before Parliament on 5 December, the APC identifies the difficult issues involved but concludes that in the interests of safety there should be no blanket ban on the testing of cosmetics and their ingredients.

Mortgage Fraud

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps the Government are taking to combat the problem of mortgage fraud; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will initiate discussions with the Building Societies Association and the Association of Mortgage Lenders on the problem of mortgage fraud with a view to mitigating the incidence of the problem.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Neither association has approached us or suggested that there is a widespread problem, and I see no need for specific Government action at present. But I shall keep the matter under review.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many cases of mortgage fraud the serious fraud office currently have under active prosecution and as to the estimated money involved.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

The serious fraud office is prosecuting before the courts three separate cases involving allegations of obtaining mortgages by way of fraud. In two of the three cases the losses to lenders are estimated to be in excess of £6 million and £4-£5 million respectively. It is not yet possible to quantify accurately the sums of money involved in the third case.

DEFENCE

Disabled Persons (Staff)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of his Department's staff are classed as disabled.

Mr. Sainsbury: 0·93 per cent.

"Spycatcher"

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it was with his authority and that of his North Atlantic Treaty Organisation ministerial colleagues that it was decided that a promotional campaign should be mounted for Peter Wright's book "Spycatcher" in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation bookshop in Brussels.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

RAF Planes (Noise)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the total number of noise objections received by his Department concerning Royal Air Force planes from (a) individuals and (b) local authorities for each year since 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Inquiries and complaints specifically about noise from Royal Air Force aircraft are not recorded separately from general flying complaints, which often relate to a number of factors, of which noise may be one. Nor are local authority complaints recorded separately; it is not therefore possible to provide the details requested without disproportionate effort.

Seaton Barracks

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to sell off the 40 acres of land at Seaton barracks, Plymouth, surplus to requirements.

Mr. Freeman: Plymouth city council has asked us whether the land at Seaton barracks currently required for training could be released for industrial development. We are still in discussion with it.

Battle Tanks

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the offset arrangements being offered by General Dynamics as part of its bid to secure the contract for the supply of the new battle tank.

Mr. Sainsbury: No, but all relevant factors will be taken into consideration.

Boeing (Offsets)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the annual and total offset arrangements negotiated by Boeing with the United Kingdom, following the 1986 airborne warning and control system deal, are now being taken up by sales of Rolls-Royce engines to the third parties who have bought Boeing air frames; what proportion of each Rolls-Royce engine counts in this method of accounting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The AWACS offset agreement allows for 35 per cent. of the value of any sales of Rolls-Royce engines to Boeing for civil aircraft to be counted towards the fulfilment of Boeing's offset obligation, subject to annual and aggregate ceilings. The maximum allowable over the offset period is $800 million. The value of any sales of Rolls-Royce engines to Boeing for military aircraft is allowed in full. Sales of Rolls-Royce engines to third parties would not be eligible for credit under the offset agreement.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how much of the estimated £150 million per year of contracts which Boeing estimated would be initially placed in the United Kingdom following the awarding of the airborne warning and control system deal in 1986, can now be identified; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how much, to the latest available date, Boeing has spent in the United Kingdom in connection with its offset agreement made at the time of the 1986 airborne warning and control system deal;

(3) if he will place in the Library copies of the six-monthly submissions from Boeing listing the work they have placed and with which firms, in relation to the agreed offset deal negotiated following the 1986 airborne warning and control system deal; and if he will publish a regular review of these arrangements.

Mr. Sainsbury: Boeing has to date submitted three progress reports claiming offset for contracts valued at $628·3 million. Of the contract values claimed in the first two reports $147·7 million has been approved and $77·5 million rejected as not complying with the agreement. The balance largely relating to contract values in the third report which has only recently been received is under evaluation. It is not our practice to release details of contracts which are commercially confidential.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the 40,000 new jobs due to be created as a consequence of the Boeing airborne warning and control system deal in 1986 can be identified; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: There is no job content in the AWACS offset agreement. Boeing's offset obligation to the MOD is financial and is measured in terms of the value and quality of contracts placed in the United Kingdom defence industry. We expect that the net effect on job numbers over the life of the offset programme will be very favourable.

Thunderbolt Aircraft (Crash)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will call for an immediate report on the conditions of the crash on 8 December of the United States Air Force A-10 Thunderbolt aircraft from the United Kingdom Bentwater base; whether the aircraft was involved with other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation planes including any from the Royal Air Force; whether the aircraft was involved in low-flying exercises at the time of the crash; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The United States Air Force A-10 aircraft which crashed so tragically at Remscheid on 8 December had been on detachment from RAF Bentwaters to Noervenich in the Federal Republic of Germany. There was no Royal Air Force involvement.

The accident is being investigated thoroughly by the United States Air Force and any conclusions relevant to flight safety will be made available to the appropriate NATO authorities in line with agreed procedures. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has sent a message of condolence to Dr. Scholz and the German people.

Offset Agreements

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the signature of new agreements containing counter-trade and offset processes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: It remains the Department's policy to seek offset proposals from offshore companies when placing major orders overseas.

EMPLOYMENT

Opencast Workings

93. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will commission an investigation of the link between dust from opencast workings and ill health and the report to Parliament.

Mr. Nicholls: Any proper investigation of links between opencast mining and ill health in people living nearby would require a long-term epidemiological study. There is no firm evidence that such a study would be worthwhile. However, the Health and Safety Executive will continue to monitor the position and will take account of any new evidence that may emerge.

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many redundant iron and steel and mine workers who participated in ET will be likely to lose some of their redundancy-related payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: No redundant iron or steel worker who qualifies for the iron and steel employees rehabilitation benefit scheme or mineworker who qualifies for assistance under the redundant mineworkers pension scheme, will lose any redundancy-related payment if they participate in employment training.

Negotiations are continuing with British Steel plc to ensure that steel workers eligible to receive payments under their analogous employment and income security agreement will be similarly treated.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the overall budget for child care provision in ET, broken down by region; how many single parent trainees he estimates will benefit from these payments; and whether he has any plans to extend them to cover married parents.

Mr. Nicholls: There is no specific budget nationally or regionally for the payment of child care costs in employment training. Child care costs of up to £50 per week per child may be met for every lone parent who enters employment training and who needs their help. No target figure has been set for the total number of lone parents entering employment training. There are no plans to extend child care payments to trainees who are not lone parents.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the monthly statistics since September for employment training showing (a) entrants in each monthly period, and the number of cumulative entrants since the scheme started, (b) a breakdown of entrants which shows how many were male and female, the length of time they had been out of work, their ethnic backgrounds and whether or not they had any disabilities, (c) the number of trainees in each monthly period who entered work placements and the cumulative total of how many are in work places at the latest available date, (d) trainees who left the scheme in each monthly period, and the number of cumulative leavers since the scheme started, (e) for all those trainees who have left the scheme, how many found work, failed to attend, went on to another course of training or education, completed the course, left for sickness or went back into unemployment and (f) the total number of currently filled places for each standard Great Britain region.

Mr. Nicholls: The numbers of new entrants to employment training for each month up to November 1988 are shown in table 1. Comprehensive information on the sex, duration of unemployment, ethnicity and disabled status of those taking up employment training places is not yet available in the form requested. However there are some early indications of the proportion of entrants in each of these groups and this information is provided in table 2. Information is not collected on the numbers entering work placements and information on the numbers leaving employment training and their destinations on leaving is not yet available.

The numbers on employment training for each standard region at 2 December 1988 shown in table 3.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to promote employment training in the arts.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no specific plans to do so. Arts organisations are welcome to take part in employment training and indeed arts training is already a feature of the programme.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to promote employment training in broadcasting.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no specific plans to do so. Broadcasting organisations are welcome to take part in employment training and indeed some broadcasting skills are already a feature of the programme.

Vacancies

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of vacancies notified to the employment service in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lee: The table shows the number of new vacancies notified to jobcentres, in the United Kingdom for each year from 1980 to 1987. The requested information is not available on the same basis for 1979.

Recent research has confirmed that, nationally, about a third of all vacancies are notified to jobcentres.

Inflow of notified vacancies—United Kingdom

	Number
1980	2,119,640
1981	1,799,280
1982	1,991,490
1983	2,180,160
1984	2,326,830
1985	2,419,180
1986	2,546,380
1987	2,716,640

School leavers

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many school leavers there were in Derbyshire in the summer of 1988: and how many people have not yet been employed or placed on a YTS scheme.

Mr. Cope: Information on the number of school leavers in the summer of 1988 for each local education authority is not yet available nor is information available on how many have not yet been employed or placed on a YTS scheme. However, at 31 October (the latest available date) there were 2,620 unfilled YTS places in Derbyshire. I am satisfied that the Training Agency has made sufficient places available to satisfy potential demand.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in 1979 in manufacturing industry in the northern region; and what is the comparable figure for the latest date available.

Mr. Lee: In September 1979 there were 411,000 employees in employment in manufacturing industry in the northern region. In September 1988, the latest date for which comparable figures are available, the number was 262,000.

Tourism

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps his Department is taking to encourage more private investment in the tourism industry.

Mr. Lee: Capital investment in the tourism and leisure sector is currently running at record levels. I have taken every opportunity to draw attention to the industry's growth potential in the many contacts I have had with different sectors of the industry and with representatives of financial institutions.

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many major private sector companies are participating in the English Tourist Board's England for Excellence award scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: In 1988, the first year of the England for Excellence scheme 16 private sector companies provided sponsorship for individual awards. Representatives of a further 12 companies sat on the judging panels. The total cost of running the award scheme was covered by support from these private sector sponsors.

YTS

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current average length of stay on YTS.

Mr. Cope: It is currently estimated that the average length of stay for entrants in 1988-89 will be 71 weeks for two-year entitlement trainees and 41 weeks for one-year entitlement trainees.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people of YTS eligible age, registered with jobcentres or the careers service were awaiting an offer of a YTS place; and how many of the unfilled places on the scheme available at those dates were on YTS schemes run by (a) employers and (b) agencies, at the end of October 1986, 1987, 1988 and at the most recently available date.

Mr. Cope: Information on the number of people of YTS eligible age awaiting an offer of a YTS place is not available nationally.

The number of unfilled places on schemes run by employers and agencies at 31 October 1986, 31 October 1987 and 31 October 1988, the latest available date, is given in the table.

	Unfilled places
	On schemes run by employers	On schemes run by agencies
31 October 1986	56,465	72,996
31 October 1987	69,518	108,167
31 October 1988	59,403	59,055

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many YTS trainees were in receipt of a board and lodging allowance to undertake training away from their home at the end of October 1986, 1987 and 1988, respectively.

Mr. Cope: I regret that the information requested is not available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

YTS (Deaths)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give details, in the form given by the central health and safety unit annual accidents report, of the circumstances of the four fatalities which occurred during the period July to September.

Mr. Cope: On 5 August a trainee was working at a garage removing dust from the rear of a petrol tanker with an airline whilst the proprietor was welding a crack in the main tank. An explosion occurred causing extensive damage to the building and fatal injuries to the trainee.

On 16 August a trainee electrician was working up a ladder on the side of a building clipping electric cables to trunking. It is understood that the trainee fell from the ladder and received fatal injuries.

On 18 August a trainee was working on an agricultural engineering scheme where he was assisting the foreman who was replacing the rear boom of a mechanical digger/loader. The arm of the digger was supported on a tyre and a trolley jack. The driver of the digger/loader was asked to lower the jack and during this process the rear boom arm and the bucket collapsed and fell on the trainee causing fatal injuries.

On 14 September a trainee offered to drive a workmate (an electrician) to a job as the workmate's car had broken down. The trainee used his own car but on the way collided with a lorry after pulling out of a minor road. The workmate survived but the trainee received fatal injuries.

The inquests or fatal accident inquiries on all four fatalities are still outstanding.

Creches

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce a legal requirement for the provision of creche facilities by employers.

Mr. Nicholls: No. The Government welcome action by employers to help employees combine work and family responsibilities through measures such as the provision of creche facilities, and flexible working practices, but considers that it is for individual employers to decide which arrangements best suit their and their employees' needs and resources.

Careers Service

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans his Department has for the Inner London education authority careers service after the transfer of educational functions to inner London boroughs in April.

Mr. Cope: Local education authorities have the statutory duty to provide a careers service. After 1 April 1990 this responsibility will pass from ILEA to the inner London boroughs. Discussions are currently taking place with those boroughs and LEAs in the London area about the assumption of these duties and about whether there is a need for some central provision in support of local careers services.

Health and Safety

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in the Official Report the total number of deaths at work, the total number of accidents at work and the total number of cases of workplace-related ill-health for each of the years 1974 to 1987 inclusive.

Mr. Nicholls: The available statistics, based on reported injuries covering all industries in Great Britain, are set out in the table below. It is believed that all cases of reportable fatal injuries are reported. Statistics for non-fatal major injuries, and over 3 day injuries for 1986-87, are believed to be significantly reduced by under-reporting.

Sex Discrimination Act 1975

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what individuals or organisations submitted responses to the consultation document on section 51 of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 announced on 10 December 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: A total of 83 individuals and organisations submitted responses, including the Health and Safety Commission and the Equal Opportunities Commission, which have statutory functions relevant to the matters covered by the consultation document. The responses are being treated in confidence except where the individual or organisation concerned has chosen to publish.

Disabled People

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons are registered disabled within the meaning of section 6 of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944.

Mr. Lee: The number of people registered as disabled under section 6 of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 on 18 April 1988, the latest date for which figures are available, was 374,238.

ENERGY

Coal Industry (Manning Levels)

13. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the projected manning levels in the British coal industry for each of the next two years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government do not make such projections. The level of employment in the coal industry depends on a number of factors, including the industry's continued ability to raise its competitiveness.

Offshore Safety

22. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent consideration he has given to the implementation of the recommendations of the Burgoyne report into offshore safety.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Many of the recommendations of the Burgoyne committee were either implemented before its report was published or shortly thereafter. The current offshore safety regime closely reflects that recommended by the Burgoyne committee.

Electricity (Nuclear Generation)

23. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what effect the generation of electricity by nuclear power is likely to have on the price paid by consumers over the next five years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Nuclear generation will help to protect electricity consumers from fossil fuel price increases. The cost of nuclear power is already contained in electricity prices.

Severn Barrage

24. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest assessment of the earliest date at which the proposed Severn barrage could be providing electricity.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Severn estuary is one of the best potential sites in the world due to its exceptionally high tidal range. A barrage there would, if required, supply up to 6 per cent. of electricity demand in England and Wales in the year 2003 at the earliest.

Severn Tidal Bore Generation Project

25. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce a final decision for the River Severn tidal bore water energy generation projects.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The current phase of studies by the Severn Tidal Power Group is nearing completion and a report is expected early next year. The report will not include financing and related issues, which will be addressed in the time scale of electricity privatisation. Thereafter it will be a matter for commercial judgment under the terms of the Electricity Bill before the House as to whether the project goes forward.

Wave Energy

26. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the level of investment in research into wave energy.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The level of spend on research and development on the technology this year is expected to be about £150,000.

Electricity Privatisation

27. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent representations he has received about his proposals for privatising the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I continue to receive representations on electricity privatisation. It is clear from my discussions with many interest groups that there is a large body of support for our proposals.

30. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he has for the staffing of the regulator's office consequent on the privatisation of the electricity industry.

Mr. Parkinson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) on Friday 9 November.

39. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of how the privatisation of the electricity industry will benefit rural areas.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We believe that our proposals will create a more efficient, economic and competitive industry for the benefit of all consumers.

57. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are his latest proposals for the price controls which will operate in the event of privatisation of the electricity industry.

Mr. Parkinson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given earlier today to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe).

Electricity Generation

28. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much electricity is produced from (a) coal, (b) nuclear energy, (c) oil and (d) other sources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: As state in tabled 9 of the Central Electricity Generating Board's annual report and accounts for 1987-88 (a copy of which is in the Library of the House) electricity supplied by the CEGB's power stations in 1987-88 was as follows:

	TWh	Per cent.
Coal	186·4	81·7
Nuclear	32·8	14·4
Oil	9·3	4·1
Other	−0·4	−0·2

49. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment his Department has made of the relative cost of generating electricity by coal, oil and nuclear energy after taking account of the waste disposal and decommissioning investment allowed for.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Director General of Gas Supply

29. Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next intends to meet the Director General of Gas Supply; and what matters will be discussed.

38. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next intends to meet the Director General of Gas Supply to discuss the implementation of the recent Monopolies and Mergers Commission report.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I regularly meet the Director General of Gas Supply and we discuss a range of matters of mutual concern.

Marginal Oil Fields (North Sea)

31. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received on the effect of the Petroleum Royalties (Relief) and Continental Shelf Bill on the development of marginal oil fields in the North sea.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I hold frequent discussions about offshore developments with the oil industry. I am happy to say that I have had no adverse representations on the effects of the royalties Bill on marginal developments. Indeed, as I told the House on 30 November, Hamilton Brothers announced earlier this year that as a direct result of the Government's intention to abolish royalties in the southern basin it would develop the Ravernspurn north field.

Retired and Redundant Miners

32. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss the position of retired and redundant miners.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I meet the chairman of British coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

CEGB

33. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and what subjects were discussed.

34. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and what matters were discussed.

35. Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and what he proposes to discuss.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he will be meeting the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and what subjects he will be raising.

Mr. Parkinson: I regularly meet the Chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to discuss a range of issues.

Energy Needs

36. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the percentage of United Kingdom energy needs in the year 2000 which will be met by coal, oil, gas, nuclear and renewables; and how these proportions vary from the present.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department has not published such estimates for several years. Experience of the energy market has shown that changes in the future composition of energy demand cannot be forecast with any certainty.

37. Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of the United Kingdom's total national energy needs was met by the private sector for the last year for which figures are available; if he will give the comparable figures for 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cecil Parkinson: In 1987 the proportion of energy used which was produced in the private sector was 74 per cent.; this compares with 41 per cent. in 1979.

Private Mines

40. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to ease the restrictions on private mines within this Session of Parliament.

Mr. Parkinson: As I said to the House on 7 November 1988 at column 2, changes to the statutory limits on licensed mining have been overtaken by our decision to privatise the coal industry in the next Parliament. In the meantime private mines should benefit from the opportunities from a more open market for coal in this country following the privatisation of the generating companies. I am exploring with British Coal the scope for greater flexibility towards licensed mining within the present statutory framework.

Nuclear Waste

41. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the total volume of waste produced by the generation of electricity by the nuclear industry in 1987; and what are the comparable figures for the coal industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I have asked the chairman to write to my hon. Friend.

British Coal

42. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Coal; and what matters were discussed.

44. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next intends to meet the chairman of British Coal; and what matters will be discussed.

48. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Coal; and what issues were discussed.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next intends to meet the chairman of British Coal; and what matters he proposes to discuss.

Mr. Parkinson: I have regular meetings with the chairman of British Coal to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Atomic Energy Authority

43. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the Atomic Energy Authority; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman of the AEA on 21 September 1988. A variety of matters were discussed.

52. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next intends to meet the chairman of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority to discuss research allocations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman from time to time to discuss these matters.

Coal Industry Dispute

45. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what further representations he has received asking him to seek discussions with British Coal regarding the reinstatement of miners sacked during the 1984-85 coal strike; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have nothing to add to the answer given by my right hon. Friend on 28 March 1988 at column 293.

Double Glazing

46. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what new initiatives are planned to encourage or require house builders to install double glazing in all new houses.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Minimum standards of insulation for new housing are specified in building regulations. Draft regulations further increasing standards of thermal efficiency are at present under consideration by the Department of the Environment. In addition, the Energy Efficiency Office promotes a number of measures for improving the energy efficiency of housing, including double glazing where economic.

Scottish Coal

47. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the impact of his privatisation proposal on the levels of imports into England of Scottish coal.

Mr. Michael Spicer: None. After privatisation the sourcing of the coal British Coal supplies to its customers is a matter for commercial negotiations between the parties involved.

North Sea Oil Rigs

50. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the de-commissioning costs of oil rigs in the North sea.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The estimates of abandonment costs remain very uncertain due to continuing uncertainties as to timing, technology and extent of removal. But for all existing installations and for those currently in the process of, or close to construction my Department currently estimates an aggregate abandonment cost of some £4 billion at 1988 prices.

Coal Burn

51. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to increase the Government's funding of research and development on clean coal burn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The increase of over £1 million to £2·6 million next year in my Department's coal-based energy research and development budget will be used to support additional research on the clean use of coal.

Coal Mining Subsidence

53. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has plans in the current parliamentary Session to introduce measures to improve compensation arrangements for those who suffer from the effects of coal mining subsidence.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Decisions on coal mining subsidence legislation will be taken after careful consideration of all comments received on the Government's consultation Paper issued earlier this year. The legislation will be introduced when the legislative timetable permits.

Oil Fabrication Yards

54. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has recently held with individuals or groups who are concerned with achieving secure employment and orders for oil fabrication yards.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have had a number of discussions recently about the oil fabrication industry. Only last week I chaired the offshore industry liaison committee, which includes representatives from the oil and supplies industries and trade unions when the situation in the fabrication industry and its prospects were reviewed. The upturn in UKCS oil and gas activity this year has provided improved opportunities for competitive yards.

Southern Electricity Board

55. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the Southern Electricity Board; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Parkinson: I met the chairman of the Southern Electricity Board and the other area board chairmen on Monday 28 November. We discussed a range of issues concerning the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Energy Saving

56. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department plans any further advertising campaigns to promote energy saving.

Mr. Peter Morrison: We continue to publicise and promote energy efficiency through a variety of means, including targeted advertising, for example "The Heat is On" campaign aimed at major energy using sectors of industry (chemical, ceramics and metal). A series of press advertisements was featured strongly in this campaign.

North-East Coalfields

58. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the effects of electricity privatisation on the north-east coalfields.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for British Coal.

British Gas

59. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next intends to meet the chairman of British Gas plc to discuss the report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to my answer given earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Mr. Rost).

Wind Energy

1. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the level of investment in research into wind energy.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government have invested over £25 million in wind energy research and are currently investing over £4 million annually. In addition United Kingdom industry, including the electricity supply industry is currently investing over £5 million annually.

Coal Industry (Subsidy)

10. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the total subsidy paid to the coal industry over the last five years.

Mr. Parkinson: The Government have provided more than £7½ billion in financial support to British Coal in the last five years.

Energy Efficiency Office

14. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the working of the Energy Efficiency Office.

Mr. Peter Morrison: As I have already announced, the Energy Efficiency Office is entering a new phase in which it will offer more specific and targeted services with an emphasis on the regional offices.

Rhoosecote Power Station

21. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on progress on the sale of Rhoosecote power station in Cumbria.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have asked the chairman of CEGB to write to my hon. Friend as a matter of urgency.

Hinkley Point C

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy on the allocation of civil servants from his Department to assist the Hinkley Point C inquiry inspector, in the drafting of chapters of his final report.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend has provided the inquiry inspector with the resources and staff that he (the inspector) felt necessary to conduct the inquiry. It is a matter for the inspector to determine in which way to use these resources and to which tasks to allocate his staff.

Departmental Offices

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many staff were accommodated in his Department's headquarters in 1986; how many he expects will be accommodated in the new offices in 1989; and in each case what is the area of office space per head.

Mr. Parkinson: In September 1986 the Department's headquarters occupied 242,419 sq ft, accommodating 814 staff in post. The new headquarters will have 184,000 sq ft and we expect to have 840 staff in post. Space per head is therefore 298 sq ft and 219 sq ft respectively.

Coal Mining

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the numbers of those employed in the coal mining industry in each of the coalfield areas; and if he will also list the numbers employed by British Coal, giving the percentage in each case.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Information on the numbers of British Coal employees is a matter for the British Coal Corporation.

Power Companies

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what will be the salaries of the chairmen and chief executives of the National Power Company, the Power Generation Company and the National Grid Company.

Mr. Parkinson: I shall be determining the salary levels to be paid at flotation in due course. After flotation salaries are a matter for the boards and their shareholders.

Alternative Sources of Energy

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Glasgow Provan, Official Report, 28 November, column 125, if he will urgently make it his policy to allocate the same amount of funds for research on alternative sources of energy, as is allocated for research on nuclear energy.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. There is an inherent difference in scale, and hence in costs, between the R & D needed to achieve results in the different sectors. Nuclear R & D is at the development stage, which is also inherently more expensive than the research stage, at which much of the non-nuclear work is being done at present. The Government look at each research area and programme on its own merits, in the light of advice from ACORD, and allocate resources accordingly, rather than try to seek a spurious balance between them.

Power Station (Malta)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will monitor the building of a new power station in Malta as a means of drawing lessons for the siting and nature of energy systems in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

Generating Costs

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what have been the generation costs of power from coal-fired, oil-fired and nuclear plants, respectively, for the last two years in England and Wales; and what have been the total generation costs for electricity from all types of stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Drax Power Station

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects the Central Electricity Generating Board to place the order for the fluegas desulphurisation plant for the Drax power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the board, but I expect the order to be placed shortly.

Coinpower (Sale)

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has been notified by British Coal whether the sale of Coinpower has been completed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for British Coal.

TRANSPORT

Bus Undertakings

Mr. Graham Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many bus undertakings have been subject to management buy-outs or worker share-holdings schemes since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: Thirty-nine National Bus Company subsidiaries have been acquired either wholly or partially by their managements or by their managements and staff jointly. One local authority owned bus company has also recently been taken over by its management and staff with an employee share ownership plan, and in another case the staff acquired a minority shareholding. We have no information available on such takeovers in the private sector.

SCOTLAND

Rating Reform

Mr. Allan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland why the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre facilities in Wales were used to have poll tax forms for Scotland prepared for dispatch; and what was the role of Bowie Systems.

Mr. Lang: The arrangements made by community charges registration officers are a matter for them.

Employment Training

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) young males and (b) young females are unemployed in (i) Scotland, (ii) Strathclyde region, (iii) Glasgow district and (iv) Shettleston constituency; and how many unfilled YTS places are available to (1) young males and (2) young females in each of these areas.

Mr. Lang: The number of male and female unemployed claimants under the age of 18 on 13 October 1988 (the latest date for which information is available) in each of the areas requested is shown in the table.

Unemployed claimants under 18

Area	Males	Females	Total
Scotland	617	444	1,061
Strathclyde region	325	227	552
Glasgow district	130	109	239
Shettleston parliamentary constituency	15	10	25

On 5 December 1988 (the latest date for which an overall Scottish total is available) there were 13,000 unfilled YTS places.

Separate details of unfilled YTS places for individual constituencies are not available and the latest date for which a detailed breakdown of the number of unfilled places is available is 4 November 1988. On that date, the numbers of unfilled YTS places were as follows:

	Number
Scotland	12,227
Strathclyde region	5,072
Glasgow (training agency area office)	2,000

Places on YTS are open to both male and female, as the training agency is fully committed to equal opportunities.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many trainees are on employment training in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: There were 19,818 trainees participating in employment training in Scotland at 7 December 1988.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many approved YTS places are available in Scotland; and how many of those aged 16 and 17 years were on YTS on the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Lang: At 31 October 1988, the latest date for which complete information is available, there were 63,463 YTS places in Scotland, of which 13,425 were unfilled. On the same date 50,038 young people were on YTS. A small number of 18-year-olds are included in this figure as it is not possible to exclude these without disproportionate cost to the Department.

Orthotists

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many orthotists there are in Scotland; and how many orthotists there are in Scotland per 100,000 people.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There were 25 orthotists employed by the NHS in Scotland at 30 September 1987, representing 0·5 per 100,000 population. Orthotists are also employed by private firms in Scotland, but their number is not collected centrally.

Prosthetists

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prosthetists there are in Scotland; and how many amputees there are in Scotland per prosthetist.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There were 23 prosthetists employed by the NHS and private firms in Scotland at 30 November 1988 (excluding trainees and orbital prosthetists), equivalent to 296 amputees per prosthetist.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the schools which receive pupils paid for in whole or in part under the assisted places scheme, and the number of assisted place pupils each school had in 1987-88.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

School	Number of assisted pupils
Albyn School for Girls, Aberdeen	15
Belmont House School, Newton Mearns	17
Craigholme School for Girls, Glasgow	[1]30

[1] Provisional figures which may be subject to adjustment following receipt of final audited claims still to be submitted by the schools concerned.

Degree Courses

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students are taking four-year degree courses at Scottish universities at present.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In 1987-88 there were 30,600 undergraduate students on four-year full-time and sandwich courses at Scottish universities. This figure includes overseas and other students not in receipt of assistance under British student support arrangements. For those on sandwich courses the four-year period is inclusive of time spent working in industry as part of the course.

School Leavers

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated number of young people leaving school at Christmas.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The projected number of school leavers at Christmas 1988 is not available. The number of school leavers in the winter of session 1987-88 was 15,600.

YTS (Lothian)

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many young people, because of unsuitability or other reasons, have not so far been placed on YTS in Leith and other constituencies within Lothian region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Lang: Such information is not collected by the Government.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Official Secrets

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those international organisations from which the United Kingdom Government obtain information in confidence, as referred to in clause 3 of the Official Secrets Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: It would not be practicable to compile a list as requested. Circumstances might arise in which Her Majesty's Government receive information of the kind specified in the Bill from a number of international organisations.

GCHQ Cheltenham

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what restrictions exist on former Government Communications Headquarters officers wishing to emigrate to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Waldegrave: Former GCHQ employees are not permitted to visit the Soviet Union for three years after the end of their service. Thereafter, they are free to visit or reside in the USSR.

Nuclear Reprocessing Plant

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any officials from his Department were present at the Lascar review committee meeting on nuclear safeguards applications at large scale reprocessing plants, held in Tokyo on 17-21 October.

Mr. Eggar: No.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what resource commitment has been made by his Department towards the Lascar group on technical information exchanges on safeguards applications at large scale reprocessing plants.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Mr. P. J. Haseldine

Mr. Campbell Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he intends to take in the case of Mr. P. J. Haseldine of the information department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office following publication of a letter from him in The Guardian of 7 December.

Mr. Eggar: The matter is being considered in accordance with procedures laid down in diplomatic service regulations. The action to be taken will depend on the outcome of this consideration.

NATO-Warsaw Pact Communications

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the present direct channels of communications between member countries of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and the Warsaw pact; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The member countries of the two organisations maintain embassies in each other's capitals. In addition, their representatives meet in various forums discussing security issues, such as the conference on disarmament in Geneva and the conventional stability talks mandate negotiations in Vienna.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Student Loans

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are his estimates of the effect of the introduction of a scheme for student loans upon the numbers of adult students entering full-time education who are (a) women, (b) ethnic minorities and (c) of working class background.

Mr. Jackson: Top-up loans mean extra resources for students. That will make higher education more attractive to students of all ages and from all backgrounds.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, pursuant to his reply on 2 December to the hon. Member for Blackburn, Official Report columns 406-7, he will provide a full list of those organisations with whom he is discussing his proposals for student loans; and whether all members of the banking and financial services sector are to be consulted.

Mr. Baker: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Member on 2 December.

Economic and Social Sciences

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his policy towards the European Commission stimulation plan for economic and social sciences (com (88) 98 final/spes) 1989 to 1992; and how it will assist the development of new co-operation in Europe on economic and social scientific initiatives in universities and research institutes.

Mr. Jackson: The Government welcomes this proposal to promote European co-operation in economic science. It complements existing Government policies directed at enhancing appropriate international collaboration in research and development. It will assist co-operation by supporting training, communication, and mobility among European economists.

School Performances (Fees)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the effect of the new statutory requirements on charging of fees on visiting drama groups, poetry readings or other artistic professionals coming into schools to perform for children; and what representations he has received from head teachers in that regard.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has no reason to believe that the level of visits by groups of performers to schools need change markedly as a result of the provisions of the Education Reform Act. The Act clarifies earlier legislation in establishing that schools may not charge for any provision offered during school hours, with the exception of individual music tuition. Charges may be made for activities provided outside school hours, unless these are required for a prescribed examination syllabus or for the national curriculum.

Restrictions on charging do not prevent local authorities or schools from seeking voluntary contributions in support of particular activities, and we are confident that parents will continue to support activities which they regard and have regarded in the past as educationally worth while. There has been a small number of representations from head teachers which mention this issue. A draft circular of advice to local authorities and schools was issued for consultation in September. The Department is now analysing the responses to consultation and plans to issue final guidance early in January 1989.

Disabled Students Allowance

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the payment of the disabled students allowance by local education authorities to registered disabled students in receipt of a mandatory award who incur additional expenditure arising from their attendance on the course and because of their disability, is discretionary or mandatory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The allowance is payable as part of a mandatory award but decisions on whether and at what level it should be paid in individual cases are for local education authorities. Payments of up to £730 may be made where the authority is satisfied that a disabled student is obliged, by reason of his disability, to incur additional expenditure in respect of his attendance on his course.

Teacher Recruitment

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy on providing resources to local education authorities to support the recruitment, retention and motivation of school teachers, especially in inner London, after April 1990.

Mrs. Rumbold: The school teachers' pay and conditions document 1988 gives LEAs flexibility to take account of the problems of recruiting and retaining teachers in urban areas. The teaching as a career unit, financed by the Department, is already in discussion with LEAs about best practice on recruitment policy. These discussions encompass the inner London boroughs, which will need to liaise with ILEA over the arrangements for teacher recruitment up to April 1990.

Foreign Language Teachers

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has made any projections about the potential supply of foreign language teachers once the proposed directive on national reorganisation of higher education diplomas comes into force in 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The supply projections included in my Department's memorandum to the Education, Science and Arts Committee on teacher supply assume a very limited increase in the number of teachers recruited from overseas. That assumption is highly tentative. We shall be considering further the scope for increased recruitment from this source.

Inner London Staff Commission

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to announce the full membership of the Inner London staff commission which he is required to establish under section 170 of the Education Reform Act 1988.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend appointed Mr. J. J. Warren, former chief executive of the London borough of Newham, to be chairman of the commission in October. I am pleased to say that Mr. Arthur Capelin, previously secretary of the Greater London staff association, and Mr. Trevan Hingston, former head of personnel relations for the Royal Dutch Shell Group, have agreed to serve as the other two members of the Commission. The secretary to the Commissioners is Mr. M. J. Rabarts. The chairman has already held preliminary meetings with a number of those concerned with the staffing implications of the abolition of ILEA, and the full commission is expected to hold its first meeting before Christmas.

WALES

National Museum of Wales

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether a work of art, accepted by the Government in lieu of capital transfer tax, it to be allocated to the National Museum of Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has accepted the recommendation of the Museums and Galleries Commission and agreed that two paintings by William Hogarth entitled "The House of Cards" and "A Children's Party", should be allocated to the National Museum of Wales. Seventeen institutions applied to house these important paintings, and both I and my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts welcome their allocation to a gallery outside London. The level of interest shown by so many institutions shows that the acceptance in lieu scheme is well thought of in the museum world and ensures the preservation of important works of art throughout this country.

PRIME MINISTER

European Commission (Vice-President)

Q92. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what qualities she looks for in making an appointment to the vice-presidency of the European Economic Community Commission.

Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 1 December 1988, at column 345.

Enterprise and Employment

Q153. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals Her Majesty's Government have to foster enterprise and create employment in the north of England.

The Prime Minister: The Government will continue to operate policies which will reinforce the successes already achieved in the northern region, not least the fall in unemployment of nearly 22 per cent. in the period since December 1986.

Mr. P. J. Haseldine

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister when she expects to receive the report from Sir Robin Butler on the case of Mr. P. J. Hasleldine and his letter to The Guardian; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I do not expect to receive such a report. This case is being considered in accordance with procedures laid down in diplomatic service regulations. These regulations are made under the powers vested in the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary by the Diplomatic Service Order in Council 1964 which established the diplomatic service as a separate service under the Crown.

Civil Servants (Meetings)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what instructions have been given to members of the Civil Service about attending meetings, in their personal capacity as trade unionists, with hon. Members of Parliament from Opposition parties.

The Prime Minister: None.

Griffiths Report

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Prime Minister if she will publish in the Official Report her reply to the hon. Member for Monklands, West, dated 8 December, on the Griffiths report and the letter dated 23 November to which it refers.

The Prime Minister: No. It is not my usual practice to publish exchanges of this kind.

Engagements

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 13 December.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 13 December.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 13 December.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 13 December.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 13 December.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 13 December.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 13 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I went to St. George's hospital in Tooting to visit some of those who had been injured in yesterday's terrible train crash, and to thank the hospital staff.

In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having meetings with ministerial colleagues and others later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty The Queen.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Warren Springs Laboratory

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many items of correspondence he has received from hon. Members about the work of the Warren Springs laboratory since 1 July.

Mr. Forth: No such correspondence has been received.

Wool and Knitted Garments (Turkey)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he intends to pursue in the European Community Turkey's breach of Ankara agreement in levying duties of up to 78 per cent. on wool cloth and 122 per cent. on knitted garments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert Atkins: The Government are very concerned about the high level of taxation on Community goods of all kinds entering Turkey.

Following representations from the United Kingdom and other member states, the Commission has established a working group of experts with Turkey to seek to resolve outstanding trade issues between the Community and Turkey. My Department supplied a statement of the United Kingdom's concerns to the Commission in advance of the first meeting of the working group and we shall continue to give full support to the Commission's efforts to improve conditions for competition within the framework of the EC-Turkey association agreement.

Private Investment

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the level of private investment in industry in the United Kingdom for the last year figures are available; and what is the European Community average since 1981.

Mr. Robert Atkins: Figures of private investment in industry in the United Kingdom for 1987 are given in the table "Gross domestic fixed capital formation 1987: Analysis by industry and sector" on page 133 of the 1988 edition of "United Kingdom National Accounts", a copy of which is held in the Library. Comparable figures for the European Community are not available. Some relevant information is contained in the publication "National Accounts ESA-Detailed tables by sector 1970-1984".

Further Education Programme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the sums paid and institutions and courses assisted in each standard region under his support for further education programme.

Mr. Forth: My Department has for several years supported further education under a number of schemes. Details have not been maintained in the manner which would enable provision of the information requested, and to supply it would therefore involve disproportionate cost.

Hearing Aids (High Pressure Sales)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has concerning the practice of some dispensers in the private sector in exploiting the unsolicited home visit to conduct high pressure sales on vulnerable consumers; what measures are being taken to control misleading hearing aid advertising which encourages unrealistically high expectations by the users; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I understand that since January 1987 the Hearing Aid Council has received some 70 complaints following unsolicited home visits by hearing aid dispensers, although not usually about the fact that the visit was unsolicited. My Department has received two such complaints during the same period.

The Hearing Aid Council, with which all private dispensers must be registered, has a binding code of practice, which inter alia lays down the circumstances in which a home visit may be made. The Consumer Protection (Cancellation of Contracts Concluded away from Business Premises) Regulations 1987 provide additional protection.

The advertising of hearing aids is governed by specific provisions in the Advertising Standards Authority's code of practice. The Director General of Fair Trading also has powers to take action under the Misleading Advertising Regulations 1988 against persistent abusers of the authority's code.

Steel

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much of the non-allotted funds for steel areas under EEC and ESCS schemes remains unspent; what plans there are for finalising further projects under these schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert Atkins: The "non-quota" measure of steel closure areas is for grants from the EEC European regional development fund. In England, approximately £2·5 million of the £22·5 million allocation is uncommitted. It is expected that offers of assistance will take up the bulk of this by the closing date of 31 March 1989.

North Peckham Task Force

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will specify (a) the businesses started or supported by the north Peckham task force and (b) the number of new jobs created in each.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 12 December 1988]: Task forces do not directly support businesses. However, the information which follows relates to businesses which have been grant aided, or provided with a loan facility, through the task force development fund. The development fund was set up jointly by the north Peckham task force and Lloyds bank.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any information as to who is the major supplier of waste paper to the United Kingdom newsprint industry at present, and as to the total tonnage output of that company.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 12 December 1988]: Information on suppliers of waste paper to newsprint producers in the United Kingdom is limited, but I have no reason to believe that there is any one major supplier.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any information suggesting the rate of growth in future demand for waste paper by the United Kingdom paper and board and printing industries.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 12 December 1988]: No. My right hon. Friend does not have any such information.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he intends to take to help establish efficient systems for the collection and recycling of waste paper in order to meet the future demands of the United Kingdom paper and board industry.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 12 December 1988]: My Department is in regular contact with the key players in the waste paper collecting and waste paper using industries. It is my aim to help promote the more efficient operation of the markets and utilise economically the maximum amount of waste paper.

I am always prepared to consider carefully ways of encouraging such efficiency improvements in the light of changing demands, in which connection I recently convened a meeting with the key players in the market to consider as a matter of urgency ways in which the system for collecting and recycling the appropriate grades of waste paper might be improved in the light of forecast demand. I hope to make an announcement in the new year about further steps to be taken.

I am also ready to consider any proposals which may come forward for further commitment conferences aimed at increasing the use of waste paper.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what information he has concerning the percentage volume of United Kingdom newsprint which has contained de-inked paper pulp in each of the last five years for which figures are available;

(2) what information he has concerning the total tonnage consumption of waste paper by the United Kingdom newsprint industry in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 12 December 1988]: I do not have information on the extent to which de-inked paper pulp has been used in the manufacture of imported newsprint. But the position as regards United Kingdom-produced newsprint is given in the following table. For these purposes, consumption of waste paper is equated with consumption of de-inked paper pulp.

Year	United Kingdom newsprint production Tonnes	Consumption of waste paper used in United Kingdom newsprint production Tonnes	Percentage volume of United Kingdom newsprint production containing de-inked paper pulp Per cent.
1983	80,000	80,000	100
1984	236,000	190,000	81
1985	352,000	221,000	63
1986	476,000	222,000	48
1987	497,000	285,000	57

Mergers and Takeovers

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether, pursuant to his reply in the Official Report of 28 November, column 102, to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan he will (a) list the academic evidence monitored by his Department, (b) indicate the dates of the reports he received from his Department with information about the effects of mergers and takeovers on British industrial companies; and (c) list the higher education departments and centres and academics consulted by his Department on these matters.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 12 December 1988]: The range of available academic evidence monitored by my Department is indicated in annex E of the Blue Paper on mergers policy which was published on 3 March this year. In addition, the economists of my Department provide me with a wide range of economic advice on United Kingdom industrial performance.

Works of Art (Exports)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many export licences for works of art have been granted for each year since 1983; to which countries the items have been exported; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 12 December 1988]: The number of export licences granted for works of art of United Kingdom origin, or in transit through the United Kingdom, for the period since 1983, is as follows. Statistics are not available by country of destination.

Export licences for works of art, 1983-88

Year	United Kingdom origin	In transit	Total export licences
1983	3,100	2,200	5,300
1984	3,800	2,800	6,600
1985	2,960	2,370	5,330
1986	3,010	2,870	5,880
1987	3,060	3,150	6,210
[1]1988	3,010	3,500	6,510

Dixons Group

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what grants or financial assistance from his Department have been paid since 1979 to Dixons Group plc.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 12 December 1988]: There is no record of any grant or other financial assistance by my Department to Dixons Group plc, but I understand that, under the revised regional development grant scheme, £141,000 was made available to Dixons Colour Laboratories Ltd in 1988 by the Industry Department for Scotland.

Post Office Counters Ltd

Mr. James Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has considered the recommendations of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in respect of Post Office Counters Ltd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 12 December 1988]: My right hon. Friend is considering the Post Office's response to the recommendation of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on Post Office Counters services, and expects to make a statement shortly.

ODA

Cape Verde Islands

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid is given to the Cape Verde Islands.

Mr. Chris Patten: Bilateral aid to Cape Verde in 1987 amounted to £38,000. This was spent on training awards in Britain mainly for English language training, a books presentation programme and support for an English language seminar in Mindelo.

Multilateral aid agencies to which we contribute also help Cape Verde. We estimate that aid attributable to the United Kingdom through these agencies was about £2 million in 1986, of which about £1·4 million went through the European Community.

War Service (Pensions)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if pensioners who served in the colonial service are now able to count in full their war service towards their pension years.

Mr. Chris Patten: The rules governing eligibility for war service credit for colonial pensioners are still being worked out, but they will relate as closely as possible to those which apply to other public servants. One of the basic provisions of all other public service schemes is that war service immediately prior to appointment attracts benefits at half-rate.

DEFENCE

ALARM Development

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the then Ministry of Defence research establishment at Westcott was unable to fulfil its subcontract obligations to British Aerospace in respect of the ALARM missile rocket motor development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the evidence provided by British Aerospace to the Defence Committee, published as part of the Committee's fifth report for the 1987-88 Session. The subcontract on Royal Ordnance Westcott (formerly the propellants, explosives, and rocket motor establishment) was terminated by BAe, the ALARM prime contractor, because the motor could not predictably be developed in an acceptable time-scale or at an acceptable cost to meet the BAe requirement.

Contracts

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ensure that all new contracts include penalty clauses to enable his Department to seek redress for a contractor's failure to perform; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: All relevant factors are considered case by case in seeking to secure the best value for money in negotiating contract terms. The Ministry's policy is to negotiate taut terms and conditions which define the requirement in terms of specification and delivery, and which enable redress to be sought where appropriate.

Computer Systems

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central on 29 November, Official Report, column 568, he will indicate whether any interference by computer hacking has taken place on defence computer systems concerning low-classified information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is no evidence that computer hackers have gained access to any classified information held on Ministry of Defence computers. Precautions are also taken to deny unauthorised access to information held on unclassified systems, and there is no evidence of problems arising from any attempts to interfere with these systems.

Low Flying

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much compensation has been paid by his Department to farmers for damage to livestock from the effects of low-flying aircraft each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, compensation for all animal losses as a result of military low flying activities totalled about £95,000 in 1987, and payments to date this year have amounted to approximately £220,000.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the cost to his Department of low-flying training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Low flying is an integral and essential part of military flying training. In common with other aspects of training, costs are not identified separately and their production would require disproportionate effort.

NATO Modernisation

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the modernisations carried out by the Warsaw pact countries to which proposed North Atlantic Treaty Organisation modernisations are a response.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: For NATO, periodic modernisation of nuclear weapon systems is an essential part of the process of maintaining effective deterrence with the minimum level of forces. There is no direct relationship between modernisation programmes currently under consideration within the Alliance and specific modernisation programmes currently under way inside the Warsaw pact.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the percentage of the increase in tax relief in 1988 for people of working age which will go to two-earner married couples; and what is the corresponding figure in the case of his proposals for separate taxation of men and women on the present tax basis.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is estimated that the 1988 Budget increased income tax allowances for taxpayers of working age by £5½ billion, of which 49 per cent. was for married couples where the wife was earning. The corresponding figures if the system of independent taxation of husband and wife were in place would be £5 ½ billion and 47 per cent. The estimates are based on the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes projected to 1988-89, and are provisional. They take no account of possible behavioural changes on the introduction of independent taxation.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he has come to a decision on the option in paragraph 4.16 of Cmnd. 9756 of restricting the additional personal income tax allowance to those in receipt of one-parent and other appropriate benefits;and if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing what the effect of such a change would be in terms of the number of allowances claimed and the savings to the revenue;

(2) if he has come to a decision on the option in paragraph 4.15 of Cmnd. 9756 of converting the additional personal income tax allowance into increased social security provision; and if he will provide an estimate of (a) the amount of revenue which could be transferred to the social security budget in this way and (b) what increase in benefits would be required to ensure that nobody is worse-off as a result of the change;

(3) what is his estimate of the amount of the mortgage taken out by the median mortgagee claiming mortgage interest relief, the increase since May in the rate of interest, the amount of interest payable in a full year, and the total amount of relief at the standard rate payable in a full year at the standard rate of income tax;

(4) what was the economic case for reducing income tax on investment income in the case of those with an income in excess of the ceiling below which there is an entitlement to income support; and if he will publish in the Official Report an estimate of the saving to the revenue from increasing the tax on investment income by eight percentage points;

(5) what is the percentage of the increase in tax relief in 1988 for people of working age which will go to two-earner married couples; and what is the corresponding figure in the case of his proposals for separate taxation of men and women on the present tax basis.

Mr. Norman Lamont: These questions are duplicates of questions tabled for answer on Monday 28 November. I have nothing to add to the answers I gave in reply to those questions.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost of lowering the standard rate of tax to 20p.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 5 December, at column 53.

Bank Loans

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how much payment was received by United Kingdom registered banks arising from loans of under one-year maturity to public and private borrowers in (a) Latin America and the Caribbean, (b) Africa and (c) south-east Asia for each year from 1982 to 1987;

(2) how much payment was due to United Kingdom registered banks arising from loans of under one year maturity to public and private borrowers in (a) Latin America and the Caribbean, (b) Africa and (c) south-east Asia for each year from 1982 to 1987 and allowing for the effects of any rescheduling agreements;

(3) how much was lent by United Kingdom registered banks in loans of under one-year maturity to private and public borrowers in (a) Latin America and the Caribbean, (b) Africa and (c) south-east Asia for each year from 1982 to 1987, respectively;

(4) how much payment was received by United Kingdom registered banks in amortisation, interest, margins and fees arising from loans of over one-year maturity to public and private borrowers in (a) Latin America and the Caribbean and (b) Africa for each year from 1982 to 1987, respectively;

(5) how much was lent by United Kingdom registered banks in loans of over one-year maturity to private and public borrowers in (a) Latin America and the Caribbean, (b) Africa and (c) south-east Asia for each year from 1982 to 1987, respectively;

(6) how much payment was due in amortisation, interest, margins and fees to United Kingdom registered banks arising from loans of over one-year maturity to public and private borrowers in (a) Latin America and the Caribbean, (b) Africa and (c) south-east Asia for each year 1982 to 1987, and allowing for the effects of any re-scheduling agreements.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. I would, however, refer the hon. Gentleman to the analysis which can be found in table 15 of the November 1988 edition of the Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin.

Independent Taxation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to paragraph 3.18 of Cmnd. 9756 how his proposals for separate taxation for husbands and wives will affect families where the wife wishes to remain at home to care for young children; and if he will publish in the Official Report figures for his revised proposals corresponding to those in chart 3.1 of Cmnd. 9756.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Under independent taxation, husband and wife will each be entitled to a personal allowance which can be set against any kind of income. The husband will also get the married couple's allowance. The personal allowance and married couple's allowance added together are equal to the present married man's allowance.

On the change to independent taxation, the total amount of income tax allowances used by married couples of working age will rise by about £2¼ billion at 1988-89 levels of income and allowances. This figure takes no account of possible behavioural changes. The total amount of allowances used by single people will, of course, remain unchanged.

Estimates of the percentage of income tax allowances used by taxpayers of working age, by family type, are as follows:

	Present system per cent.	Independent taxation per cent.
Single	30	29
Married, wife not earning	22	23
Married, wife earning	48	48

Funeral Services (VAT)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revenue would be forgone if value added tax on services relating to funerals was withdrawn.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that information is not available on which to base an estimate.

Imports

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the marginal propensity to import by individuals according to convenient bands of personal income.

Mr. Major: The information is not available in the form requested.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for Scotland the number of private concessions resulting from competitive tendering in the National Health Service in which value added tax was waived, giving the total amount.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that this information is not available.

HMSO

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many items of correspondence he has received from hon. Members about the work of Her Majesty's Stationery Office since 1 July.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend and I have received four items of correspondence from hon. Members about the work of Her Majesty's Stationery Office since 1 July.

Government Data Network

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about progress concerning the implementation of the Government's data network.

Mr. Brooke: Installation and implementation of the network is proceeding to plan and it is expected to complete acceptance testing of the initial phase network by the end of January.

Crown Estate Office

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for the setting and publishing of performance targets for the Crown Estate Office.

Mr. Lawson: The Crown Estate, in consultation and agreement with the Treasury, has undertaken to prepare the following annual cycle of targets and assessments:

(a) An autumn statement of five-year targets of total returns from income and capital growth, prepared independently by a leading firm of chartered surveyors—Hillier Parker May and Rowden. It will be prepared from economic models developed to forecast rental and yield movements as a device to calculate capital value changes.

(b) A late spring broad programme, prepared by the Crown Estate, of the budget of revenue and expenditure for the following year, with estimates of income and expenditure for the two succeeding years. This programme will, as at present, be discussed and agreed with the Treasury.

(c) A late-summer monitoring by the Crown Estate and Hillier Parker of the outturn for the previous year in relation to the broad programme and the longer-term targets. It would also take into account the financial results achieved by other major property concerns.

(d) The independently prepared target of total returns, and the budget of net revenue, for the following year will be published in the annual reports of the Crown Estate. The other assessments of future developments, being commercially sensitive, will not be published, but will be reviewed and discussed with the Treasury in this annual cycle of monitoring performance.

ENERGY

Nuclear Reprocessing Plant

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if details were exchanged at the Lascar meeting in Tokyo on 17 to 21 October, in regard to the facility attachments and particular safeguards provisions arranged for the MBA III reprocessing section of the Windscale reprocessing works at British Nuclear Fuels Ltd., Sellafield, under article 35 of Euratom regulation No. 3227/76 of 19 October 1976.

Mr. Michael Spicer: These matters were not discussed at the Lascar meeting. The Lascar programme is concerned with the application of safeguards to future large scale reprocessing plants.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what commitment has been made by his Department to the Lascar review group on the implementation of safeguards to large-scale reprocessing plants.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The safeguards office of the Department will be represented at all meetings of the Lascar group.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the recent revisions of the costs of decommissioning British Nuclear Fuel's magnox reprocessing plant, indicating how and what compulsion the operators have to provide for these costs in their accounting policies.

Mr. Michael Spicer: British Nuclear Fuels plc's annual report for 1987-88, published on 8 November, reported on a review which had been undertaken of the company's policy towards and provisions made for decommissioning of BNFL plant, including the Magnox reprocessing plant. The decommissioning policies adopted by BNFL and the provisions made to meet liabilities formed part of the company's annual accounts which were audited in accordance with approved auditing standards and accepted by the company's auditors.

Offshore Supplies

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what statistics his Department collects about United Kingdom owned capability in major areas of offshore supplies.

Mr. Peter Morrison: None.

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what factors prevent him from quantifying in the Brown Book United Kingdom-owned capability in major areas of offshore supplies.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The factors are:

(1) that our analysis of orders for the UKCS recognises all companies established in the United Kingdom and making a substantial contribution to the United Kingdom as British without any distinction on the grounds of ownership. This definition is in accordance with Government policy on inward investment and we are firmly opposed to changing it;

(2) the data supplied by the oil industry since 1974 is on the above basis and a considerably increased workload would be involved in checking the ownership of companies, monitoring changes, and calculating orders on ownership basis. That extra work for the oil industry and for the Department is not justified.

Radioactive Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the discussions on nuclear waste to which he referred in his answer of 27 July, Official Report, column 287, will be completed; and if he will make a statement on progress to date.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The IAEA convened an advisory group meeting on safeguards related to final disposal of nuclear material in waste and spent fuel in September 1988. Further discussions are planned in 1989.

Greenhouse Effect

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if any departmental representation was made, and papers presented at (a) the 33-nation international conference on greenhouse effect and global warming, held in Geneva in November and (b) the world congress on climate and development and the greenhouse problem held in Hamburg from 7 to 10 November.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No representatives from my Department attended either meeting. Representatives from the Department of the Environment and the Meteorological Office actively participated in the Geneva meeting of the intergovernmental panel on climate change. Dr. Houghton, director general of the Meteorological Office, is to chair one of the three working groups that were set up at the meeting. A representative from the Department of the Environment attended the Hamburg conference.

Nuclear Reactors

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish a table for each of the United Kingdom reactor types (a) magnox, (b) advance gas-cooled reactor, (c) SGHWR, (d) EBR, (e) Harwell research reactors and (f) future pressurised water reactors, the annual quantities of nuclear waste arising in cubic metres from (i) reactor operation, (ii) reactor decommissioning and (iii) reprocessing activities in terms of spent fuel, high-level wastes, intermediate-level wastes and low-level wastes.

Mr. Michael Spicer: These are matters for the operators of the reactor types in question. I have asked the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board and the chairman of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportions of the cost of decommissioning

British Nuclear Fuels' magnox fuel reprocessing plant at Sellafield will be borne in part by each of the civil magnox nuclear power station operators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The costs of decommissioning the Magnox reprocessing plant at Sellafield will be shared between British Nuclear Fuels plc and other customers on the basis of the relevant share of usage of the facilities concerned.

Electricity Supply (London)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next intends to meet the chairman of the London electricity board to discuss the supply of electricity to the metropolis.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I meet with the chairmen of the area electricity boards regularly and discuss a wide range of issues.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Infant Life Preservation Act.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to seek to amend the Infant Life Preservation Act.

Mr. John Patten: We have no present plans to do so.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the longest sentence served by a doctor for performing an abortion contrary to sections 57 and 58 of the Offences Against the Person Act 1861 and Infant Life Preservation Act 1929.

Mr. John Patten: It is not possible from the records held centrally to distinguish the occupation of offenders given custodial sentences. However, the records held centrally show only one offender, aged 21, who was convicted during the last 10 years under the Infant Life Preservation Act 1929.

Shops Act

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received the proposals of the Shopping Hours Reform Council for amendments to the Shops Act.

Mr. Renton: Yes. We are studying these closely.

Discharged Prisoners (Assistance)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to improve assistance to discharged prisoners.

Mr. John Patten: We provide assistance to discharged prisoners in many ways through the prison service, probation services and voluntary organisations. Efforts are constantly being made to improve this service.

Charter 88

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to implement the proposals of Charter 88 for constitutional reforms.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to do.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to implement the recommendations of Charter 88 with regard to reform of the judicial system.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to implement the recommendations of Charter 88 for reform of the electoral system.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Correspondence

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Westminster, North will receive a definitive response in respect of the case of Mrs. R. Raedler of Lausanne for the registration of her two sons, Marc and David, as British citizens, about which he first wrote to the Department in January.

Mr. Renton: Applications for the registration of Mrs. Raedler's sons as British citizens were made at the British consulate general in Geneva on 9 February and received in the Home Office on 29 February.

Following the large number of applications for citizenship which were received last year, the average waiting time for processing registration applications is 13 months. We shall deal with these applications as soon as possible and inform Mrs. Raedler of the decision.

My hon. Friend will also be advised of the decision.

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Westminster, North will receive a definite response in respect of case M 524399/2(s), Mr. and Mrs. M. S. Badrawi, about which the hon. Member first wrote to him in October 1986.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Waddington) replied to my hon. Friend's letters of 30 October 1986 and 19 November 1986 on 13 January 1987, setting out the position in Mr. Badrawi's case. A further letter dated 13 July 1987 from my hon. Friend to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, was copied to the Home Office and a reply sent by my private office on 18 September.

Mr. Badrawi's application was granted on 3 November 1988.

Electronic Tagging

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the proposed pilot projects to use electronic monitoring for people on bail will begin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Next summer.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the role of the police national computer in contingency plans for the internment of possible subversives in the event of war.

Mr. Hurd: There are no plans relevant to this question.

Metropolitan Police (Road Traffic)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, for the latest year available, on the number of man-hours spent by the Metropolitan police on road traffic matters and the cost thereof, and the percentage both these figures represent, of the annual total, by time and by cost.

Mr. Hurd: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to his question on 12 December.

Firearms Amnesty

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show so far as the information is available to him the number of rounds of each calibre of ammunition surrendered to the police during the recent firearms amnesty and indicate whether it was (a) rifle, (b) shotgun, (c) pistol or revolver, (d) other firearms, or (e) air or gas powered weapons ammunition.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information as to the calibre of rounds of ammunition surrendered during the recent firearms amnesty in England and Wales is not available. Details of the type of ammunition surrendered is as follows:

	Rounds
Prohibited ammunition	390
Bulletted ammunition	1,165,934
Shot gun ammunition	167,212
Other ammunition	119,171
Total	1,511,000

The total includes estimates for two police forces.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table in the Official Report to detail so far as the information is available to him the number of firearms surrendered to the police in each of the following categories during the recent amnesty (a) self-loading rifles, (b) bolt action rifles, (c) pump action rifles, (d) under lever action rifles, (e) single shot rifles, (f) double rifles, (g) other types of rifle, (h) revolvers, (i) self-loading pistols, (j) single shot pistols, (k) other types of hand guns, (l) shotguns, (m) combination shotgun/rifles, (n) antique firearms by type and (o) air and gas-powered weapons, and indicate for each of the above how many were in useable condition, and for how many of the above firearms in each group ammunition is currently available; and what his estimate is of the market value of each class of firearms surrendered.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A breakdown by type of firearms surrendered in England and Wales during the recent amnesty is as follows:

Firearms	Number	Number
Fully automatic weapons		178
Self-loading rifles	315
Manual operation rifles	4,856
All rifles		5,171
Pistols and revolvers		18,005
Total firearms		23,354
Shotguns
Traditional long-barrelled shotguns	10,601
Other long-barrelled shotguns	171
All long-barrelled shotguns		10,772
Traditional short-barrelled shotguns	404
Other short-barrelled shotguns	78
All short-barrelled shotguns		482
Total shotguns		11,254
Other firearms
Prohibited firearms		69
Air rifles and air pistols		6,126
Other firearms (including imitations)		1,922
Total other firearms		8,117
Total firearms and shotguns		42,725

The other information requested is not available.

Illegal Parking

Mr. Tebbit: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has that more stringent penalties for illegal parking have led to reduction in the number of such offences.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A number of measures have been introduced in recent years to deter illegal parking, including new fixed penalty procedures and, in London, wheelclamping and contracted out vehicle removals. The transport and road research laboratory has monitored the impact of wheelclamping since it was introduced on an experimental basis in 1983. The latest surveys show that clamping has reduced the incidence of illegal parking by up to 40 per cent. in some areas.

Traffic Offences

Mr. Tebbit: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has that the humiliation of persons accused of offences under the Road Traffic Acts will act as a deterrent to other potential offenders.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The prospect of arrest, charge, prosecution and conviction should act as a deterrent to all potential offenders. This applies to offences under the Road Traffic Acts as much as to any other serious criminal offences.

IBA Levy

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future of the Independent Broadcasting Authority levy for the period 1990 to 1992.

Mr. Hurd: In conjunction with the Treasury, my Department has reviewed the arrangements in the Broadcasting Act 1981, as amended by the Finance Act 1986, for additional payments by independent television contractors (the levy). The review was undertaken to consider transitional arrangements for the 1990-92 contract extension period prior to the restructuring of independent television on the lines proposed in the Government's recently published White Paper on broadcasting. It also took into account the recommendations of the 43rd report of the Committee of Public Accounts in 1987-88.

Following consultation with the IBA, we have decided that the levy for the period 1 January 1990 to 31 December 1992 will be raised both from the net advertising revenue and from the profits of the independent television contracts. It is intended that the overall yield of the levy during this period should be of broadly the same amount as would have arisen under the arrangements which existed prior to 1986. The structure of the new levy will be such that about three quarters of the total yield is expected to arise from net advertising revenue and the remainder from profits.

The purpose behind these changes is to encourage cost-consciousness amongst the independent television contractors and to ensure an adequate return to the Government for use of a scarce national resource during the contract extension period.

Precise details of the levy structure will be published in the spring of next year. The Government's detailed response to the 43rd report of the Public Accounts Committee will be published in a Treasury minute early next year.

Immigration

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to carry out the undertakings given by Lord Ferrers, Official Report, columns 367 and 401, 4 March, with regard to regulation 2(b) of the Immigration (Restrictive Right of Appeal Against Deportation) (Exemption) (No. 2) Order 1988 (S.I. 1203); and if he will exclude persons returning to the United Kingdom who are entitled to remain in terms of sections 3(3)(b) of the Immigration Act 1971 from the operation of section 5 of the Immigration Act 1988 even if they do not obtain re-entry by virtue of section 3(3)(b) of the 1971 Act.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 12 December 1988]: The Immigration (Restricted Right of Appeal Against Deportation) (Exemption) No. 2 Order 1988 exempts from the provisions of section 5(2) of the Immigration Act 1988 those persons who leave the United Kingdom and are re-landed during the currency of the earlier leave for the remainder of the terms and conditions of that leave. The order fully reflects the Government's intention to make an exception for such persons. To extend the scope of the exception so that it applied to those whose absence abroad was followed by re-admission other than by virtue of section 3(3)(b) would negate much of the purpose of section 5 of the 1988 Act.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Salmonella

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce legislation seeking to ban the practice of feeding chickens with the recycled carcases of slaughtered and dead chickens.

Mr. Ryder: I have no present plans to do so.

The Protein Processing Order 1981 requires all animal protein for incorporation in animal feedingstuffs to be manufactured free from salmonella contamination. My officials routinely inspect all plants producing such protein to ensure that this requirement is met. Carcases of chickens which have died from disease are not used in animal feedingstuffs but are disposed of separately.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce a new Government guideline which would include a more stringent health check system for egg production.

Mr. Ryder: I have recently introduced a new voluntary code of practice on the control of salmonella for poultry health scheme members. A copy of this document is deposited in the House of Commons Library. A code of practice for commercial egg producers has now also been agreed and is being issued. Further measures will be taken.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of the statutory code of practice which includes control of feedstuffs and the handling of eggs by producers.

Mr. Ryder: I have recently introduced a new voluntary Code of Practice on the control of salmonella for poultry health scheme members. Also a code of practice for commercial egg producers has now been agreed and is being issued. A copy of this document is deposited in the House of Commons Library.

My officials are discussing with industry representatives details for codes of practice on the production of feedstuffs. Meanwhile general guidelines on the production of feedingstuffs will be issued. I am also reviewing the existing legislation controlling these areas, to ensure that they are being implemented as effectively as possible.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the number of milk quotas allowed to be purchased by new milk producers in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many United Kingdom dairy farmers participated in the milk non-marketing scheme or dairy herd conversion scheme and subsequently made applications for quotas to his Department.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It would be disproportionately expensive to estimate this figure.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the increase in the provision of extra milk quota in the European Community to reach 1 million tonnes.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Community milk quotas excluding the quota allocated to Spain on its accession in 1986 have in fact been reduced, from some 104 million tonnes in 1984-85 to 94 million tonnes in the current year. The Commission has proposed an increase in the quota reserve of 500,000 tonnes as part of its response to a judgment of the European Court and this is being considered at the Agriculture Council which commenced yesterday.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the criteria will be for the allocation of extra milk quota, available after the Mulder judgment between eligible United Kingdom farmers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The criteria for the allocation of extra milk quota are to be discussed at this week's meeting of the Agriculture Council. I shall make my usual statement after the Council.

Cod Farming

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has made of the outcome of experimental cod farming in (a) Norway and (b) Scotland; and if he will make a statement on the viability of such farming for the United Kingdom domestic cod market.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Scientists of my Department have kept a close watch on cod farming experiments in Norway and Scotland. For the foreseeable future the farming of salmon, and the potential for farming higher value marine fish species such as turbot and halibut, are likely to prove more commercially viable.

Research

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the cost of replacing the current system of seed testing for cereals at the National Institute of Agricultural Botany at Cambridge with an enforcement system, as proposed in his review.

Mr. Ryder: Financial estimates of the proposal are given in paragraphs 394, 403 and 476 of the report on the plant variety testing and seed certification systems in the United Kingdom.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement as to the future of the testing and evaluation of new plant varieties and seeds being carried out by the National Institute of Agricultural Botany at Cambridge University.

Mr. Ryder: The National Institute of Agricultural Botany is an independent body but I understand that it has no plans at present to carry out such activities at Cambridge university.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what effect he anticipates that his review of agricultural research will have on the work of the National Institute of Agricultural Botany at Cambridge.

Mr. Ryder: It was announced earlier this year that grant-in-aid to the National Institute of Agricultural Botany for its non-statutory work would be phased out over a period of three years between 1989 and 1992. The institute is seeking alternative funding from the industry which benefits from the institute's services and has already secured funding for next year's recommended list for cereals. Funding for the statutory work which the institute carries out on the Ministry's behalf will continue.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what responses he has had from industry to his proposal in the agricultural research review that recommended list testing, carried out by the National Institute of Agricultural Botany at Cambridge should be financed by the industry.

Mr. Ryder: Following the announcement to withdraw grant-in-aid to the National Institute of Agricultural Botany, comments have been received from or on behalf of a number of industry interests. In addition, consultations with industry organisations are taking place so that industry can consider what near-market research, including the institute's recommended lists, it would be prepared to fund. The institute has been successful in obtaining funds from the home grown cereals authority for the cereals recommended list next year and is continuing to urge the industry to support its other services.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fishing

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show how many of each of the following fishing engines operate in the area covered by the Fisheries Conservancy Board for Northern Ireland and their location or approximate location and the total number and total weight of fish taken by each method: draft net for the capture of salmon and freshwater fish on Lough Neagh, draft net for the capture of freshwater fish other than trout and rainbow trout on Lough Erne, draft net for use in freshwater other than Lough Neagh or Lough Erne, single wall set net or trammel net for the capture of trout in Lough Neagh, per 91 m (100 yd), single wall set net or trammel net for the taking of freshwater fish other than trout and rainbow trout, per 91 m (100 yd), bait net for the taking of freshwater fish other than trout and rainbow trout for use as bait per net, long line for the capture of pike on Lough Erne, fixed tidal draft net, fixed tidal draft net which operates in the estuary of a river upstream of the defined mouth, tidal draft net, drift net for the taking of salmon in the sea, bag net used in tidal waters, and salmon box or crib.

Mr. Viggers: The latest available information on these areas is as follows:

1987 catches in relation to type of fishing engine

Type of engine	Total number	Location	Total number of fish caught	Total weight of fish caught
1. Lough Neagh draft nets	15	All Lough Neagh	Not available	No figures available
2. Lough Erne draft nets	1	All Lough Erne	Not available	356 kgs
3. Draft net other than Lough Neagh or Lough Erne	0	—	—	—
4. Single wall set nets or trammel net for capture of trout in Lough Neagh	112	All Lough Neagh	Not available	No figures available

Sheep Movements

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many sheep, and what area of land in Northern Ireland, were originally placed under movement restrictions as a result of the Chernobyl disaster; what are the numbers of sheep and area of land still so affected; what were and are the classes of sheep; what was the level of radioactivity in the sheepmeat and in the vegetation when first detected, at the maximum levels, and at the latest available dates; and what were these dates.

Mr. Viggers: The restrictions on the movement and slaughter of sheep introduced in September 1987 as a result of monitoring of young lambs applied to some 21,612 acres containing an estimated 35,000 sheep. There was no breakdown of sheep by class available at that time. The restrictions continue to apply to this land area which is estimated to contain some 23,000 sheep—comprising 18,000 ewes/rams and 5,000 lambs.

The maximum readings of radiocaesium from monitoring of sheep and lambs as required by the restrictions were found in young unfinished lamb and was 4,761 bq/kg recorded on 17 September 1987 while monitoring through the current year has identified a maximum reading of 2,199 bq/kg recorded on 19 August 1988. Of the 358 sheep presented in the week ended 13 November 1988 by farmers wishing to take them out of the restricted areas the maximum was 857 bq/kg of radiocaesium for ewes and 159 for lamb. A report on monitoring results is published by the Department of Agriculture on a regular basis.

Routine monitoring of vegetation which gave a maximum result of 830 bq/kg was stopped during 1986 as such data could not be taken as a reliable guide to levels in growing livestock.

Extradition

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report the numbers of extradition requests made to the Republic of Ireland in each year since 1967, indicating how many of those requests were for crimes of a terrorist nature and how many requests were for other types of crimes, and show for each year the number of those extradition requests which were granted for (a) crimes of a terrorist nature and (b) other types of crimes and how many were refused for each class of crime; if he will indicate for each of those years, and each class of crime, how many extradition requests and warrants were found by the Irish Authorities and the Irish Courts to be unacceptable; if he will also publish in the Official Report the same information for extradition requests made to the United Kingdom by the Republic of Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 8 December 1988]: Statistical material about extradition requests both to and from Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland has been collected by the RUC since 1971. The information is not available precisely in the form requested. In particular, it has not proved possible to identify cases where, for example, the warrant was returned because the subject was subsequently found not to be in the Republic or to differentiate between those persons wanted for crimes of a terrorist nature and other crimes. The available information is however summarised in the following tables.

River Drainage Works

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the Official Report a list of the rural maintenance river drainage works for 1989 which will be carried out by the Department of Agriculture, indicating the river and appropriate location.

Mr. Viggers: The rural maintenance river drainage works programme for 1989-90 to be carried out by the Department of Agriculture will not be finalised until next spring. A copy will be sent to the hon. Gentleman at the time.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the Official Report the arterial river drainage schemes, and major river maintenance works under consideration and those on which he expects work to start in 1989.

Mr. Viggers: The works programme in relation to new schemes and major maintenance works for the financial year 1989-90 has not yet been finalised. The programme will be sent to the hon. Gentleman when available.

Drainage schemes at present under consideration to start in 1989 are as follows:

Downpatrick
Dunmurry
Omagh—Johnston Park
Omagh—Dromore Road
Londonderry—Springtown
Newry—Drumcashellone
Newry—Derrybeg
Strand Lough (Killough)

Schemes are also under consideration for sections of the following rivers:

Fairwater
Cusher
Mourne
Colebrook

Floods

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made towards repair of the damage to river banks, woods, and bridges caused by the floods of October 1987; what sums have been expended to the latest available date; what he expects the final cost of repairs to be.

Mr. Viggers: The Department of Agriculture has undertaken an extensive maintenance programme to repair river banks damaged by the flooding on 21 and 22 October 1987. Floodbanks breached on the Rivers Roe, Mourne, Strule and Faughan have now been repaired. In addition, measures have been taken to arrest erosion adjacent to floodbanks, particularly on the Moyola river. A programme to strengthen floodbanks on the River Roe is in progress. Repairs to river banks on the Rivers Blackwater and Tynan have also been carried out. Tree planting to replace trees carried away by the flood has been and will continue to be done.

To date expenditure on this work amounts to some £370,000. It is estimated that a further £40,000 will be required to complete the river bank repairs.

The majority of damaged bridges have been repaired by the Department of the Environment roads service at a cost of £403,000. Work is either already underway or planned to start soon on the remainder. The final cost of repairs is estimated to be £800,000.

VAT

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessments he has made as to the likely effect on (a) his Department's capital building programme and (b) the rent the Department will pay under occupational leases of implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on value added tax on non-domestic buildings.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Implementation of the European Court of Justice's judgment on VAT will have no effect on our capital building programme, since compensating adjustments have been made to the relevant expenditure provisions. At this stage, before landlords have decided whether to exercise their option to tax rents, it is not possible to offer meaningful estimates of the effects of the judgment on rental costs.

Member's Correspondence

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North will receive a reply to his letter of 9 November to the Minister for Industry in Northern Ireland requesting the evidence relating to the view of the Tanaiste of the Irish Republic on the MacBride principles.

Mr. Viggers: I replied to this letter on 7 December.

Redundancy and Insolvency Payments

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he plans to implement changes in relation to redundancy and insolvency payments in Northern Ireland following the announcement in the House on 31 October of proposed changes in Great Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: Yes. It is planned to make similar changes in Northern Ireland to those announced in the House on 31 October, but as redundancy and insolvency payments in Northern Ireland are made under different legislation from that governing Great Britain payments, it will be necessary to introduce separate legislation to effect the changes in Northern Ireland.

TRANSPORT

Railway Inspectors

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many railway inspectors are currently in post; and how many vacant posts for railway inspectors are currently unfilled.

Mr. Portillo: A total of 16 railway inspectors are currently in post. There are vacancies for eight inspectors and as a result of our recent recruitment exercise, we hope to fill most of these early in the new year.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many railway inspectors were in post in each of the last five years.

Mr. Portillo: The number of railway inspectors in post in each of the last five years, as at 31 December, was:

Year	Number
1983	22
1984	23
1985	23
1986	19
1987	19

London Regional Transport

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report a list of bus garages closed by London Regional Transport since 1984, including vehicle capacity, numbers of employees, employees made redundant, and present use of the site and buildings.

Mr. Portillo: These are matters for London Regional Transport and its subsidiary London Buses Limited. It is for them to decide what garages are needed to support their operational requirements.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report a list of routes put out to competitive tender by London Regional Transport since 1984, showing the companies which won the contracts.

Mr. Portillo: Tendering of bus routes in London is a matter for London Regional Transport.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek to introduce greater openness into London Regional Transport's system of awarding contracts, whether for routes or services.

Mr. Portillo: London Regional Transport has a statutory duty to invite tenders for such of its activities as it determines to be appropriate, and to accept any tender which would result in those activities being carried out satisfactorily and at less cost. Subject to that, the award of contracts is a matter for LRT.

Coastguard Services

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the financial considerations which he took into account in drawing up proposals for the closure of coastguard services at each of Hartland, Moray and Ramsey.

Mr. Portillo: Expenditure on coastguard services is planned to increase from £21·8 million in 1986-87 to £26·2 million in 1989-90. This increase reflects a steadily improving service with more effective radio and telecommunications equipment such as VHF direction-finding aerials, and better search and rescue helicopter coverage. The decision to merge the area responsibilities of the maritime rescue sub-centres at Hartland, Moray and Ramsey with those of adjacent stations will save about £600,000 a year, which is reflected in the planned figure for 1989-90. These savings allow other improvements in the service to be made, with no significant loss in operational effectiveness in the sea areas concerned.

Vehicle Licensing Centre

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many items of correspondence he has received from hon. Members about the work of the driver and vehicle licensing centre since 1 July.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Ministers received 324 letters between 1 July and 7 December. Hon. Members also addressed 111 letters direct to the driver and vehicle licensing centre.

To save time, hon. Members may wish to write direct to DVLC on executive rather than policy issues. That way, it is possible to reply faster.

Road Licence Refunds

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of refunds of car road licences for each of the years 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 which were on first time registrations of new cars and the average refund value and the number of refunds and value to motor vehicle dealers in all cases.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This information is not available.

No distinction is made between refund applications relating to the first licence for a new vehicle and those for other vehicles. The DVLC records are not structured in a way which would make such an analysis practicable. Applications from motor dealers are not separately identifiable.

Road Maintenance

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the annual cost of providing maintenance in respect of (a) lighting and (b) drainage for roads, for the latest year available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is as follows:

Expenditure 1986-87

£ million

	Lighting	Drainage
Department of Transport	13·3	5·8
Local Authority	145·2	66·2
Total	158·5	72·0

Notes:
Expenditure in England only.
Lighting includes energy costs.

Road Construction

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the cost per mile of contructing a mile of (a) motorway and (b) double track railway line.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Construction costs of motorways vary substantially depending on factors such as location and the need for structures. As announced in the answer to my right hon. Friend the Member for Arundel (Mr. Marshall) on 11 June 1986 at column 188, the Department decided to discontinue the preparation of general average costs.

Construction cost (excluding land) of recently completed motorways and motorways under construction (all three lane) are as follows:

	Scheme	Miles	Cost £ million	Average cost £ million per mile
(i) Recently completed
Completion date
May 1986	M4/25 Airport Spur	0·9	8·0	8·9
June 1986	M42 Tamworth-Water Orton	2·7	27·0	10·0
June 1986	M42 Bromsgrove	4·3	16·5	3·8
August 1986	M42 Tamworth	7·6	22·2	2·9
August 1986	M27 Swaythling Link	0·7	2·6	3·7
October 1986	M25 Micklefield-South Mimms	13·0	94·3	7·3
December 1986	A1(M) Roestock-Stanborough[1]	3·1	57·0	18·4
March 1987	M5/M42 Junction Southern Turn	1·4	4·8	3·4
(ii) Under construction
	M40 Banbury Bypass	27·6	151·4	5·5
	M40 Warwick Section	11·1	55·5	5·0
	M63/M66 Portwood-Denton	5·0	40·6	8·1

[1] Including Hatfield tunnel.

The M25 is 117 miles long, and cost nearly £1 billion over the construction period from 1975 to 1986 (average £8·5 million per mile).

It is difficult to give costs for railways as there are few examples in recent years of new stretches of line being built. The cost of providing a suitable alignment can be considerable, and variables such as the cost of stations, junctions and tunnels mean that it is impossible to provide an average figure.

BR has provided the following examples of construction costs (excluding land):

Selby diversion—costs of infrastructure, track, earthworks, signalling, overhead wiring and station alternations: average of £4·5 million per mile (1983 prices: equivalent to £5·8 million per mile current prices).

Stansted airport link—costs of infrastructure, track, earthworks, signalling and new junction but excluding the new station and tunnelling: average of £5·1 million per mile (1985 prices: £5·9 million per mile current prices); costs including tunnelling but excluding station: average of £7·7 million per mile (£8·8 million at current prices). The average figures include the single track section under the runway as well as the double track section: it is not possible to differentiate between these.

The figures exclude the cost of locomotives and rolling stock.

Traffic (Damage to Buildings)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate, for the latest year available, the cost of damage caused to roadside buildings by passing traffic.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information is not held centrally from which to estimate the cost of damage to roadside buildings.

Road Accidents

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate for the latest year available the total cost to the National Health Service of treatment which is a direct result of road traffic accidents.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) on 28 November at columns 164-65.

Heavy Vehicles

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the proposal by the EEC Commission that 40-ton lorries should have the right of access to United Kingdom roads by 1997 is being considered by the Council of Ministers; and if the matter will fall to be considered by majority vote.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I understand that the Commission report will be submitted formally to the Council shortly. It should be considered during the forthcoming Spanish Presidency.

The United Kingdom derogations from 40 tonnes and from 11·5 tonnes axle loading were granted under article 75(3) of the treaty which requires unanimity.

We shall have to demonstrate that the conditions under which the derogations were granted will still apply as we progress with our bridge-strengthening programme.

Taxis

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to improve the accessibility of taxis for the mobility-handicapped in London.

Mr. Portillo: This morning I hosted a press conference at my Department at which I was pleased to announce a new development for wheelchair-accessible taxis. Following discussions with the Metropolitan police, which is responsible for day-to-day taxi licensing questions, from 1 Feburary 1989 all newly licensed London taxis will need to be able to carry a passenger in a wheelchair and from 1 January 2000 every taxi operating in London will be required to take wheelchairs.

Accidents (Heavy Goods Vehicles)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his answer of 2 December, there was any change in the method of calculation of the number of accidents involving heavy goods vehicles between 1979 and 1980.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 9 December 1988]: There was no change in the method of calculation of the number of accidents involving heavy goods vehicles between 1979 and 1980.

The fall in the number of fatal accidents involving heavy goods vehicles between 1979 and 1980 is part of a long-term trend going back to 1969. This trend is illustrated in terms of the numbers of goods vehicles involved in fatal accidents. Between 1969 and 1975, the number of heavy goods vehicles involved in fatal accidents fell from 1,700 to just over 1,000, a drop of nearly 40 per cent. This number remained fairly constant until 1980, when it fell further to 850 heavy goods vehicles in fatal accidents. The fall is likely to have been caused in part by the trend towards fewer, but larger, vehicles, and partly by the shift towards higher standard roads.

A brief article on this trend was included on page 12 of "Road Accidents Great Britain 1982".

Trunk Roads

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the trunk road schemes planned for starting in 1989-90 referred to in his Department's news release of 2 November, showing where possible the planned date for construction to start.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following schemes are planned to start in 1989-90:

(A) Schemes for which statutory procedures are complete
M3 Compton—Bassett widening
M40 widening junction 4-5
A13 Blackwall Tunnel—Cotton Street junction improvement
A13 West India Dock Road junction improvement
A16 Boston—Algakirk
A16 Louth bypass
A30 Plusha—Bolventor
A40 Long Lane junction improvement
A41 Bicester bypass stage 1
A47 Castor and Ailsworth bypass
A47 Eye bypass
A69 Brampton bypass
A282 Dartford third crossing approach roads
A303 Ilchester—South Petherton
A650 Drighlington bypass

(B) Schemes for which statutory procedures are not complete
M40 Oxford—Birmingham: Waterstock—Wendlebury
A1 Bramham—Wetherby
A5/A49 Telford—Shrewsbury
A6 Quorn and Mountsorrel bypass
A23 Waddon Marsh Bridge
A23 Warninglid—Brighton
A27 Brighton bypass
A30 Zelah bypass
A35 Axminster bypass
A35 Yellowham Hill—Troytown
A38 Marsh Mills improvement
A41 Chester improvement
A41 Whitchurch bypass
A42 Castle Donington North
A65 Addingham bypass
A65 Draughton bypass
A66 Bowes bypass—County boundary improvement
A127 Rayleigh Weir GSJ
A140 Dickleburgh bypass
A303 Mere—Wincanton
A523 Macclesfield Inner Relief Road
A604 M1-A1 Link: Kettering Southern bypass
A604 M1-A1 Link: Rothwell—Kettering
A604 M1-A1 Link: Thrapston—Brampton
A604 M1-A1 Link: Advance BR bridge works
A1079 Market Weighton bypass

(C) Local Authority schemes approved for S272 grant
M1 junction 34 improvements
A418 Leighton Linslade bypass

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those trunk road schemes which his Department planned to start in 1988-89 but which have not yet started, showing where known the planned date for construction to start.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Subject to the satisfactory completion of statutory procedures, our current intention is to start the following schemes as indicated:

	Target month
M20 Maidstone to Ashford	January 1989
M40 Oxford to Birmingham Gaydon section	January 1989
A6 Barton bypass	December 1988
A27 Pevensey bypass	March 1989
A30 Launceston to Plusha	February 1989
A35 Charmouth bypass	February 1989
A36 Beckington bypass	February 1989
A36 Codford bypass	March 1989
A406 Chingford Road to Hale End Road	March 1989
A435/A422 Alcester bypasses	March 1989
A604 M1-A1 Link: Kettering to Thrapston	March 1989
A696 Woolsington bypass	February 1989

We aim to start the following schemes as early as possible. Our current expectation is that they may slip into early 1989-90.

M3 Compton to Bassett widening
A27 Brighton bypass
A35 Axminster bypass
A41 Bicester bypass stage 1
A65 Addingham bypass
A127 Rayleigh Weir GSJ
A282 Dartford to Thurrock crossing: approach roads
A303 Ilchester to South Petherton
A418 Leighton to Linslade bypass
A604 M1-A1 Link: Rothwell to Kettering
A604 M1-A1 Link: Thrapston to A14 ST 1
A650 Drighlington bypass

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement regarding the capacity of the trunk roads between the west midlands and the ports situated on the coast of East Anglia, outlining any proposals he has in mind for improvement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are taking forward several schemes to improve routes from the west midlands to the east coast ports including the A11, A47 and A428. In addition, work is to start soon on the new M1-A1 link road which, with the A11 and the A45, will provide the main route between the west midlands and East Anglia.

A review of the trunk road programme is currently in progress. We expect to make an announcement in the spring.

Motorways

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those sections of motorway in England which (a) are built to dual two-lane standard and carry average annual daily traffic flows in excess of 54,000 and (b) are built to dual three-lane standard and carry average annual daily traffic flows in excess of 79,000.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The sections of motorway in England which are built to dual two-lane standard and which are estimated to carry average annual daily traffic flows (combined directional) in excess of 54,000 in 1987 are listed below.

Road	Junctions From	To
M63	1	2

Bottesford Bypass

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what representations he has received dated 9 November from Mr. Reginald Boyce, chairman of Bottesford parish council, regarding proposed alterations to two junctions on the A52 Bottesford bypass; and what reply he has sent;

(2) what representations he has received from Councillor A. Burton of Melton borough council dated 15 November regarding proposed alterations to the A52 Bottesford bypass at three specific locations; and what reply he has sent.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We received letters from Mr. Boyce and Councillor Burton on 14 and 28 November. The Department's regional office replied reflecting the advice I gave to my hon. Friend in my letter of 14 October.

The junction layouts on the A52 Bottesford bypass are appropriate for the conditions and the volume of turning traffic. We shall monitor the situation once the bypass is open to traffic early next year.

North Devon Link Road

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will arrange to have 60 mph maximum speed limit signs erected along the north Devon link road between Tiverton and Barnstaple.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is not our policy to restate the 60 mph national speed limit, which applies to the north Devon link road west of Tiverton, by the erection of speed limit signs.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what security clearance procedures were undergone by Bowe Systems and Machinery United Kingdom staff before being allowed to use the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre processing equipment between 7 and 17 November, and what clearance is required by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre's own staff before they are allowed access to this area.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The contract of employment signed by all Bowe Systems and Machinery (UK) Ltd. employees has been amended to cover the requirements of the Data Protection and Official Secrets Act. The area at DVLC containing the Bowe equipment is controlled by a Cardkey entry system. DVLC staff not normally employed in the area can only enter by arrangement with line management.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to launch the next campaign against vehicle excise duty evasion in London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Next spring—probably May.

Enforcement continues between campaigns throughout the year.

Air Traffic

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assumptions about the British Airports Authority's holding of land at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted are made by his Department in preparing estimates on the future growth of air traffic up to the year 2005.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We plan to publish new air traffic forecasts for the United Kingdom before the Christmas recess. The commentary on those forecasts will describe the assumptions underlying them.

ENVIRONMENT

House of Commons (Lighting)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to obtain drawings and specifications of the original chandeliers which illuminated the Chamber before 1941.

Mr. Chope: Investigations on these matters are already in hand in view of the possible relevance to eventual recommendations of the Select Committee on televising.

Water Companies (Foreign Interests)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to in which British water companies foreign companies have control of a sizeable interest and as to what percentage of the shares they own; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend has no information which is not already in the public domain. Such investment is subject to the normal provisions of competition and merger law.

Red List (Dangerous Substances)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the most dangerous substances in the United Kingdom red list.

Mr. Moynihan: A consultation paper was issued in July setting out proposals for a new approach towards controlling inputs of the most dangerous substances to water. The paper included proposals for selecting a "red list" of the most dangerous substances, and a provisional initial list of substances, on which comments were invited. The following substances appeared on the provisional list:

Mercury
Cadmium
Gamma-Hexacholrocyclohexane (Lindane)
DDT
Pentachlorophenol (PCP)
Hexachlorobenzene (HCB)
Hexachlorobutadiene (HCBD)
Aldrin
Dieldrin
PCB (Polychlorinated Biphenyls)
Triorganotin Compounds
Dichlorvos
Trifluoralin
Chloroform[1]
Carbon Tetrachloride[1]
1, 2 Dichloroethane
Trichlorobenzene
Azinphos-methyl
Fenitrothion
Malathion
Endosulfan
Atrazine
Simazine

[1] Comments were particularly invited on whether these substances should be included because they were the subject of EC directives even though they did not emerge as priority substances from the selection scheme.

Comments received in response to the consultation paper are currently being assessed.

River Pollution

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to ban the following from rivers (a) mercury, (b) lindane, (c) dieldrin, (d) cadmium, (e) carbon tetrachloride, (f) pentachlorephenol, (g) arsenic and (h) lead, chromium, nickel, zinc and copper; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Discharges containing any potentially polluting substances are prohibited without prior authorisation under the normal provisions of the Control of Pollution Act 1974.

Discharges to rivers of all the substances listed are covered by European Community directives. Community-wide limit values and quality objectives are laid down for mercury, lindane, cadmium, carbon tetrachloride and pentachlorophenol. Those for dieldrin come into force on 1 January 1989. All discharges of these substances must be consented by the appropriate water authority in accordance with the provisions of the directives.

Additionally, in order to protect the aquatic environment the Government recently announced that all remaining approved uses of dieldrin as a pesticide will be prohibited from 30 March 1989.

National quality standards are in force for arsenic, lead, chromium, nickel, zinc and copper. These are set out in DoE circular 18/85 (Welsh Office circular 37/85).

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received a report on the spillage of 20,000 litres of diesel oil into the tidal beaches of the River Llyst near Exeter in the South West water authority; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Moynihan: No. The South West water authority has treated this as a local, though serious, pollution incident. I understand that the spillage was successfully contained under the authority's established emergency procedures and that as a result there was limited environmental damage. The authority is now considering the need for any further action arising from the incident.

Exchequer Grants

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will show by standard economic region the proportion and amount at 1988 prices of aggregate Exchequer grants paid to councils within these areas for each financial year from 1981-82; and if, in addition he will show separately figures for inner and outer London.

Mr. Gummer: The information is as follows:

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will show by region in England, showing inner and outer London separately from the south-east region, for each year from 1981-82 to 1988-89 constant prices, the amount of aggregate Exchequer grant received by each region.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him earlier today.

Rating Reform

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's estimate of (a) the lowest and (b) the highest level of poll tax to be levied by a local authority.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. We published on 23 June illustrative figures showing what the community charge would have been in each area, had the new system been in force in 1988-89. Those illustrative figures assume existing levels of spending and existing local authority responsibilities. On that basis, the lowest community charge in England would have been £152 with a full transitional safety net (Teesdale) and £132 with no safety net (Isler of Scilly). The highest would have been £488 with a full safety net (City of London) and £639 with no safety net (Camden).

Housing Waiting Lists

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people are on housing waiting lists, by categories, in the districts of Derbyshire, North-East and Chesterfield.

Mr. Trippier: The latest available information was provided by north east Derbyshire and Chesterfield district councils in section B of their 1988 housing investment programme returns (HIP1), copies of which are in the Library.

Wool Textile Industry

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to meet representatives of the wool textile industry to discuss common standards on effluent from moth-proofing.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to meet representatives of this industry. However, my Department has discussed with representatives of the industry a report by the water research centre setting out possible environmental quality standards in water for certain substances commonly used as moth-proofing agents. We expect to announce the introduction of environmental quality standards for these substances in England and Wales in the near future. The introduction of such standards in Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Resider Programme

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice has been given to local authorities on the resider programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Local authorities within the programme area were advised when the programme was first approved and will shortly be invited to submit applications.

Council Home Sales

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in how many cases under the right-to-buy legislation to the latest convenient date the London borough of Camden had failed to meet the dates statutorily required.

Mr. Trippier: As at 31 October 1988 there were 40 RTB2 (notice acknowledging or denying the right-to-buy) defaults and 2,590 section 125 (offer notice) defaults.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on allowing local authorities to opt out of direct housing provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: We have made it clear that we support the idea of councils opting out of direct housing provision, if they do so on the right terms. I have today announced that we have given consent to Chiltern district council to transfer its housing to the Chiltern Hundreds housing association. This is the first such transfer to obtain consent.

Chiltern council has shown considerable vision and enterprise in preparing for this transfer. It has also demonstrated that the needs and aspirations of both the tenants and the Council can be met and furthered by such a scheme. I am sure that other councils who are considering following the same route will be encouraged.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, prior to deciding about the privatisation of the water industry, he gathered information regarding (a) the cost of repairing the sewage system within a period not longer than five years, (b) the cost of urgently cleaning drinking water of pollutants and poisons and (c) the amount of people who now have free access to water and land for the purposes of sporting and recreation activities.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 9 December 1988]: Information on the estimated costs of improving water and sewerage services is obtained from water authorities each year, while information relating specifically to privatisation is obtained as necessary. It is not possible to estimate the number of people who might make use of water and land for sporting and recreation purposes where there is free access.

Westminster Hall

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether steps are to be taken by his Department to renovate the inscriptions on the memorial plaques in Westminster Hall where such work is urgently needed.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 9 December 1988]: Since I wrote to the hon. Member about this matter, English Heritage has advised that no further cleaning of the plaques should be carried out pending a long-term solution to the problem. Discussions with experts at the Victoria and Albert museum's department of metalwork conservation are continuing.

Local Government Finance

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much subsidy has been paid and is estimated to be paid in respect of authorities for each of the financial years 1979-80 to 1989-90 from the Exchequer, both in total and expressed as a subsidy per dwelling for the total number of dwellings in local authority control and in respect of those authorities in receipt of subsidy; and what is the position, expressed in similar terms, for rate fund contributions, for both negative and positive contributions.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 8 December 1988]: Housing subsidy up to 1980-81 was paid under a different system, so I am using 1981-82 as the first year. The information requested is set out in the tables and is based on data provided by local authorities in their subsidy claim forms. The rate fund contribution figures (RFCs) are net amounts. The main housing subsidy figures are based on the latest entitlement claimed to date by local authorities, and the 1987-88 and 1988-89 figures are their estimates. The figures for 1989-90 are not yet published.

Rural Housing Associations

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has as to how many properties are now covered by the rural county-based housing associations established under the sponsorship of the National Agricultural Centre Rural Trust;

(2) what level of support grant was given by Government-sponsored agencies to the rural county-based housing associations for the last financial year; and what is the current level of Government support;

(3) what level of support grant was given by Government-sponsored agencies to the National Agricultural Centre Rural Trust for the last financial year; and what is the current level of Government support;

(4) how many new housing associations have been created in the current year in rural areas with support from central Government.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 12 December 1988]: The Housing Corporation has nine rural county-based associations currently registered with it of which one was registered this year. Those associations have 50 properties in management wth a further 144 properties approved for funding or in the pipeline.

In 1987-88 the Housing Corporation allocated grants of £4,547,000 to projects by rural county-based associations. This year the corporation has allocated £5,209,000 to such projects.

In 1987-88 the Rural Development Commission gave a grant of £112,500 towards the National Agricultural Centre Rural Trust's (NACRT's) running costs. The Department has given approval for the Commission to pay grant to NACRT of up to £315,000 in this financial year.

Maxwell House, Holborn

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent to date by the Property Services Agency on alterations to Maxwell house, Holborn, EC1; what is the proposed use of the office space in question; when it will be occupied; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Ridley [holding answer 8 December 1988]: Negotiations for Maxwell House began in 1986 on behalf of Customs and Excise as a result of the impending expiry of a lease of one of the buildings occupied by them. Customs and Excise have re-appraised their accommodation needs having regard to the Government's relocation policy and have been able to reduce their requirement for office space in central London. A number of carefully costed options are being considered by Ministers and an announcement will be made shortly. Full account will be taken of expenditure to date on alterations to Maxwell house and its future role as part of the Government's office estate.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Take-up

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will consider seeking to amend statutes in order that a duty be placed upon his Department to ensure as far as is practicable that benefits are taken up by potential claimants as well as being available for claimants;

(2) if he will introduce legislation imposing a statutory duty on his Department to encourage the take-up of benefits administered by them.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. The Department already aims to ensure that members of the public have ready access to comprehensive, accurate and comprehensible information about benefit entitlement. This is done at national level by identifying the most effective and practical means of communication and also by a wide variety of initiatives taken at regional and local levels to promote awareness of the benefits available.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the latest figures for (a) the average length of time in processing claims for attendance allowance and (b) the numbers of cases which have been delayed and the reasons for those delays.

Mr. Scott: The average processing time for attendance allowance claims is currently 7·3 weeks. Claims may take longer than average to process for a variety of reasons. These include difficulties in arranging medical examination of the claimant or in establishing a firm prognosis; the need to obtain information from the claimant's general practitioner, hospitals he has attended or a consultant; and inquiries about periods the claimant has spent in hospital or other residential accommodation. Figures are not kept for the numbers of such cases.

Industrial Deafness

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has received recommendations from the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council on sensorineural hearing loss for merchant seamen in the schedule of prescribed diseases and injuries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We received a report on occupational deafness from the council last month. It is being considered.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he proposes to make any changes in the age limit for applications for mobility allowance.

Mr. Scott: As my right hon. Friend announced on 27 October, we shall be bringing forward legislation to extend the upper age limit for receipt of the allowance from 75 to 80, as an interim measure pending our consideration of the series of reports on the survey of disabled people undertaken by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Disabled People (Benefits)

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people there are in receipt of (a) mobility allowance, (b) attendance allowance, lower and higher rates, (c) war pensioners' mobility supplement, (d) invalid care allowance and (e) severe disablement allowance as at the latest available date.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the table.

Benefit	Numbers of recipients
Mobility allowance	[1]554,000
Attendance allowance
Lower rate	[2]382,000
Higher rate	[2]259,000
War pensioners' mobility supplement	[3]14,500
Invalid care allowance	[4]108,000
Severe disablement allowance	[2]260,000

[1] At 2 December 1988.
[2] At 4 April 1987.
[3] At 30 September 1988.
[4] At 28 November 1988.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest information he has regarding the numbers and proportion of unemployment benefit disqualification cases in the Chesterfield area in which the disqualification was imposed for the maximum period of 26 weeks.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that this information is not available. We are currently monitoring the operation of the disqualification rules on the basis of a sample of cases across the country. The results of the survey, which will not allow analysis of the position in any single office, should be available next year.

Attendance Allowance (Mr. Bowell junior)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security why has his Department's overseas branch failed to pay the attendance allowance for Mr. Bowell junior of 23B La Vallesa, Shangrila, Calpe Alicante, Spain, formerly of 80 Blatchcombe road, Paignton, details of which were set out in his letter to the hon. Member for South Hams on 10 October; how much is owing; and when it will be paid.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Arrears of attendance allowance for Mr. Bowell junior, amounting to £774·33 for the period 4 July 1988 to 14 December 1988, have been authorised for payment and will be issued to Mrs. Bowell this week. I very much regret the delay in issuing this payment.

Retirement Pension (Mr. and Mrs. Bowell)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will arrange for £269·80, due to Mr. and Mrs. Bowell of 23B La Vallesa, Shangrila, Calpe Alicante, Spain, formerly of 80 Blatchcombe road, Paignton, to be sent to them immediately through his Department's overseas branch; and why there has been a five month delay in paying their retirement pension.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department had not been aware of any problems with Mr. and Mrs. Bowell's pensions. However, checks now show that two payments totalling £334·46 which the Department issued to Mr. Bowell's bank were not received there. The original payments have now been stopped and, assuming that they prove not to have already been paid, replacements will be issued urgently.

Pensioners

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will specify the income sources that were included in his estimate of the increase in pensioners total incomes since 1979, Official Report, 27 October, column 456, and the percentage by which each category increased in real terms over the same period.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is as follows:

Source	Per cent.[1]
Retirement pension and other state benefits	+19
Occupational pension	+56
Investment income	+64
Earnings	−28
Total gross	+24
Tax and National Insurance contributions	+37
Total net	+23

[1] Percentage increase of average amount (1979-86).
Note: In all cases, the figures are rounded to the nearest percentage point.

Mr. Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much of the 23 per cent. increase in the real income of the average pensioner between 1979 and 1986 is due to increases in the national insurance pension, how much to the payment of the state earnings-related pension scheme; and how much to the payment of occupational pensions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not available in the form requested. The available information shows that between 1979 and 1986 pensioners experienced an average real increase in gross incomes of 24 per cent. which was broken down as follows:

	Breakdown of 24 per cent.
Retirement pension (including state earnings-related pension) and income-related benefits	41 per cent.
Occupational pensions	37 per cent.
All other income	22 per cent.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the weekly payments from occupational pension schemes by decile or quartile with respect to the number of recipients over pension age; and what is the median weekly payment from occupational pension schemes paid to recipients over pension age.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 5 December 1988]: The information is not available in the form requested. The following table specifies the amount per week (rounded to the nearest 10p) received in 1986 by single and married men and women over pension age in receipt of an occupational pension.

	Single		Married
	Men Aged 65 and over	Women Aged 60 and over	Men Aged 65 and over	Women With husband aged 65 and over
	£	£	£	£
1st quartile	3·50	5·10	5·70	2·50
2nd quartile	10·80	10·70	17·20	9·00
3rd quartile	27·70	23·70	43·00	20·50
4th quartile	87·20	71·10	131·20	49·30
Median	16·00	14·50	25·70	13·00

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons and what proportion of those over pensionable age are in receipt of payments from an occupational pension scheme.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 5 December 1988]: The information is not available in the form requested. In 1986 about 3·4 million tax units in Great Britain (that is, single people over pensionable age and married couples where the man is over pensionable age) were in receipt of an occupational pension—a proportion of 50 per cent.

National Insurance

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the most recent estimate of the cost to the national insurance fund for 1988-89 of the 2 per cent. subsidy payable under sections 1 and 7 of the Social Security Act 1986; and how much of this relates to contributions in respect of the year 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The general rule is that incentives payable under sections 1 and 7 of the Social Security Act 1986 in respect of 1987-88 and 1988-89, will be paid in 1989-90. The Government Actuary has followed this assumption when deriving the estimate that £310 million of incentives will be paid in 1989-90, of which £80 million relates to contributions in respect of 1987-88, and £230 million relates to 1988-89.

All figures are consistent with the Government Actuary's report on the uprating and rerating orders, (Cm. 537).

Family Credit

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what average family credit payment was assumed in the 1988 public expenditure White Paper; what was the average payment awarded in each month since April; and what is the average amount now in payment.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The 1988 public expenditure White Paper estimate of £409 million and an average of 470,000 recipients presupposed an average award of £16·73 a week. Indications are that current awards average over £25 a week. Precise information for earlier months is not available. Revised estimates of total expenditure and the numbers of claimants in 1988-89 will be published in the 1989 public expenditure White Paper in the new year.

"Reform of Social Security"

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will publish a revised version of tables P1 to P6 of the technical annex to the White Paper "Reform of Social Security" taking into account changes in prices, earnings and other relevant factors since 1985;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the figures given in his answer on social security benefits on 7 December, Official Report, column 182, at 1988 prices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as can be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost as soon as possible.

Social Fund

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the anticipated end of the year out-turn on the numbers of claimants and levels of expenditure, (b) the most recent figures for the numbers of claimants and levels of expenditure and (c) the anticipated numbers of claimants and levels of expenditure for 1988-89 for (i) funeral payments from the social fund and (ii) maternity payments from the social fund.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: These figures are not yet available and I shall write to the hon. Member when they are.

Income Support

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have (a) ceased to claim or lost entitlement of income support since April, to the most recent date as a result of (i) finding employment, (ii) the ruling that work expenses are no longer deductible from earnings for income calculations, (iii) the reduction from 30 to 24 hours of the full-time work qualification, (iv) the removal of benefit rights from 16 and 17-year-olds, and (v) other, (b) the amounts saved in each category, (c) what he anticipates the end of year outcome will be for numbers and amounts saved for each category and (d) what he anticipates the numbers and amounts saved in 1988-89 will be.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Housing Benefit

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he anticipates will be the end of year cost of housing benefit transitional payments; how many claimants he anticipates will have been awarded such payments; what he anticipates the costs and numbers of claimants in 1988-89 will be following the announcement of the £2 erosion factor; and how many payments and how much in each of the above will be received by pensioners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At the time the transitional payment unit was set up it was announced that £65 million was being made available to cover the cost of the payments. Applications for transitional payments will continue to be received until 31 March 1989. Until they have all been received it is not possible to calculate the final cost of housing benefit transitional payments or to give the final number who will receive payments, either now or after the erosion factor is applied. Information on pensioners as a group is not yet available from the unit; we hope to be able to supply this at a later date.

Child Benefit

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated number of summer school leavers currently on extended child benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As at 5 December 1988 there were 16,109 16 and 17-year-old summer school leavers whose parents were receiving extended child benefit in respect of them.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many more people he estimates would be eligible for cold weather payments if entitlement were extended to income support claimants with children aged under 11 years and with savings over £500.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 12 December 1988]: If eligibility were extended to families with children under 11 and the £500 capital rule were to be abolished, about 1 million more people could be expected to qualify.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list (a) the changes in regulations or procedures which have had knock-on effects on the unemployment figures and (b) the changes made to the basis for calculation of the unemployment figures since 1979, with a brief explanation of the reason for each change.

Mr. Lee: I am sending the hon. Member a list of the changes affecting the unemployment figures since 1979 which was published on page 422 of the October 1986 issue of Employment Gazette, a copy of which is in the Library. Since then there has been one further significant change in the coverage of the unemployment count resulting from the recent extension of the YTS guarantee, and the introduction in September 1988 of new benefit regulations, for under 18-year-olds. Further details are given in an article on page 660 in the December 1988 issue of Employment Gazette.

In addition, as described on page 56 of the August 1988 issue of Employment Gazette, a further minor amendment was made in July 1988 to the denominators used for calculating national and regional unemployment rates, to include those on work-related Government training schemes in line with their inclusion in the statistics of the employed work force. This change did not affect the numbers included in the unemployment count.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, further to his answer of Wednesday 7 December, Official Report, columns 234-36, what would be the current level of unemployment if calculated on the same basis as the 1971 figure.

Mr. Lee: My Department does not estimate unemployment on any previous definition as it is impossible to estimate what the various effects of changes in coverage of the unemployment count would now be. I refer the hon. Member to page 422 of the October 1986 issue of Employment Gazette and page 660 of the December 1988 issue for more detailed information.

Employment Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the client group are on employment training at the latest available date.

Mr. Nicholls: It is not possible to estimate the total number of people in the employment training client group. However, in October 1988 some 1,143,000 claimants aged 18 to 60 had been unemployed for over six months. There are currently some 97,000 people on employment training.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether Lloyds Bank, Midland Bank, the Ford Motor Co., British Airways, British Gas, British Coal and Marks and Spencer are participating in employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: The companies listed are not yet involved in employment training as training managers or training agents, although they may be providing places to other training managers. Marks and Spencer, British Coal, British Gas and the Ford Motor Co. are in the process of consultation with the Training Agency about becoming involved in employment training as training managers or as placement providers.

A full list of training agents and training managers will be published in January, although details of employers who are involed in employment training as placement providers will not be included.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the London borough of Wandsworth is taking part in employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: The London borough of Wandsworth is providing support for the Wandsworth Training Consortium which is operating as a training manager.

Training Places (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the number of training places available under YTS for those aged 16 to 17 years in Nottingham.

Mr. Cope: I am satisfied that there are more than sufficient places available to meet demand.

Child Care

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment under what conditions claimants on employment training schemes are entitled to child care payments; and what is the total number of (a) cases who have so far been granted child care payments on employment training and (b) requests for child care support on employment training, in each standard region.

Mr. Nicholls: All lone parents entering employment training may have child care costs of up to £50 per week per child paid on their behalf. Payments are made directly to the child minder, day nursery or creche by the training manager who is responsible for organising the training programme.

Information on the number of employment training participants qualifying for child care payments is not available. It is planned to collect the information at the end of March. The results will be available at the end of April.

Economic League

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will instruct staff at jobcentres to scrutinise cases of persistent refusal by employers to employ particular individuals; if he will instruct such staff to inquire of prospective employers if they use the services of the Economic League or similar bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: It is for employers to make their own decisions about who they should employ. However, staff at jobcentres are already instructed to question employers whom they suspect are not operating within the equal opportunities or other legislation. My right hon. Friend has no plans to amend the present arrangements.

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make an assessment of the implications of the activities of the Economic League and similar organisations for the job prospects of those placed on their lists.

Mr. Nicholls: No.

Information on Employees

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislation to establish an offence of supplying false information on a prospective employee, or information without the knowledge of that employee, to an employer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

School Leavers

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a breakdown on summer school leavers by the following categories (a) the number in higher or further education, (b) the number in employment, (c) the number in YTS and (d) the number on extended child benefit.

Mr. Cope: The estimated number of this summer's school leavers in higher or further education will not be available, for England and Wales, until spring 1989 and, for Scotland, until late 1990. Information on the number of school leavers in employment is not available.

At 31 October, the latest available date, there were 435,200 young people in YTS, but it is not possible to say how many of those left school this summer.

Child benefit is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

YTS

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will supply monthly totals for those aged 16 and 17 years not eligible for income support indicating (a) the number receiving extended child benefit, (b) the number on bridging allowance, (c) the number not on bridging allowance and who have not yet received an offer of a YTS place and (d) the number on YTS.

Mr. Cope: Child benefit is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

Information on the number of young people on bridging allowance is available on request. It is not possible to provide information on the number not on bridging allowance and who have not yet received an offer of a YTS place.

Figures on the number of people on YTS are published monthly in the Employment Gazette.

Training Schemes

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average time taken for payments in respect of child care costs for the children of lone parents on employment training schemes to be paid to the carers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 6 December 1988]: The arrangements for payment of child care costs for lone parent trainees in employment training should enable training agents and training managers to make the payments without delay, both when a trainee first qualifies for payment and subsequently.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many participants in employment training schemes qualify for child care payments; what is the percentage take up; and what is the total cost (a) nationally, (b) in the northern region and (c) in Durham, North-West constituency.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 6 December 1988]: Information on the number of employment training participants qualifying for child care payments is not yet available. It is planned to collect information at the end of March and results should be available by the end of April.

HEALTH

Waiting Lists (North West)

11. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the in-patient waiting list figures in March for the North Western regional health authority; and what were the figures for the previous year, and 1979.

Mr. Mellor: There were 61,800 patients on the inpatient waiting list in North Western region at 31 March 1988. This compares with 63,900 at March 1987 and 77,400 at March 1979.

Vaccinations (Charges)

12. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration he has given to introducing charges for vaccinations obtained for the purpose of foreign travel.

Mr. Mellor: We have no plans to introduce special charges for this purpose.

RAWP (Dorset)

13. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the transfer of resources under the resources allocation working party to the east and west Dorset area authorities; and what overall increases in total resources have been achieved since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: The resource allocation working party formula governs allocation to regional health authorities. In making allocations to district health authorities, regions are not expected strictly to follow RAWP principles. The Wessex regional health authority in 1988-89 allocated revenue resources of £81,326,000 to east Dorset and £40,188,000 to west Dorset. Since 1982, when they were established, east Dorset's allocation has increased by 15·4 per cent. in real terms. West Dorest, which is nearer to its regional target, has received a 4·1 per cent. increase.

Children in Distress

14. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce precautionary measures to prevent unsuitable individuals from establishing telephone counselling services for children in distress; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: No. I have no reason to believe that this is necessary. If the hon. Member has evidence of unsuitable operation of such services she should send it to the police and the director general of Oftel Telecommunications.

AIDS and HIV

15. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will adopt as his policy the model policy and guidance on AIDS and HIV infection services provided by the Association of London Authorities.

Mr. Mellor: It is important that local authorities should respond positively to the challenge of HIV infection and AIDS. Government Departments have issued guidance to assist authorities in this, but it is for individual authorities to decide whether and to what extent they wish to adopt the model policy developed by the Association of London Authorities.

27. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received following his announcement that health authorities will screen patients anonymously for HIV.

79. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding his decision to introduce anonymous blood tests for AIDS.

Mr. Mellor: None.

32. Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give his reasons for not accepting the advice of the Select Committee on Social Services relating to the anonymised screening of blood for HIV.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) on 2 December at columns 439-40.

Patients (Statistics)

17. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were treated in National Health Service hospitals in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what were the comparable figures for 1978-79.

Mr. Mellor: There were 6·62 million in-patient cases treated in National Health Service hospitals in England during the 1987-88 financial year. Earlier figures were for calendar years and in 1979 5·40 million in-patient cases were treated, a rise of over a million or more than 22 per cent.

Mentally Handicapped People

18. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new proposals his Department has to improve care for the mentally handicapped.

Mrs. Currie: Our current policy is to develop at local level, in collaboration with statutory and voluntary agencies, a comprehensive and integrated range of health and social services for mentally handicapped people and their families.

To this end the Department this year issued guidance to health authorities that by 1991 every district should have policy statements and action plans for meeting the needs of mentally handicapped people including those with special needs.

Grading

20. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to meet representatives of the nursing unions to discuss the regrading of nurses and midwives.

24. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will now arrange to meet trade union representatives of Health Service employees to discuss regrading.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I met representatives of the Royal College of Nursing on 5 December and representatives of the Royal College of Midwives on 7 December. I am not prepared to meet representatives of those trades unions whose members are taking part in industrial action over the current regrading exercise while that action continues.

I should also make it clear that negotiations over the terms and conditions of nurses and midwives employment are a matter for the relevant Whitley council. I cannot take over the role of the Whitley council management side and direct meetings between me and trade union leaders should not be seen as a substitute for Whitley council discussions.

28. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has recently received from nursing unions concerning the current regrading procedure.

49. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has recently received concerning the regrading of midwives by district health authorities.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have received a number of representations about the re-grading exercise for nurses and midwives, including some from trade unions. I have made it clear, however, that I will not meet representatives of trade unions engaged in attempting to organise industrial action. Neither the Royal College of Nursing nor the Royal College of Midwives have done so and I therefore met representatives of these Colleges on, respectively, 5 and 7 December. Both unions joined me in condemning industrial action, and agreed to support measures designed to help the appeals process work more quickly and effectively. We agreed to continue our efforts to dispel some misunderstandings which appear to have arisen over the regrading exercise. As a result of these friendly and constructive meetings, I am more certain than ever that the new grading structure will come to be seen as a turning point in securing a properly rewarded career structure for the country's nurses and midwives.

33. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of nurses who have received a new grade under the recent review procedures (a) nationally and (b) in the Barnsley district health authority have appealed against their grade.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

64. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many appeals have been made by nurses against their new grading; and when he expects the appeals procedure to be completed.

78. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many appeals are currently being heard concerning health workers' regrading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Appeals against grading are a local matter and we do not hold information centrally on the number of appeals lodged. I recognise the importance of dealing with appeals quickly as well as fairly and I have asked RHA chairmen to adopt a number of measures designed to speed up the appeals system. These include setting up officer level investigations to resolve any obvious mistakes and points of difficulty before the formal appeal stage is reached, and establishing wherever possible more than one appeals' panel. The great majority of officer level investigations for current appeals can be completed by the end of January, and I shall be discussing with chairmen whether it will be possible to have completed the appeals process locally by the spring. However, I have made it clear that no appeals will be heard in any unit from staff who are not working normally so long as they continue their industrial action.

65. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the nurses' grading dispute.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The vast majority of nurses and midwives are working normally and are very satisfied with the outcome of this year's pay award and the associated regrading exercise. This is hardly surprising because it gives them an average pay increase of 17·9 per cent. at a cost to the taxpayer of almost £1,000 million.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff from each of the old grades have been assimilated to each of the new grades in the recent clinical grading structure in Scunthorpe district health authority.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 December 1988]: The information requested is given in the table.

Community Care

21. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the implementation of the recommendations of Sir Roy Griffiths' report on community care.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Barnsley, East (Mr. Patchett) earlier.

37. Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received about future policies on community care.

39. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received seeking expedition of his response to the Griffiths report on community care.

40. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the implementation of the recommendations of Sir Roy Griffiths' report on community care.

53. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received about future policies on community care.

59. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received about future policies on community care.

66. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the implementations of the recommendations of Sir Roy Griffiths' report on community care.

74. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received about future policies on community care.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Members to the reply to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Barnsley, East (Mr. Patchett) earlier today.

Medical Personnel (Statistics)

22. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what are the net increases in the numbers of doctors, dentists, nurses and midwives since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: The overall changes in doctors, dentists, nurses and midwives between September 1979 and September 1987 are:

		Whole-time equivalents	Percentage change
Medical	Increase	4,030	+11·1
Dental	Decrease	50	−1·7
Nursing	Increase	42,430	+12·5
Midwifery	Increase	3,170	+15·5

Bolton General Hospital

23. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to visit the new genito-urinary department at Bolton general hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I have no plans to visit the Bolton general hospital in the near future. The new genito-urinary medicine department has been developed at a cost of £116,000. The facilities that it contains will allow the provision of improved services for the counselling, diagnosis and treatment of patients with genito-urinary infections, including those with conditions related to the HIV infection.

RAWP (Northern Region)

25. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the funding for the Northern regional health authority will be brought up to the resources allocation working party level.

Mr. Mellor: We hope to be able to announce the 1989-90 resource allocations to regional health authorities shortly. The Government are considering the National Health Service management board's report on the review of the resource allocation working party (RAWP) formula in the wider context of the National Health Service review. Longer-term resource allocation decisions will be informed by the outcome of that wider review.

Hypothermia

26. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to assist elderly people to combat hypothermia during the winter months.

30. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what plans he has to assist elderly people to combat hypothermia during the winter months.

61. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to assist elderly people to combat hypothermia during the winter months.

63. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to assist elderly people to combat hypothermia during the winter months.

Mrs. Currie: On 17 November the Government launched this years "Keep Warm Keep Well" campaign. This is a health promotion campaign designed to give people information and advice about how to combat the risks of cold weather and is supported by the Departments of Health, Social Security, Environment, Welsh Office and Energy and several voluntary organisations.

As well as supporting the "Keep Warm Keep Well" campaign, the Department of Social Security provides cold weather payments, the Department of the Environment runs the home insulation grants scheme, and the Department of Energy supports Neighbourhood Energy Action, which organises community insulation projects.

We printed around 750,000 copies of the campaign booklet and there has already been sufficient demand to order a reprint. The telephone helpline on 0800-289404, the Winter Warmth line, is receiving around 200 calls a day.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice his Department gives to the elderly about wrapping up more warmly during winter periods.

Mrs. Currie: Advice on keeping warm in winter is given in the "Keep Warm Keep Well" campaign.

We firmly believe that vulnerable people should be encouraged to take sensible precautions including dressing warmly in cold weather.

Office Space (London)

29. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's plans to rent further office space in central London.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have no plans to rent additional space in central London. We intend to relocate the work of at least 1,000 posts away from the south east to areas where recruitment is easier and rents lower. We plan to vacate some buildings which are in areas of London with high rents.

Medical Techniques

31. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the effect of improved medical techniques on his Department's budget.

Mr. Mellor: There is no precise measure of the resource implications of medical advance, which can both raise or lower costs of treatment and care.

Pensioners (Health in Winter)

34. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to give any further advice to pensioners on keeping healthy during the winter months.

45. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received any representations from pensioners or pensioners' organisations about the advice given by the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) at Reading, on the subject of keeping healthy during the winter.

46. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to give any further advice to pensioners on keeping healthy during the winter months.

48. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received any representations from pensioners or pensioners' organisations about the advice, given by the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) on the subject of keeping healthy during the winter.

76. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to give any further advice to pensioners on keeping healthy during the winter months.

77. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received any representations from pensioners or pensioners' organisations about the advice given by the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) on the subject of keeping healthy during the winter.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave to the hon. Members for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) and for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) earlier today.

Resource Management

35. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the results of pilot projects on resource management in hospitals.

Mr. Mellor: The pilot projects will, in accordance with the agreement entered into by the joint sponsors of the initiative, the NHS management board and the joint consultants committee of the British Medical Association be evaluated fully in October 1989. Recently, interim progress reports have been produced by the various sites and organisations involved in the initiative. These reports indicate that good progress has been made, the commitment of local doctors and staff has been strong and parts of the approach can already usefully be recommended to other health authorities.

Medical Diagnoses

36. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new arrangements his Department is planning to ensure that untried and untested medical diagnoses are properly validated before acceptance within the profession and the courts.

Mrs. Currie: No new arrangements are planned. It is a matter for the clinical judgment of individual clinicians to decide what use they should make of novel diagnostic techniques. On occasion, to assist the medical profession, we issue guidance with the help of the standing medical advisory committee, as with the diagnosis of child sexual abuse. The courts reach their decisions on the basis of the evidence put to them.

Food Poisoning

38. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has received which could help to reduce the incidence of food poisoning.

Mrs. Currie: The Food Act 1984 and the Food Hygiene Regulations are being reviewed and it is proposed to include provisions giving greater control over suspect food and hazardous food premises, making food hygiene training of food handlers a statutory requirement and extending statutory temperature control of food from the catering sector to include food sold by retail.

Specific measures are of course introduced to deal with particular food poisoning problems, as in our present concern over salmonella in eggs.

Eggs

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make it his policy to require eggs to carry Government health warnings;

(2) what advice his Department is issuing to employers and employees about eating eggs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The matter must be kept in proportion. As a sensible precaution, those most at risk —the elderly, the sick, babies and pregnant women— should follow the advice of the chief medical officer and eat only eggs that have been cooked until the white and yolk are solid. However, the risk is very small and healthy people can continue to eat eggs cooked however they wish. We will continue to reassure people on these points as necessary.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give consideration to involving local government environmental health departments in the control of egg production.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Environmental health departments of local authorities are responsible for environmental issues arising from egg production and for hygiene issues post-production.

We have asked them to assist in promulgating my Department's advice to manufacturers, caterers and consumers locally. We have no current plans to involve them in the control of egg production.

Midwives

41. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to discuss conditions of service with representatives of the midwives.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Negotiations over the terms and conditions of nurses' and midwives' employment are a matter for the relevant Whitley council. However, I met representatives of the Royal College of Midwives on 7 December and had a friendly and useful discussion about a range of issues, including the new grading structure and the appeals process.

72. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account was taken of clinical experience when setting the grades of midwives; and what representations he has received from Merseyside midwives concerning their regrading.

Mr. Mellor: I have received some 50 representations from midwives in the Mersey region. I have nothing to add to what I told the House in the debate on the Adjournment on 7 December at columns 407-16.

NHS (Yorkshire)

42. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to improve efficiency in the National Health Service in the Yorkshire region.

Mr. Mellor: Ministers and the National Health Service management board regularly review the performance of all regional health authorities, culminating in an annual ministerial review meeting after which an action plan is set for the coming year. Yorkshire RHA's latest review was in July. A record of that meeting, together with the action plan for 1988-89 which included a number of measures to improve efficiency, was placed in the Library.

Donor Cards

43. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress on the current campaign on donor cards.

Mrs. Currie: As a result of the Department's advertising campaign and media concern, particularly television, public interest in organ donation is high. So far this year some 14 million cards have been distributed compared with 5 million last year.

The range of high street outlets for the cards has been considerably extended through the Department's recent joint venture with the Healthcare Foundation and other initiatives are being discussed. The Departments of Health and Social Security recently issued donor cards to all members of staff.

Kidney transplants in the United Kingdom have risen by 76 per cent. between 1979 and 1987 and other organ transplants have also increased. This year has been a particularly good year for transplants. Because of excellent publicity at the beginning of the year, the first six months saw a 32 per cent. increase in transplants over last year. We expect that 1989 will be a record year for donations.

Health Care Facilities

44. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made towards the establishment of an internal and external market in the provision of health care facilities in the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are considering a number of proposals for improving the delivery of health care and will bring forward our proposals in a White Paper to be published in the new year.

Royal College of Nursing

47. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives of the Royal College of Nursing; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I met representatives of the Royal College of Nursing on 5 December.

We agreed that we should redouble our efforts to explain the regrading exercise and to publicise the very substantial pay increases that the overwhelming majority of nurses and midwives are now receiving. As a result, for the first time the nursing profession will have the proper career structure for which the RCN in particular has consistently argued.

Our discussion concentrated on the working of the appeals procedure, which we both agreed was the outstanding issue. We regretted that the process had been clogged up by the number of spurious claims that nurses and midwives had unfortunately been encouraged to submit. These were clearly delaying progress for those few with genuine grievances. In order to help those nurses and midwives, we agreed that in future health authorities should set up a sifting process at officer level which would enable them to identify and correct any obvious errors in grading in advance of a full appeal hearing. In addition, I have asked RHA chairmen to see that the sifting process is completed, if at all possible, by the end of January. General managers will also be asked to make sure that the operation of the appeals procedure is regarded as a management priority.

The RCN joined us in condemning industrial action and stressed its commitment to putting patients first.

Benzodiazepines

50. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce restrictions on the represcribing of benzodiazepines.

Mr. Mellor: I share the hon. Member's concern about represcribing of benzodiazepines, but we have no plans to introduce restrictions because doctors must be free to prescribe in a way that best suits the needs of each patient. All drugs should be represcribed under controlled conditions and I welcome the initiative of those general practitioners who have begun the difficult process of reviewing the treatment of those of their patients who are on long-term benzodiazepine therapy.

Maternity Units (Leicestershire)

51. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has now received details of the decision by Leicestershire community health council to oppose the closure of the maternity units at St. Mary's hospital, Melton Mowbray, and the Rutland Memorial hospital; and whether he will now advise Leicestershire health authority to abandon those proposals rather than proceed to statutory determination by himself.

Mrs. Currie: The views of the community health council have not been formally sent to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State.

Leicestershire health authority is currently consulting on these proposals; the consultation period ends on 31 December. It would not be right for me to intervene in the way proposed. I must remain impartial as the final decision on the proposals may have to be taken by Ministers, if the community health council opposes the proposals.

Nurses and Midwives

52. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of nurses and midwives who have accepted the current pay offer; what percentage of the total number of nurses and midwives employed by the National Health Service this represents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government's decision to implement in full the recommendations for 1988-89 of the review body for nursing staff, midwives and health visitors was accepted in April by the representatives of all nursing staff, midwives and health visitors within the National Health Service. The acceptance was very prompt, which is not surprising given that this year's pay award and regrading have resulted in an average increase of 17·9 per cent. for nurses and midwives. We do not know how many nurses and midwives are still appealing against the grade that they were given in the light of that acceptance, but the vast majority have accepted their grade and all nurses and midwives have received their pay rise.

Nurses (West Midlands)

54. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of (a) state enrolled nurses, (b) staff nurses and (c) ward sisters in (i) the west midlands region and (ii) nationally have received less then 5 per cent. pay increase in 1988.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No staff nurse or enrolled nurse has received an increase of less than 7 per cent. and 39 per cent. of hospital nursing sisters have been graded at scale F and have received increases ranging from 4·2 per cent. to 13·3 per cent. depending on the incremental point on the pay scale at which the individual is entitled to be paid. We do not hold information about the incremental position of those in each of the new grades centrally.

Drugs

55. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress on the current campaign against drugs.

Mr. Mellor: The Government national publicity campaigns against drugs misuse are part of an overall strategy to reduce both the supply of and the demand for illegal drugs. Independent evaluation shows that the campaigns so far have been widely noticed and reinforced young people's resistance to drug misuse. On 21 November a new phase of GB-wide publicity was launched to emphasise the dangers associated with injecting any drug.

Leukaemia (North Humberside)

56. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to announce the findings of the research programmes funded by his Department on factors affecting the incidence of leukaemia among children in parts of north Humberside.

Mrs. Currie: Research into biomedical questions is primarily the responsibility of the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. The report by Dr. Ray Cartwright on the incidents of childhood leukaemias on north Humberside, which also included information on the incidence of other cancers in children and adults, has been referred for an independent expert assessment and advice as to whether further research may be needed. We will announce the results as soon as possible.

Wandsworth Health Authority

57. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next intends to visit the Wandsworth health authority; and what issues he expects to discuss.

Mrs. Currie: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to visit Wandsworth health authority, but I visited the authority on Monday 5 December when I went to the drug dependency unit at Springfield hospital and also the women's day unit at St. George's hospital, Tooting. In both cases services have transferred smoothly from other facilities and are functioning well.

Cancer Screening

60. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to improve the administration of the cervical cytology testing service in Merseyside; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We issued Departmental guidance on the provision of cervical cancer screening in circular HC(88)1, a copy of which is available in the Library. Its local application is a matter for the health authorities and family practitioner committees concerned. The hon. Member may wish to pursue any local matters with the chairman of the appropriate health authority or family practitioner committee.

62. Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has routinely to include women aged 65 years and over in screening programmes for breast cancer.

Mrs. Currie: The NHS breast cancer screening programme is modelled on the recommendations made in the Forrest report. Having considered the incidence of the disease and the evidence on the benefits of screening in different age groups, the report recommended that the 50-64 age group should be the first to be selected for routine screening. We are following this recommendation. The Forrest report also suggested that screening should be available on request for women aged 65 and over. We have accepted this advice and, once the service becomes available in an area, any woman aged 65 and over who wants to be screened should be able to contact her local screening office to make an appointment.

Our main effort now is to get the arrangements running throughout the country and we would not expect to make any changes until we have had some experience of the present system. The advisory committee on breast cancer screening, which is advising on the development of the service, is keeping the question of age under review.

Any woman, irrespective of her age, who has the slightest cause for concern—for example, a small lump —should arrange to see her GP at once.

Cook-chill Food

67. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals are currently providing maternity patients with food produced through the cook-chill process.

Mrs. Currie: Health authorities are responsible for the delivery of catering services which meet the needs of all their patient groups. Information on the production of food for specific categories of patients is not collected centrally.

"Promoting Better Health"

68. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will report on progress on the primary health care reforms as outlined in "Promoting Better Health."

Mr. Mellor: Discussions are well advanced with representatives of the primary care professions on the implementation of measures to achieve the objectives of the White Paper, "Promoting Better Health" (Cm. 249). Some changes are currently being introduced. For example, dental practice advisers are being appointed and will take up posts early in the new year and extra funds have been made available in the present financial year for the training of family doctors' practice nurses. The Health and Medicines Act 1988, which received Royal Assent on 15 November this year, gives the Secretary of State powers to implement proposals in the White Paper for which powers did not already exist.

"Look After Your Heart"

69. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress of the "Look After Your Heart" campaign.

Mrs. Currie: The "Look After Your Heart" campaign, which aims to contribute to a substantial reduction in the high incidence of coronary heart disease in England, has been most successful during its first 18 months in supporting and encouraging widespread activity at national and local level. Industry and commerce have supported the campaign through joint promotions and a scheme of "healthy living" contracts, which almost 100 companies employing about 2·5 million people have signed. "Look After Your Heart" has also encouraged local activity, providing funding of £395,000 in 18 months for 160 projects. A "heartbeat award" scheme for restaurants and eating establishments which offer healthy food choices and no-smoking areas is also proving most successful.

The campaign, run jointly by the Department and the Health Education Authority, has been continuously evaluated and results show that knowledge of the main risk factors for coronary heart disease has grown, particularly amongst target social class groups.

We plan to develop the campaign with a major drive involving industry, local groups, primary health care activity and special promotions. A new publicity campaign involving television and other advertising will be starting at the end of December 1988.

Air Ambulance Services

70. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will update his Department's circular to health authorities on ambulance service emergency conveyance of patients by air (HSC (I.S.) 196) dated September 1975.

Mrs. Currie: The advice contained within HSC (I.S.) 196 remains valid. However, we are reviewing, with the NHS, the policy on helicopters in the light of developing interest in this form of transport for patients with major trauma.

Hospital Building

71. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the progress of major hospital building schemes costing more than £1 million in the Yorkshire regional health authority area.

Mrs. Currie: The Yorkshire regional health authority's building programme continues to make good progress. Information held centrally shows there are currently 12 schemes, each costing over £1 million, under construction and 32 more at various stages of design and planning. The total value of the region's building programme is over £300 million.

80. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new hospital building projects have been initiated since 1979; and what was the comparable figure for the 1974 to 1979 period.

Mrs. Currie: Information held centrally on health building schemes, each costing over £1 million, shows that 466 schemes have been initiated since 1979 compared to 148 in the period 1974 to 1979.

Coronary Units

73. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is per capita spending on coronary units in hospitals (a) in England and (b) in the north west region.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that we cannot identify spending on coronary units as such centrally. If the hon. Member wishes to pursue these inquiries, I suggest that he discusses the matter with Mr. Bruce Martin QC, chairman of North Western regional health authority, who is responsible for overall management of hospital services within the region.

Trauma Centre

75. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to announce the first British trial of the trauma centre concept.

Mrs. Currie: We are considering the Royal College of Surgeons' report on the management of major injuries, which recommended the establishment of trauma centres. No decisions will be taken until that consideration has been completed.

Ancillary Workers (Pay)

81. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the pay of ancillary workers in the Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Since the last time this matter was raised during questions on 1 November we have received one more letter from an hon. Member.

NHS Review

82. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress he is making with his review of the National Health Service.

83. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress he is making with his review of the National Health Service.

84. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress he is making with his review of the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave to the hon. Members for Norwich, South (Mr. Garrett) and for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 1 November at columns 816-18.

Water

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the future implications for his Department's brief of the recently published Water Bill.

Mrs. Currie: The Department will continue to carry out its present functions.

Mental Health

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from interested groups concerning women and mental health.

Mrs. Currie: We have received several representations from a variety of sources, including, most recently, the report of the Women's National Commission.

I am particularly concerned about the problems some women experience with tranquillisers. There are a number of initiatives to encourage more careful prescribing on benzodiazepines, handle the problems of withdrawal, promote alternatives to tranquillisers, and to provide alternative help for those dependent upon them.

I am sure that the hon. Member is aware of the particular interest that I am taking in this topic.

In-patients

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were treated as in-patients in 1978 and in the latest period of 12 months for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: In National Health Service hospitals in England, there were 5,370,319 in-patients treated in 1979 and in 1987-88 there were 6,619,354. This represents an increase of 23 per cent.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) powered and (b) non-powered wheelchairs are currently on issue from his Department.

Mr. Mellor: These are matters for the Disablement Services Authority, to which the hon. Member should address his questions.

Organ Transplants

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the circular setting out procedures for the donation of organs for transplantation.

Mrs. Currie: We issued health circular HC(88)63 yesterday. It provides guidance on procedures for organ donation. We believe this will increase the number of organs available for transplantation. The circular also asks health authorities to carry out an audit of deaths in intensive care units. The audit will reveal the total potential for organ donation and the reasons why donation sometimes does not take place.

Prosthetists

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many prosthetists there are in England; and how many amputees in England there are per prosthetist;

(2) what plans he has for increasing the training facilities for prosthetists: and how many he proposes should be trained each year.

Mr. Mellor: These are matters for the Disablement Services Authority, to which the hon. Member should address his questions.

Health Authority Buildings (Closure)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any adopted criteria exist within (a) the central Nottinghamshire or (b) other health authority areas which give financial incentives to managers of services for (i) closure or (ii) temporary closure of health authority buildings.

Mrs. Currie: No. Managers are required to provide, on behalf of their authority, health care for their local community. Closures are made for many reasons and may be essential to improve services.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether in-use health authority properties can be closed on a temporary basis after consultation documents have been issued and prior to the expiry date of such consultations.

Mrs. Currie: Yes. Under the Community Health Council Regulations 1985 a closure may be made without consultation if the district health authority is satisfied that this is in the interests of the Health Service.

Central Nottinghamshire Health Authority

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will give a breakdown of transfer moneys payable to Central Nottinghamshire health authority from other health authorities for the provision of services for the mentally ill residing in the Central Nottinghamshire health authority since June 1987;

(2) if he will list sales of National Health Service property and land in the Central Nottinghamshire health authority area since 1979;

(3) if he will list all temporary closures of National Health Service premises in the Central Nottinghamshire health authority area since 1979, showing which facilities so closed are currently open;

(4) if he will list the occasions since 1979 when consultation documents have been issued in the Central Nottinghamshire health authority area on properties in use by them, which have been closed on a temporary basis by the authority prior to the expiry date of consultation.

Mrs. Currie: The responsibility for the provision of local health services rests with the district health authority concerned, in this case Central Nottinghamshire health authority, which is best placed to determine the most effective and efficient way of delivering health care, taking account of patient demand and budgetary constraints.

The hon. Member may, therefore, wish to contact the chairman of the Central Nottinghamshire health authority to obtain the information that he seeks. I understand that the district general manager has indicated that she would be happy to meet the hon. Member at any convenient time.

Health Buildings

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans for changing the current guidelines contained within HSC (IS) 207 entitled, "Closure or Change: Use of Health Buildings"; and if consultations will take place before any new guidelines are issued.

Mrs. Currie: Yes. We plan to revise the guidelines in the near future. Before the new guidelines are issued we shall consult all interested parties.

NHS Beds

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many National Health Service beds were lost in (a) Waltham Forest and (b) the United Kingdom since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: From 1979 to 1988, the number of patients treated in Waltham Forest per available bed rose from 9·9 to 17·8 and in England from 14·9 to 22·3. The figures for the rest of the United Kingdom are matters for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Average daily available beds and number of in-patients treated in Waltham Forest and in England are as follows:

	1979	1987-88	Difference
Waltham Forest
Average daily available beds	3,311	2,254	−1,057
In-patients treated	32,753	40,052	+7,299
England
Average daily beds available	361,670	296,777	−64,893
In-patients treated	5,400,120	6,619,354	+1,219,234

Primary Health Care

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he intends to raise standards of primary health care and make services more responsive to the needs of the consumer.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies given on 12 July 1988 to my hon. Friends the Members for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) and for Edgbaston (Dame J. Knight) at column 554.

Medicine Commission

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to receive the Medicine Commission's annual report for 1987.

Mr. Mellor: I have received the report and copies have today been laid before both Houses of Parliament in accordance with section 5(2) of the Medicines Act 1968.

Bound volumes will shortly be placed in the Libraries containing the 1987 reports of the Medicines Commission, the Committee on Safety of Medicines, the Veterinary Products Committee, the British Pharmacopoeia Commission, the Committee on the Review of Medicines and the Committee on Dental and Surgical Materials.

The bound volumes also include the code of practice on declaration of interests in the pharmaceutical industry which is followed by members of the Medicines Commission, the Committee on Safety of Medicines, the Committee on Review of Medicines and the Committee on Dental and Surgical Materials, and their sub-committees. The code provides that members should declare personal interests in the industry to the Department of Health. They should also declare them where relevant at meetings of the commission or committees when they should in addition declare any interests their academic departments may have in the products under discussion. The code provides that information about members' personal interests shall be published with the annual reports. This information is published for the first time with the 1987 reports. I have decided to extend the range of interests to be declared and published so as to cover the interests of members' departments as well as personal interests. These interests will be published with the 1988 annual reports. This code is not appropriate for the British Pharmacopoeia Commission, which is not involved in licensing matters. I understand that a similar code has recently been adopted by the Veterinary Products Committee under which members must declare interests to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and that the necessary follow-up action is in hand.

I am glad to pay tribute to the valuable work done in the public interest by the distinguished members of the Medicines Act advisory bodies. Members follow the ethical standards set by the code of practice, and any involvements they may have in research sponsored by the pharmaceutical industry helps them to keep in touch with important aspects of drug development while avoiding conflicts of interest which might otherwise impair the objectivity of the scientific and clinical advice they give. I have full confidence in the personal integrity of the members concerned.

Nursing Qualifications

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to give a greater role in the examination of nursing qualifications to the Royal College of Nursing.

Mr. Mellor: The statutory responsibility for establishing and improving the standard of nurse training and for approving educational institutions and courses rests with the United Kingdom Central Council and the four national boards for nursing, midwifery and health visiting. The Royal College of Nursing's institute of advanced nursing education is an important provider of post-registration education and training, whose work we fully support. I hope that the institute will continue to develop higher standards of clinical excellence within the profession through its activities.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Rectors and Vicars (Contracts)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, how many team rectors or vicars, for each of the last five years, have not had their contract renewed and have been asked to vacate the team rectory.

Mr. Alison: I regret that the commissioners do not have this information. Records are normally kept by the legal secretaries to diocesan bishops.

WALES

Waiting List Fund

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will announce the allocation to the Welsh health authority from the waiting list fund for 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Decisions on public expenditure in Wales in 1989-90 are current'y being finalised and will be announced shortly.

Employment Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many trainees are on employment training in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: At 2 December 1988 there were 6,468 participants in employment training in Wales.

Planning Policy

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what guidance his Department has offered to local planning authorities on when they may consider the needs and interests of communities, including the protection and character and way of life of communities, as a factor in decisions relating to planning permission;

(2) what guidance his Department offers in the form of a planning policy guidance note, to include the needs and interests of communities, including the protection of the character and way of life of communities, within the provisions of their development plans;

(3) if he will make it his policy to require local planning authorities to include the social needs and interests of communities within the provisions of their development plans and local plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I intend issuing guidance on the place of the Welsh language in development plans and planning control in the very near future. The Department's current policy, as regards development plans, is set out in paragraph 4.10 of Welsh Office circular 43/84, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Crown Agents

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for the future of the Crown Agents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: In 1984 my right hon. Friend the Member for Aylesbury (Mr. Raison) announced measures to improve the efficiency and competitiveness of the Crown Agents with a view to their privatisation in due course. Those measures, which included staff reductions, a change from public sector terms of service to private sector terms and the sale of the organisation's principal property at Millbank, have been implemented.

Her Majesty's Government have no immediate plans to privatise the Crown Agents. They have agreed with the Crown Agents certain further measures to put them on a sounder footing in the public sector. These measures involve further changes in the business and capital structure of the organisation designed to improve profitability. The Crown Agents will retain their core activities of procurement, financial and technical services. They have given up, or will give up, speculative trading and certain other activities which are not closely related to their main business. These other activities include two postage stamp production and sale companies, which the Crown Agents have sold, and some pensions services which are being taken over by the Overseas Development Administration.

The measures introduced from 1984 onwards reduced permanent staff numbers from some 1,100 to about 800. The further changes will involve a reduction in staff numbers of about 55. Most of these jobs will be transferred with the activities that are taken over by other organisations. The balance of the reduction in staff will be achieved through agreed redundancies or natural wastage.

The Crown Agents have customarily provided, and continue to provide, valuable services to the Overseas Development Administration, their major client, in respect of procurement and loan and grant administration. These services have demonstrated their worth in terms of securing better value for money and ensuring propriety and expedition in the international delivery of goods and services provided under the overseas aid programme. In recent years the Crown Agents have diversified their sources of business to reduce their dependence on the Overseas Development Administration and, in international competition, have won substantial business financed by other governments and by multilateral agencies.

The proposed changes in the capital structure will provide a more commercial basis for the Crown Agents, in particular a debt equity ratio more appropriate to the size and nature of the business. Subject to parliamentary approval of the new estimate in the supplementary round, I propose to use existing powers to make a grant of about £15·8 million effectively to convert to equity all but about £2·8 million of the Crown Agents' commencing capital debt to the national loans fund, which they assumed under the Crown Agents Act 1979. The normal rules for premature repayment will apply. These sums will be additional to the Overseas Development Administration's existing public expenditure survey provisions and will involve a net charge to the Reserve of around £3 million; they will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The Crown Agents have undergone a continuous process of change since incorporation in 1980. It reflects credit on the board, senior management and staff of the organisation that this process has been carried through successfully in a difficult period. I am confident that the additional measures announced today will strengthen the Crown Agents' position and leave them better placed to meet the challenges of the 1990s.

TRANSPORT

New Railway Line (Kent)

100. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the environmental effects of British Rail's proposals to build a new railway line through Kent.

Mr. Portillo: I have received a large number of representations on this subject. It will be important for British Rail to take proper account of the environment in its design of the line.

Refrigerated Vehicles

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps have been taken to ensure that the new maximum width of refrigerated vehicles will be enabled to pass each other with safety on class A roads from January 1989.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The increase in permitted width of refrigerated vehicles—of 2 cm—is too small to require particular steps to be taken to enable them to pass safely on class A roads.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on British Rail's proposals for terminals and new rail links in central London to connect with the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail's plans for the first few years of operation through the tunnel involve a new passenger terminal at Waterloo and the use of the west London line by through trains to the north. BR's report on long-term route and terminal capacity for Channel tunnel train services, published in July 1988, identified three possible sites (White City, King's Cross and Stratford) for a second London passenger terminal and possible route corridors through Kent and London once traffic through the tunnel has grown sufficiently to exhaust the capacity of Waterloo.

Ports

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that British ports will be able to compete on an equal basis in the single European market with other north European ports.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my answer on 6 December at columns 97-98 to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin).

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the level of subsidy, both direct and indirect, received by the ports of Glasgow, Hamburg, Antwerp and Rotterdam, over the last five years.

Mr. Portillo: We know what percentage contributions the national and local government authorities make to expenditure on certain categories of port facilities in Hamburg, Antwerp and Rotterdam, but not how much money this and any other aid there may be from public funds has amounted to in any given period. The European Commission is studying our proposal for more transparent financial relations between public authorities and port authorities within the EC and for the accounts of port authorities to be published.

Orange Badges

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people are in possession of an orange badge at the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information supplied by local authorities shows that at March 1987 there were about 840,000 badge-holders in England and Wales—over 14 per cent. more than at March 1986. We estimate that there are currently some 70,000 badge-holders in Scotland.

European Clearway Ferry

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the final date by which a decision has to be taken on whether a prosecution will be pursued by his Department arising from the fire on the European Clearway ferry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: Informations have to be laid within six months of the alleged offences. A decision would need to be taken before the expiry of that period.

Supply Boat Falderntor

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking about the fire aboard the supply boat Falderntor in the British sector of the North sea on 26 November.

Mr. Channon: The engine room fire aboard the Falderntor is under investigation by surveyors from the See-Berufsgenossenschaft (SBG) as the vessel is registered in the Federal Republic of Germany and the incident occurred outside United Kingdom territorial waters. My officials are in contact with the SBG.

Buffer Stop Collisions

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many multiple units and locomotives were involved in buffer stop collisions in 1985, 1986 and 1987 for each category; what type of braking system was involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: Details regarding the number of buffer stop collisions in 1985, 1986 and 1987 are set out in the table. Data on the type of brake involved are not available as railway authorities are not required to specify such detail in reporting accidents of this sort to the Department.

Ferries (Fires)

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fires have been reported to his Department occurring on British-registered ferries sailing out of British ports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: Eleven such fires have been reported to my Department between 1 January and 8 December 1988. All these incidents have been, or are being, followed up.

Bicester and Waddon Foxhounds

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will call for a report from British Rail into the circumstances leading to the 9 am train from Poole to Glasgow being forced to make an emergency stop at Little Mill crossing, Cropredy on the Oxfordshire/Warwickshire border on Monday, 5 December, when the Bicester and Waddon foxhounds were obstructing the main railway line.

Mr. Portillo: I see no need to call for a report on this incident.

Volunteer Drivers

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he has made in his representations to the EEC Commission about the provision in the second transport directive relating to the practice in the United Kingdom of permitting volunteer drivers to be in charge of small coaches for transporting disabled persons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The proposals do not appear to go far enough since they would still involve a second test and higher medical standards for minibus drivers. These requirements would cause serious problems for organisations relying on volunteer drivers.

The Government will continue to press for whatever changes are needed to allow these voluntary services to continue their valuable work. We have written to the commission to point out the safety record of minibuses. The table sets out the figures.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Elders plc

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assurances were sought from Elders plc that it would not buy shares in Scottish and Newcastle Breweries plc, when it was advised that its bid was to be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; what assurances were received from Elders; and what alterations he proposes in order to make assurances mandatory and binding in future cases.

Mr. Maude: Elders' advisers were clearly informed by the Office of Fair Trading at the time of the announcement of the reference that undertakings not to purchase further shares in Scottish and Newcastle were being sought. In the light of Elders' action the Secretary of State made an interim order under the Fair Trading Act 1973 requiring Elders not to acquire any further shares and not to vote any shares in Scottish and Newcastle above 15 per cent.

The Secretary of State also announced that in future a similar prohibition on further share purchases will come into effect at the time a reference to the MMC is announced. At present this requires a new order to be made for each reference. It is intended that this prohibition will be put on a permanent footing by inclusion in the provisions relating to mergers in the forthcoming Companies Bill.

FIMBRA

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he intends to seek to review and amend the protection afforded by the financial services legislation to FIMBRA members against libel actions and retaliatory loss of business should they report suspicions of wrongful activities to that body; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: If a FIMBRA member properly draws allegations of wrongdoing to the attention of a regulatory body having relevant regulatory functions under the FS Act his position will be no different from that of any other person acting similarly. Such communications should, in the absence of malice, be protected by qualified privilege, under the law of libel. I see no reason at this stage for seeking to change this position. If there has been any wrongful interference with the business of persons who have reported suspicions to a relevant body it shall be open to them to take appropriate legal action.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has concerning the total number of people employed by FIMBRA and each of the other self-regulatory organisations to scrutinise applications for membership; how many such applications were processed in each case in each of the last six months; and how many man hours per application were spent on average on each application.

Mr. Maude: This is a matter for the organisations concerned.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish in the Official Report a copy of the guidelines issued by the Securities and Investments Board on the procedures which should be adopted by self-regulatory organisations such as FIMBRA when suspending their members.

Mr. Maude: This is a matter for the Securities and Investments Board.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish in the Official Report a copy of the guidelines adopted by FIMBRA concerning their procedures when suspending members.

Mr. Maude: This is a matter for FIMBRA.

Restaurants and Hotels

Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many trading standards officers there are in the United Kingdom; how many are required to monitor compliance with the proposed voluntary code of practice on service, cover and minimum charges in restaurants and hotels amongst the 67,000 establishments concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The purpose of the code of practice is to provide guidance to traders to help them to avoid misleading price indications. It would be a matter for each local weights and measures authority to decide if, in respect of particular circumstances, it was necessary for them to monitor compliance with the code.

The number of trading standards officers in the United Kingdom are contained in the following tables.

Table 1
Great Britain

Year ending 31 March 1987	Number
England	1,207
Scotland	139
Wales	97

Note: The figures have been collated from the annual returns of local weights and measures authorities.

Table 2

Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether restaurants and hotels which suggest a voluntary service charge are liable to value added tax and national insurance on those charges; and what provision will be made in the voluntary code of practice to be introduced under the Consumer Protection Act 1987 in respect of those items.

Mr. Forth: Restaurants and hotels which suggest voluntary service charges are not liable for VAT on those charges. National insurance would be payable only where an employer controlled the distribution amongst staff of any voluntary service charges received.

The code of practice for traders on price indications advises that all price indications given to ordinary consumers, by whatever means, should include VAT. It further advises that suggested optional sums, in addition to the price, whether for service or any other item, should not be included in bills presented to customers. No reference is made to national insurance, which is outside the scope of the code.

Electronic Communications

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he expects to publish the report of the steering group set up in 1987 to advise on the prospects of the development of the electronic communications infrastructure in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins: The report by the communications steering group, "The Infrastructure For Tomorrow", has been published today by HMSO along with an associated report "Evolution of the United Kingdom Communications Infrastructure" by PA consulting group. Copies of both reports have been deposited in the Library of the House. They are being published as a contribution to the discussion about the United Kingdom's future communications infrastructure needs.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Land Registry Office

101. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Attorney-General what is the current number of cases before the Land Registry Office awaiting processing; what is the average waiting time; and what action he proposes to take to reduce this backlog.

The Attorney-General: The total number of cases held at the Land Registry at various stages of processing is 1,168,052.

The average time taken to complete an application is 16 weeks. Dealings with the whole of the land in a title, which represent 74 per cent. of the cases received, are completed in an average of nine weeks.

In addition to the recruitment and training of over 2,000 staff since April 1988, new work initiatives to improve productivity have been introduced. The measures are expected to reduce the backlog, provided that the volume of applications does not rise substantially.

Republic of Ireland (Extradition)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General how many applications for extradition from the Republic of Ireland have had to be resubmitted, because the initial application was deemed by Republic of Ireland authorities to be insufficient in content, during the past 12 months.

The Attorney-General: No requests for extradition submitted to the authorities of the Republic of Ireland during the past 12 months have had subsequently to be resubmitted because they were deemed insufficient in content. In cases unaffected by the Irish Extradition (Amendment) Act 1987, the only documents required of United Kingdom police forces by Irish law are warrants of arrest and affidavits and certificates supporting them. No further explanation of such cases ordinarily is required.

In cases to which the 1987 Act does apply, sufficient information has to be given to the Irish Attorney-General to satisfy him that the relevant United Kingdom prosecuting authority has a clear intention to prosecute and that this intention is founded upon the existence of sufficient evidence.

Six applications for extradition falling into this category have been submitted during the past 12 months. In four of those cases the Irish Attorney-General has authorised the backing of warrants for the fugitive's arrest. In one case, that of Patrick Ryan, he has declined to do so, for the reasons which he has made public. The sixth case, submitted to him on 21 October, is still receiving his consideration.

"Sinclair User"

Mr. Hind: To ask the Attorney-General if he will prosecute the publishers of Sinclair User for offering to supply an intoxicating substance within the meaning of section 1 of the Intoxicating Substance (Supply) Act 1985, in an advertisement carried on page 76 of the December 1988 edition; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions has asked for police inquiries to be made into this matter. I shall write to my hon. Friend once those inquiries have been completed.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the numbers of Iraqi diplomats expelled in each year from the United Kingdom from 1970 to 1987, inclusive.

Mr. Waldegrave: As the information is not readily available, I shall write to the hon. Member once it is to hand.

Antarctic

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to protect the environment of the Antarctic.

Mr. Eggar: Proposals for consideration at the next Antarctic treaty consultative meeting, to be held in Paris in October 1989, include the creation of a new category of protected area and a revised code of conduct for the disposal of waste. They are the result of requests for advice made by earlier consultative meetings to the Scientific Committee on Antarctic Research (SCAR). The United Kingdom participates fully in such consultative meetings.

Western Europe (Security)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has anything to add to his comments made to the Western European Union Assembly on Wednesday 7 December concerning security of Western Europe in the light of the speech made to the United Nations by President Gorbachev on that date.

Mr. Waldegrave: The cuts in Soviet forces announced by Mr. Gorbachev at the United Nations on 7 December represent an important and welcome first step towards securing a better balance of conventional forces in Europe, though they would still leave the Warsaw pact with superiority over the Alliance of some 2.5:1 in tanks and artillery (compared to approximately 3:1 at present). We and our allies hope to build on this hopeful development at the conventional stability talks due to start early next year in Vienna, where we will be pressing for the total and verifiable elimination of disparities in weapon systems relevant to surprise attack and offensive action.

Dependent Territories (Health Services)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, prior to the implementation of the findings of the review of health services in the dependent territories, he will take urgent steps to provide assistance to Sterling Clarke, Vera Daniel, Sonia Cabey, Robert Fergus, David Favell, Michael White and David Harris to enable them to travel to the United Kingdom for cardiac orthopaedic and ocular treatment not available in Montserrat, about which the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe has written to him.

Mr. Eggar: The Government of Montserrat are responsible for their own internal affairs, including the provision of health care. This was one of the subjects that I discussed during my recent visit.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Reform

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action has been taken to inform parents and school governors of the provisions of the Education Reform Act 1988, and what costs are involved.

Mrs. Rumbold: Copies of the following have been sent to every governing body since the passing of the Education Reform Act 1988 to help inform school governors and parents.

Primary School Head Teachers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what evidence his Department has received about turnover among primary school head teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The Department estimates that in the year ending March 1986 the proportion of head teachers in England leaving the maintained nursery and primary sector was 7·3 per cent.

The most recent survey by the local authorities' conditions of service advisory board, for the calendar year 1987, shows turnover of 4·8 per cent. among primary head teachers in England and Wales, compared with 7·2 per cent. from a similar survey for the financial year 1985-86.

GCSE System

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the impact of the GCSE system on university courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The first awards of GCSE certificates were made in the summer of 1988, and the holders would not expect to enter higher education before autumn 1990. It would be premature to assess any possible effects. The GCE examining boards have taken account, in their continual revision of A-level syllabuses, of changes needed in the light of GCSE. Modifications to A-levels and subsequent higher education courses may be needed, but revolutionary changes are in general neither necessary nor desirable.

"A Strategy for the Science Base"

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made towards a response to the advice of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils, "A Strategy for the Science Base", and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend is taking account of the ABRC's strategy advice in the continuing development of detailed policies for the science base. These will be substantially underpinned by the £306 million increase in the science budget over the next three years which my right hon. Friend announced on 1 November at column 605.

Science Teachers

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many science teachers there are at present in schools; and how many of these are fully qualified for this subject.

Mr. Butcher: Estimates of the number of teachers of science subjects, with and without a science qualification, available from the 1984 secondary school staffing survey of maintained schools in England are as follows:

Subject	Number teaching the subject	Number of these with a post A-level qualification in the subject	Proportion of total tuition in the subject provided by teachers with a post A-level qualification in it
Biology	14,300	11,800 (82 per cent.)	91 per cent.
Chemistry	11,800	9,400 (80 per cent.)	91 per cent.
Physics	12,600	8,800 (70 per cent.)	83 per cent.
General or combined science[1]	28,400	6,800 (24 per cent.)	28 per cent.
Other sciences[1]	7,500	3,000 (40 per cent.)	56 per cent.

[1] Teachers with a post A-level qualification in "general or combined science" and in "other sciences" exclude those with qualifications specifically in biology, chemistry or physics.

A further secondary school staffing survey was conducted in 1988. The results of this are expected to be available shortly.

Exam Results

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the percentages of school leavers obtaining no graded result in GCE and CSE for each year since 1970-71.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The table relates to the percentage of English school leavers with no A-level pass nor any graded result at GCE O-level or CSE.

[2] The numbers of school leavers fell in 1973 following the raising of the minimum school leaving age from 15 to 16 in September 1972.

Teacher Training

Mr. Fatchett To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure that school subjects not specified as foundation subjects of the national curriculum will be safeguarded in courses of initial and in-service teacher training.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is confident that the full range of what is taught in schools will continue to be included both in courses of initial teacher training and in-service teacher training activities.

Research

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if the Natural Environment Research Council has any plans to fund interdisciplinary research into the interactions between sea birds, fish stocks and commercial fisheries in Shetland and neighbouring waters.

Mr. Jackson: I understand from the Natural Environment Research Council that it is considering a proposal from a university group on the interaction between sea birds and sand eels. A decision will be taken in the spring, following a full peer review of the proposal.

Medical Research Council

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received the annual report of the Medical Research Council for 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The annual report of the Medical Research Council for 1987-88 has been submitted to me under the requirements of the Science and Technology Act 1965. A copy has been laid before the House, and the report is being published today.

I was most interested to study the report, and in an eventful year for the council, I was particularly encouraged to note:

i. the wide-ranging studies being undertaken on AIDS, including research on the development of vaccines and drugs, epidemiological studies on heterosexual transmission and on infection in infants, research on the social and biological factors influencing transmission in Africa, and the introduction of collaborative international research agreements.

ii. exciting progress on the influence of specific strutural features of the human B-globin gene on its expression, with important implications for the development of new therapeutic agents and new therapies such as for human inherited diseases.

iii. research of direct relevance to the health services, particularly a controlled study of outpatient cataract surgery, monitoring of the performance of intensive care units, and a controlled trial of community based care after hospital discharge.

iv. research on rehabilitation for those with head and spinal injuries, including the treatment of incontinence and the restoration of limb movement in paraplegic and tetraplegic patients.

v. the successful establishment of a centre for collaborative research, dedicated to work jointly with industry on strategic research problems which have the potential to lead to exploitable new products and processes.

Local Authority Employees

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to protect the rights of local authority employees who are re-employed by (a) grant-maintained schools and (b) city technology colleges or city colleges for technology of the arts.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: It has always been my intention to protect the employment rights of staff moving from the local authority sector to either grant-maintained schools, city technology colleges or city colleges for the technology of the arts. Subject to the outcome of the necessary consultations, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment proposes to bring grant-maintained schools, city technology colleges and city colleges for the technology of the arts within the scope of the Redundancy Payments (Local Government) (Modification) Order 1983, with effect from 1 April 1989.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Harland and Wolff

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the precise nature and terms of the negotiations presently under way with Bulk Transport Shipping, Mr. Ugur Mengercioglu and Sealink British Ferries on the proposed sell-off of Harland and Wolff and on the state of his discussions with the management and employees of Harland and Wolff on their proposed buy-out.

Mr. Viggers: No. The companies interested in acquiring Harland and Wolff have asked that negotiations should be confidential. I have met recently Sealink which is considering its future requirement for ferries; and I have also held discussions with senior managers of the company about a proposed management/employee buy-out. No firm proposal has yet been tabled.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will review his policy of preventing Harland and Wolff competing for new contracts while the company remains in public ownership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: The Government believe that the best prospects for Harland and Wolff lie in its return to the private sector and they are not willing to permit the company to enter into new contracts until future arrangements for the yard are resolved.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what safeguards on future employment levels the Government are seeking in their negotiations with potential purchasers of (a) Harland and Wolff and (b) Shorts.

Mr. Viggers: Prospective purchasers of both Harland and Wolff and Shorts are being asked to address a number of specific matters in their proposals, including the future levels of employment in the companies. In the long run, however, employment levels will be determined by commercial success.

Short Brothers plc

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the proposed timetable for the sale of Shorts and the Government's contingency plans to safeguard the future of the company if no suitable offers are received.

Mr. Viggers: Interested parties have already been asked to register their interest with the Government's merchant bank advisers and an information memorandum is being prepared which will be issued to a selected short list. The Government are committed to the privatisation of Shorts and their preference is that the company should be sold as a single unit. Beyond this, I have nothing to add to my statement of 21 July.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his plans to produce a series of mini-prospectuses for potential purchasers of Shorts indicating the availability of sections of the company for separate purchase.

Mr. Viggers: I have no plans to produce a series of mini-prospectuses.

Game Birds

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what tests have been carried out on game birds in the areas of Northern Ireland affected by the Chernobyl disaster; and what has been the result of the tests.

Mr. Needham: During the winters of 1986-87 and 1987-88 the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland arranged for tests to assess the levels of caesium 134 and 137 in game birds which migrate to the Province from areas in northern Europe which were particularly affected by radioactive pollution from Chernobyl. The results of the surveys, which were published, showed that there was no danger to health from eating game birds. I am arranging for copies of the press statements issued in March 1987 and June 1988, including schedules of the test results, to be placed in the Library.

Health Boards (Grading Appeals)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the machinery to be used by health boards in Northern Ireland to hear appeals about the new grading system; and about the advice he has given to health boards about the methods and time scale for resolving any problems.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 13 December 1988]: Health and social services boards are reviewing informally the grades of nurses who are unhappy with their new grades. Staff who remain dissatisfied may make a formal appeal using the normal appeals procedure agreed by the general council. As there is yet no indication of the likely number of nurses who will make use of the formal procedures I have not given advice to boards about the methods and timetable for resolving problems which may arise. I shall keep the matter under review.

HOME DEPARTMENT

United Reform Church

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has sent to letters sent to him dated 8 July, 16 September and 29 November from the Reverend Michael Davies, moderator of the Thames North province of the United Reform Church; and if he will make a statement concerning the delay in responding.

Mr. Renton: I am writing to the hon. Member.

Smoke Detectors

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent consultations his Department has had with chief fire officers over smoke detectors.

Mr. John Patten: Smoke alarms have been discussed with representatives of chief fire officers, in the context of publicity within the forum of the Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council at its meeting on 22 September and also at recent meetings of some of the council's subsidiary committees. We shall be writing to chief fire officers in the Thames and Granada television regions this week seeking their support for a further public education campaign based on television advertising in the new year.

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is yet able to report progress on pilot schemes being conducted to place smoke detectors in local authority domestic accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: A Home Office research project with Tameside metropolitan borough council and Greater Manchester county fire service, under which smoke alarms are to be installed in 10,000 homes in the Tameside area of Greater Manchester, was formally launched on 6 December. The neighbourhoods and dwellings are being selected on as random a basis as possible to reflect a wide cross-section of the community and local authority dwellings are included in the scheme.

The results will be monitored over the next three years to find out the overall effectiveness of smoke alarms in alerting occupants to the outbreak of fire and reducing fire casualties.

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent consultations his Department has had with home safety organisations over smoke detectors.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Office consults widely on fire safety matters but there have been no specific consultations with home safety organisations in recent months.

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent consultations his Department has had with local authorities over smoke detectors.

Mr. John Patten: Smoke alarms have been discussed with local authorities' representatives in the context of publicity within the forum of the Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council at its meeting on 22 September and also at recent meetings of some of the council's subsidiary committees.

Fires

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the latest available figures of fires in dwellings and other occupied buildings by source of ignition.

Mr. John Patten: The latest available information relates to accidental fires in dwellings and other occupied buildings in 1986 analysed by source of ignition, and is published in tables 3 and 34 of "Fire Statistics United Kingdom 1986". Figures for 1987 will be published on 20 December in table 3 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin 39/88, "Summary Fire Statistics United Kingdom 1987".

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the figures for fatal and non-fatal casualties from accidental fires in dwellings by source of ignition in 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested for 1984, 1985 and 1986 is published in table 11 of "Fire Statistics United Kingdom 1986". Figures for 1987 will be published on 20 December in table 11 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin 39/88, "Summary Fire Statistics United Kingdom 1987".

Cable Television

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to seek to ensure that all films shown on cable television meet the same standards of classification as those applied under the Video Recordings Act 1984.

Mr. Renton: All cable services are regulated by the Cable Authority, established by the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984. I understand that the Authority has approved a self-classification process for films not classified by the British Board of Film Classification (BBFC), using a comparable classification scheme. The authority has taken further steps to safeguard viewers, by developing guidelines for the scheduling and identification of films shown on cable according to these classifications. A film or uncut version of a film refused certification by the BBFC would be similarly rejected under the authority's cable classification system.

Immigration

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the revised guidelines on the handling of representations by hon. Members in immigration cases will come into effect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I have made certain amendments to the provisions of the draft revised guidelines first circulated on 18 July in the light of points made to my hon. Friend the Minister of State in the debate on 10 November. My hon. Friend is writing to all Members today enclosing the final text of the revised guidelines and a copy has also been placed in the Library. The revised guidelines will be implemented on 3 January 1989 in respect of all representations received on or after that date.

The guidelines issued on 18 July by my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary in connection with Members' representations about the operation of the immigration control overseas will also come into effect as from 3 January 1989.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement about the outcome of the meeting of European Community immigration Ministers in Athens on 9 December.

Mr. Hurd: This was the fifth such meeting following an initiative taken during the United Kingdom Presidency in 1986 to help prepare the EC's approach to the creation of the single market by the end of 1992 so far as the movement of persons is concerned.

On this occasion the meeting took place after the meeting of the European Council, upon which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister reported to the House on 6 December at columns 173 to 186. Meeting in Rhodes, the European Council, in its final communiqué on 3 December, noting that the achievement of objectives in relation to frontiers was linked to progress in intergovernmental co-operation to combat terrorism and other serious crime, indicated that member states would each appoint a co-ordinator to help the Community achieve results. Although there are already established arrangements within the United Kingdom, I signified, at the Athens meeting, the United Kingdom Government's support for this proposal whose implementation is now being given urgent study amongst EC partners.

Otherwise the Athens meeting's main work was to review the progress of the ad hoc working group on immigration and its sub-groups on asylum and fraudulent travel papers. Ministers noted the linkages between aligning visa policy, frontier controls and asylum practice in the drive to simplify controls at EC internal frontiers, and took account of various practical measures identified for action or further study. It appears that, if a basis for agreement can be found on which state should be responsible for considering individual applications for asylum, most EC states will need to legislate to give it effect.

In the context of the meeting, I took the opportunity to mention the Government's intention to introduce next spring a single immigration channel for all nationals of the EC (including British nationals) entering the country. The aim of this change is to reduce, as far as possible, the levels of checks on EC nationals entering the United Kingdom without disturbing our ability to maintain adequate controls on nationals of third countries.

At the same time, I reminded the meeting that there could be no question of abandoning checks on third country nationals at internal frontiers in the foreseeable future. This was a point emphasised by my right hon. Friend on 6 December and in which the United Kingdom is supported by a number of EC partners. This means that checks will have to be maintained on all travellers to ensure that the authenticity of their claims may be verified.

Further, although it arose as part of separate consideration it is relevant to add that the Trevi group's meeting which immediately followed that of immigration Ministers—and upon which I shall be reporting separately—considered the implication of 1992 for the maintenance of successful defence in depth against terrorism and serious crime. It decided to authorise further study of how to strike the right balance between greater freedom of movement for the development of the Community on the one hand and, on the other, creating an open market for terrorists and major criminals.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and what percentage of overseas applicants for entry to the United Kingdom are awaiting reconsideration of their cases on the basis of DNA tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ban on Drinking in Public Places

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider extending the experimental ban on drinking in public places to encompass the town of Beverley.

Mr. John Patten: Seven local authorities, including Coventry, are trying out the experimental byelaw which makes it an offence to drink alcohol in a public place and we have no plans to extend the experiment. I believe that it is sensible to wait and see how this measure works out in practice in these areas before deciding whether to offer the byelaw for general adoption by local authorities.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Services

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what account he takes of reports of the relevant United States congressional committees when considering improvements in hon. Members' services.

Mr. Wakeham: The House of Commons (Services) Committeee and its sub-committes take account of all relevant information that is available. If the hon. Member has any particular report in mind may I suggest that, in the first instance, he brings it to the attention of the appropriate sub-committee.

Accommodation

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. or right hon. Members have not been allocated a room.

Mr. Wakeham: Five. However, there are sufficient desks for allocation to all right hon. and hon. Members, whether they choose to accept them or not.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. and right hon. Members (a) have been allocated a single room, (b) share a room with one other hon. or right hon. Member, (c) share a room with two other hon. or right hon. Members and (d) share a room with three or more hon. or right hon. Members.

Mr. Wakeham: A total of 28[illegible] right hon. and hon. Members occupy single rooms, 230 share a room with one other right hon. or hon. Member, 36 share a room with two other hon. Members and 95 share a room with three or more right hon. or hon. Members.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. and right hon. Members have rooms allocated to parliamentary assistants or secretaries.

Mr. Wakeham: None. Rooms are allocated to right hon. and hon. Members and it is up to them to decide what use is made of their accommodation.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many parliamentary assistants or secretaries have been allocated a room; and how many share a room with (a) one other person, (b) two other persons and (c) more than three persons.

Mr. Wakeham: None. However there are 422 right hon. and hon. Members who have been allocated a desk for use by either their private secretary or research assistant. A total of 26 share a room with one other, 66 share a room with two others and 321 share a room with three or more others.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Salmonella

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many inspections have been carried out (a) in 1987 and (b) in 1988 of protein processing plants making chicken feed; how many of these showed plants to be contaminated with salmonella; and how many prosecutions were brought under the Protein Processing Order 1981 against the infected plants.

Mr. Ryder: In 1987, 83 statutory inspections were carried out and 21 cases of salmonella contamination recorded. So far in 1988, 135 inspections have taken place, with 17 cases of salmonella contamination. In each of these cases advice was given on how to eliminate the contamination and prevent recurrence. On re-inspection all samples of products from these contaminated plants were found to be clear of salmonella contamination and so no prosecutions were brought.

In 1988 the policy has been to inspect each plant at approximately six-monthly intervals, with additional visits to those plants where problems have been found. We are currently considering introducing measures requiring plants to test each day's production for salmonella, and to make the results available to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated level of contamination of imported animal feedstuffs by salmonella; what powers his Department has to monitor and control such contamination; and whether he plans to seek to increase his powers in this respect.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A very small proportion of compound animal feed is imported. The majority of imports are of the raw materials for incorporation into feeding stuffs.

Statutory controls apply to the importation of all animal protein requiring all imports to be licensed. Importations made in contravention of these controls may be required to be re-exported, destroyed or treated. Importations of animal protein are also monitored and samples are taken for testing for salmonella contamination. The overall contamination rate found in imported animal protein in 1987 was 28 per cent.

Discussions between representatives of the animal feeding stuffs industry and my officials are already under way to consider the application of the present controls and the need for any further measures to reduce salmonella contamination in feedingstuffs and their components.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the names and locations of the 21 protein processing plants that were inspected in 1987 and found to be contaminated with salmonella; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 12 December 1988]: Protein processing plants are subject to inspections under the Diseases of Animals (Protein Processing) Order 1986 to ensure that their product conforms with the required bacteriological standard and contains no salmonella. The 21 plants which were inspected in 1987 and failed these tests were given advice on overcoming their problems and when subsequently re-inspected were found to be meeting the required bacteriological standard.

In these circumstances prosecutions were not taken. Information on the identity of the plants concerned is a matter of commercial confidence.

Milk

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the retail sale value of one pint of milk is paid to the farmer.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Approximately 45 per cent.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average yearly farm income in each of the four countries of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Detailed information on farm incomes is provided in the Ministry publication "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom" (1988 edition), a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Table 3.5 (p. 75) provides annual estimates of aggregate farming income for each country and table 2.3 (p. 18) provides estimates of net farm income by farm type, size group and country. This publication also provides further information on farm incomes and definitions of the above terms.

Butter

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many tonnes of butter there are in store within the EEC; what were the corresponding figures for each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: At the end of October 1988, there were 374,922 tonnes of butter in store within the EEC, 162,928 tonnes in intervention, and 211,994 tonnes in aided private storage. Corresponding stock figures for the end of the previous 10 years are given in the table.

EC Butter Stocks at 31 December (to nearest 100 tonnes)

	Intervention tonnes	Aided private storage tonnes	Total tonnes
1978	231,500	186,500	418,000
1979	270,800	100,600	371,400
1980	128,800	110,600	239,400
1981	11,100	136,100	147,200
1982	111,900	193,800	305,700
1983	692,100	161,300	853,400
1984	841,500	107,400	948,900
1985	995,800	127,700	1,123,500
1986	1,283,300	83,200	1,366,500
1987	859,900	98,200	958,100

Bracken (Sprays)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department or any relevant agencies have given any guidance to local authorities, landowners and farmers in respect of the environmental and public health implications of using sprays to control the spread of brackens in national parks or other areas of countryside.

Mr. Ryder: The Ministry has published a leaflet "P190 —Bracken Control". It is available from ADAS staff at local offices of the Ministry.

ENERGY

AERE, Harwell

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what contracts Harwell Atomic Energy Authority research centre has with the Ministry of Defence; whether any of these involve handling plutonium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (Harwell) undertakes work, under commercial contract for the Ministry of Defence, which exploits its expertise in a range of matters including plutonium handling.

Trawsfynydd Magnox Plant

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if the additional cost incurred on the Central Electricity

Governing Board to generate replacement electricity for the output of Trawsfynydd Magnox plant has been accounted against nuclear or fossil fuel expenditure.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Output from nuclear plant is maximised at all times. Any shortfall in that output must be made up by an equivalent increase in fossil-fuelled generation. Nuclear and fossil-fuelled generation respectively are not separately accounted for within the bulk supply tariff.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the decision by the nuclear installations inspectorate to refuse permission to the Central Electricity Generating Board to restart the Trawsfynydd Magnox nuclear plant on 24 November; and on what basis further decisions were made by the nuclear installations inspectorate to allow it subsequently to start.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Consent to start up reactor 1 at Trawsfynydd was given by the nuclear installations inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive on 2 December 1988. This followed the satisfactory resolution of issues identified at a meeting between the nuclear installations inspectorate and the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Hinkley Point C

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what communications have been received by his Department from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament pursuant to the attendance at the Hinkley Point C public inquiry by Christopher Wilcock of his Department; and if he will set out the issues addressed in the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament letter and the departmental responses.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A letter from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament was received on 24 November. A reply will be sent as soon as possible.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the current status of the joint United States and United Kingdom fast reactor research programme announced by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority in 1979; what is the total amount of plutonium to date transferred (a) from the United Kingdom to the United States of America and (b) from the United States of America to the United Kingdom under this programme; and in what form this plutonium has been transported.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The research work under the joint United Kingdom and United States fast reactor research programme announced by the UKAEA in 1979 was successfully completed in 1987. The studies of the results are now being finalised. There have been no net transfers of plutonium (other than in gram quantities) between the United Kingdom and the United States arising from the programme.

Electricity Bill

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will initiate an investigation into the leaking of a draft of the Electricity supply industry privatisation Bill to the fortnightly publication Power in Europe which published details on 24 November.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

Natural Gas

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of total electricity in the European Community is produced from natural gas; and what is the percentage of each member country.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In 1986, the latest year for which data are available for all member states, 6·5 per cent. of electricity in the Community was produced from natural gas. Figures for individual member states are in the following table.

Member state	Percentage of electricity produced from natural gas (1986)
Belgium	1·5
Denmark	1·9
Federal Republic of Germany	6·2
France	0·8
Greece	0·2
Ireland	22·4
Italy	15·8
Luxembourg	0·1
Netherlands	61·9
Portugal	—
Spain	1·7
United Kingdom	0·6

DEFENCE

Atomic Weapons Research Establishment (Burghfield)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what materials were being disposed of at the atomic weapons research establishment, Burghfield, on the morning of 2 December;

(2) what distance the area being used to dispose of explosive materials at the atomic weapons research establishment, Burghfield, on the morning of 2 December was from: (a) work places at the atomic weapons research establishment, Burghfield, (b) any surrounding buildings and (c) areas accessible to the public;

(3) what surface explosive material was being burnt at the atomic weapons research establishment, Burghfield, on the morning of 2 December;

(4) how the explosive materials being disposed of at the atomic weapons research establishment, Burghfield, on the morning of 2 December were ignited;

(5) if the site used for disposal of explosive materials at the atomic weapons research establishment, Burghfield, on the morning of 2 December has a water supply with sufficient stand pipes and hoses to allow access to all areas; and if he will specify any other means of extinguishing fires that were present at the disposal site;

(6) if the site used for disposal of explosive materials at the atomic weapons research establishment, Burghfield, on the morning of 2 December (a) was fenced to prevent inadvertant entry and (b) had a red flag displayed to indicate disposal taking place;

(7) how many entrances there are to the site for the disposal of explosive materials at the atomic weapons research establishment, Burghfield, on the morning of 2 December;

(8) what protective clothing and other safety equipment was issued for the use of burning site operators at the site used for the disposal of explosive materials at the atomic weapons research establishment, Burghfield, on the morning of 2 December;

(9) what type of log was kept of disposal operations at the atomic weapons research establishment, Burghfield, on the morning of 2 December; and what details it contains;

(10) why the disposal of explosive materials at the atomic weapons research establishment, Burghfield, on the morning of 2 December took place in the hours of darkness;

(11) if the explosives disposal site at the atomic weapons establishment, Burghfield, is licensed by any organisation outside his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 8 December at column 252.

Private Security Companies

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of the private security companies listed in his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton of 2 November, Official Report, column 645, guard establishments in the (a) Bristol and (b) Oxford areas.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

European Defence Contractors

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy towards cross-border alliances between European defence contractors.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry monitors cross-border alliances between European defence contractors and assesses on a case-by-case basis their implications for our ability to secure value for money in procurement.

Retired Research Staff (Emigration)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what restrictions exist on retired research staff from Aldermaston and Burghfield emigrating to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister, to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 8 December at column 267.

Property Sales

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are any plans to sell the Dreadnought seaman's hospital building and the nurses' home off King William walk in Greenwich.

Mr. Freeman: Greenwich hospital, of which my right hon. Friend is the trustee, is the freeholder of the Dreadnought seamen's hospital building and the Devonport nurses' home. There are no plans to sell the freehold of these buildings. Since the Dreadnought building is no longer required as a hospital, new uses for it and the associated buildings are now under consideration.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Her Majesty's Stationery Office

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in developing Her Majesty's Stationery Office as an executive agency.

Mr. Lawson: I am pleased to announce that HMSO will today become an executive agency under the Next Steps initiative. HMSO is already a successful Government trading fund. Executive agency status will help it to develop its business on sound commercial lines, with significantly greater managerial freedom and a more flexible pay structure best suited to the achievement of its aims and objectives. HMSO will be expected, in return, to achieve progressively more demanding profit and performance targets. This is reflected in the framework document governing the operation of the agency and in a new Treasury minute which is being laid today under the Government Trading Fund Act 1973. Copies of the framework document are being placed in the Library of the House.

Family Incomes

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has produced any estimate of the expected impact on the living standards of an average sized family on average incomes of the combined effects of the poll tax and the privatisation of electricity and water.

Mr. Major: No specific estimate is available. However, to raise the same revenue from community charge as from domestic rates will need no change in the average household bill. The introduction of competition and the disciplines of the private sector into the electricity and water supply industries will put downward pressure on costs and prices.

Debt Repayment

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the total debt repayment paid by Britain in the current year; if he will express the figures as a percentage of gross domestic product; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The public sector debt repayment (PSDR) is expected to be about £10 billion in 1988-89, equivalent to 2 per cent. of gross domestic product. On the basis of this forecast, the PSDR in 1988-89 will be larger as a proportion of money GDP than in any year since the beginning of the 1950s, the earliest date for which figures on this basis are available.

VAT

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to exempt apnoea respiratory monitors from value added tax.

Mr. Lilley: Apnoea respiratory monitors may be zero-rated when supplied to specified "eligible bodies", provided that they are purchased with funds provided by a charity or from voluntary donations. "Eligible bodies" include health authorities, non-profit making hospitals and research institutions, charitable institutions providing care or medical or surgical treatment for handicapped people and charitable institutions providing rescue or first-aid services.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow can expect to receive answers to his letters of 12 October and 16 November about value added tax on new buildings.

Mr. Lilley: I replied to the hon. Member's letter on 12 December.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) on how many occasions value added tax has been waived on contracts awarded by the health authorities to outside companies;

(2) how many contracts awarded to tenders from companies outside the National Health Service have had value added tax applied to them.

Mr. Lilley [holding answers 12 December 1988]: Value added tax applies in the normal way to all such contracts. Health authorities can however claim refund of the tax where section 27(2A) of the Value Added Tax Act 1983 applies. Information on the number of contracts in question is not available.

Cancer Screening

Sir David Price: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer why the mobile breast screening unit provided by the Wessex Cancer Trust as a registered charity has now been made subject to value added tax.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 8 December 1988]: Medical equipment donated to a health authority by a charity is entitled to zero-rating when it is to be used solely for medical research, diagnosis or treatment. The zero rate covers X-ray and other specialist medical equipment for a mobile breast screening service, but it does not, I regret, extend to equipment such as general purpose trailers or towing units. If the Wessex Cancer Trust can produce further evidence to show that the unit in question does constitute specialist medical equipment, Customs and Excise will of course be pleased to reconsider the case.

Coventry Four

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what charges are still outstanding against Colonel Hendrik Botha, Stephanus de Jaser, William Metelerkamp and Jacobus la Grange.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 12 December 1988]: The four would face charges that they conspired with each other and with others on diverse dates between 23 February 1982 and 1 April 1984 to evade prohibitions in force on the exportation of goods from the United Kingdom pursuant to the provisions of the Export of Goods Control Order 1981 whereby an offence or offences contrary to section 170(2) of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 would have been committed.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date in 1984 passports were returned to those persons known as the Coventry four.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 12 December 1988]: Passports were not returned to the persons known as the "Coventry Four".

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the bail money offered by Mr. Andre Pelser in the case of the persons known as the Coventry four has been returned to persons acting for or on behalf of the South African Government.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 12 December 1988]: The £400,000 offered by Mr. Andre Pelser was estreated by the Coventry magistrates court. Estreated bail is paid into the Consolidated Fund.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many summaries of developments in the inquiries by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise into the case of those persons known as the Coventry four were written; and to whom they were despatched.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 12 December 1988]: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will name the four persons remanded before magistrates at Coventry in March 1984 on charges of breaching arms embargo regulations.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 12 December 1988]: The four persons were William Randolph Metelerkamp, Hendrik Jacobus Botha, Stephanus Johannes de Jager and Jacobus Francois La Grange.

Building Societies

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exhequer what is the ratio of investors in building societies to those who have mortgages from them.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 12 December 1988]: Figures in the annual report of the Building Societies Commission for 1987-88 suggest that at the end of 1987 there were in total 45·6 million investing shareholders and depositors in building societies. Since some people have an account at more than one society and many people have joint accounts, the exact number of individual investors is not known. During the same period there were 7·2 million borrowers with mortgages. This figure treats as single borrowers almost all holders of joint mortgages.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Mr. Frank Ballard

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will investigate the reasons why his Department's records division at Newcastle upon Tyne has not acknowledged or replied to the letters sent by Mr. Frank Ballard of 20 High street, Colton, Rugeley, Staffordshire, on 14 July and 23 October regarding a deficiency in credits for the year 1986-87.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that there is no record of receipt of Mr. Ballard's first letter in July. His letter of 23 October with which he enclosed a copy of his original letter was forwarded to the Department's local office at Lichfield to answer and a reply was sent on 14 November. I am writing to my hon. Friend.

Pensioners

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many retirement pensioners are in receipt of an occupational pension; and what is the average weekly income from occupational pensions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Approximately 3·4 million pensioner tax units[1] were in receipt of an occupational pension in 1986; the average weekly amount was £39·54.

Source: Family Expenditure Survey 1986.

[1] A pensioner tax unit is a single pensioner over state pension age or a couple where the man is over state pension age.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of (i) all pensioners, (ii) single male pensioners, (iii) single female pensioners, (iv) pensioner couples, (v) single women aged 75 years or over, (vi) single men aged 75 years or over and (vii) couples where at least one partner is aged 75 years or over, are in receipt of an occupational pension; and, for each group, what is the average amount received.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is as follows:

	Proportion of pensioner tax units[1] with occupational pensions percentage	Average weekly amount received[2] £
All pensioners	50	39·43
Single males	55	32·20
Single females	38	27·66
Pensioner couples	65	50·79
Single women aged 75 and over	31	27·60
Single men aged 75 and over	50	31·12
Couples where at least one partner is aged 75 and over	42	36·73

Source: Family Expenditure Survey 1986.

[1] A tax unit is a single person of pensionable age or a couple where the man is of pensionable age.

[2] Average amounts are based on the number of pensioners actually in receipt of occupational pensions.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of (i) all pensioners and (ii) newly retired pensioners have neither a state additional pension nor an occupational pension.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is (i) the total number and (ii) the proportion of (a) single pensioners and (b) pensioner couples who are in receipt of income support;

(2) what is (i) the total number and (ii) the proportion of single pensioners aged (a) 75 years and over and (b) 80 years and over who are in receipt of income support;

(3) what is (i) the total number and (ii) the proportion of pensioner couples aged (a) 75 years and over and (b) 80 years and over who are in receipt of income support.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is as follows:

	Total numbers in 000's	Proportion
All pensioners
Single	1,340	27
Couples	335	9
Pensioners 75 and over
Single	735	31
Couples	100	13
Pensioners 80 and over
Single	435	31
Couples	40	13

Notes:

1. For the purpose of this table pensioners are defined as those in receipt of a pensioner premium.
2. Proportions are those in receipt of Income Support as a percentage of total pensioner units within the group.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is (i) the total number and (ii) the proportion of (a) single pensioners and (b) pensioner couples who are in receipt of housing benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Special arrangements have been made with the Department of Employment's claimant adviser service for family credit claims made by families of people assisted into work by them to be dealt with through a streamlined procedure. The target is for 90 per cent. of these claims to be cleared within five working days. This target is being met and 95 per cent. are cleared within 10 working days. Other claimants resuming work after claiming income support are sent a specially marked family credit claim form so that, if necessary, their claims can be given priority. The target is to clear these claims, as other family credit claims, in an average of 18 working days. In November a clearance rate of just under 23 days was achieved.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received from pensioners' organisations about the effect on their pensions of recent changes in the financial climate.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since the beginning of October we have received 18 such representations.

Mr. John Marshall To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of gross national product is devoted to payments to pensioners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested. Social security expenditure on the elderly is approximately 5 per cent. of GDP.

Taxes and Benefits

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update his answer on taxes and benefits on 25 March, Official Report, column 244 for 1989-90 assuming that tax allowances are indexed according to the statutory formula and taking account of the uprating of benefits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Figures for 1989-90 are not available.

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if there is a specific target for clearing claims for family credit for people who have moved into paid work.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Special arrangements have been made with the Department of Employment's Claimant Adviser

Service for Family Credit claims made by families of people assisted into work by them to be dealt with through a streamlined procedure. The target is for 90 per cent. of these claims to be cleared within 5 working days. This target is being met and 95 per cent. are cleared within 10 working days. Other claimants resuming work after claiming Income Support are sent a specially marked Family Credit claim form so that, if necessary, their claims can be given priority. The target is to clear these claims, as other Family Credit claims, in a average of 18 working days. In November a clearance rate of just under 23 days was achieved.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he plans any alteration in severe disablement allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We do not have any plans for major changes to the structure of severe disablement allowance pending our consideration of the reports on the survey of disabled people undertaken by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Crisis Loans

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average length of time between a claimant applying for a crisis loan and the person receiving the girocheque in payment of the loan.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available.

Crisis loan applications are decided as soon as all necessary information has been obtained. Inevitably it takes longer to proces some applications than others, but a majority are decided and paid on the date of application.

Transitional Payments

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when his Department's Glasgow office will determine the eligibility or otherwise of transitional payments for Mrs. P. D. Mills of 1 John Till Close, Rugeley, Staffordshire following the return of the completed questionnaire requesting information relating to housing benefit by the Cannock Chase district council on 10 October.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The notification about the outcome of the application for housing benefit transitional payments, in the case referred to, was sent out to the applicant on 3 November.

Durham Local Office

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, for Durham Department of Social Security office since April in all cases, what was (a) the total budget and (b) the amount spent to date for (i) budgeting and crisis loans and (ii) community care grants expressing (b) as a proportion of (a) in each case; (c) what was the average (i) budgeting loan, (ii) crisis loan, (iii) community care grant, (iv) maternity payment and (v) funeral payment paid out; (d) how many people have been refused (i) a loan, (ii) a community care grant and (iii) both; (e) how many people were refused a loan more than once in a one month period; (f) how many applications were refused under the 26-week rule; and (g) how many people were refused extention loans on the grounds of their existing commitments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on numbers of applications for social fund loans and grants processed and awarded, listed by local office, including information on budget allocations and expenditure, is available from the details held in the Library.

A statutory amount of £85 is available in respect of maternity payments. However, any capital held by the applicant in excess of £500 is taken into account on a pound-for-pound basis. In the period from April to November 1988 the average amounts paid out from the social fund in the Durham office in respect of funeral payments was £310·44.

In the period from April to November 1988 a total of 129 applicants were refused awards on the grounds that they had either not been in receipt of income support for 26 weeks or that they had previously applied for the same item or service in the preceding 26 weeks and their circumstances had remained unchanged.

Information on the number of applicants refused a loan more than once in the one month period or the number of applicants refused a second or subsequent loan on the grounds of existing commitments is not available.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give for (a) Durham local office area and (b) England (i) the number of claimants who have experienced, or will experience real reductions in income as a result of the changes made to diet and heating allowances in April and (ii) the amount saved by this means.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Estimates of the information required could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the average benefit paid to disabled claimants at Durham local office for the periods (a) 4-10 April and (b) 11-17 April, excluding transitional protection.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that this information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Single Parents

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what support from within the community is available to lone parents under the age of 18 years who are unable to gain support from their own family or his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Lone parents under age 18 are eligible for income support from this Department subject to the normal rules. Lone parents were not affected by the general withdrawal of entitlement to income support from 16 and 17-year-olds. Young lone parents can also claim other benefits such as family credit, housing benefit, child benefit and one parent benefit provided that they fulfil the conditions of entitlement. A lone parent under age 18 may also be able to obtain help of other kinds from local authorities and voluntary organisations.

Working Mothers

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing estimates of the numbers of women who are working, with children, who have marginal tax rates in excess of 50 per cent., broken down into bands of 10 per cent. and into married women and one-parent families.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not currently available.

Form FC1

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will revise the family claim form FC1.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We expect to bring a revised version into use in the spring.

National Insurance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much was raised through national insurance contributions in 1987; and on what it was expended.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not available for the calendar year 1987. Figures for the financial year ended 31 March 1987 are contained in the account of the national insurance fund for 1986-87 (House of Commons Paper 277). The account for 1987-88 will be published in the new year.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will report on the progress being made by the occupational pensions board in considering measures to safeguard the rights of occupational scheme members; and when he expects the board to complete its report.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We asked the occupational pensions board to report by the end of the year. I understand that the board expects to meet this date.

Community Care Grants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what steps he will take to publicise the availability of community care grants as a means of ensuring the community care grants budget is not underspent;

(2) if he will issue an instruction to his Department's local probation services and hospital social workers concerned with re-establishment of patients in the community, as a means of ensuring full take-up of the community care grant budget.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information about the availability of community care grants is contained in a variety of leaflets, forms and posters, and guidance to social fund officers already emphasises the importance of liaison between local offices and statutory and other bodies.

We are currently considering a range of further measures to improve awareness of community care grants amongst the priority groups for whom they are intended and amongst organisations involved with potential applicants.

Local Offices (Rhondda)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what percentage of applications for social fund loans were successful in (a) the Porth Rhondda and (b) the Tonypandy Rhondda West offices in the period up to 30 August;

(2) how much of the social fund allocation had been spent up to 30 August in (a) the Porth Rhondda and (b) the Tonypandy Rhondda West offices;

(3) what percentage of applications for social fund grants were successful in (a) the Porth Rhondda and (b) the Tonypandy Rhondda West offices in the period to 30 August.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on numbers of applications for social fund loans and grants received, processed and awarded, listed by local office, including information on budget allocations and expenditure, is available from the details held in the Library.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many claims for single payment have been allowed at (a) the Tonypandy Rhondda West and (b) Porth Rhondda offices since 1 April; and what amount of benefit these represent in each case;

(2) how many claims for single payment have been made at (a) the Tonypandy Rhondda West and (b) the Porth Rhondda offices since 1 April; and what are the main items asked for in each case.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is not available on the numbers of claims for single payments made and allowed since 1 April 1988 and the items asked for. The numbers of decisions made in respect of single payments during the period 11 April 1988 to 31 October 1988 were, at Rhondda West 1,188 and at Porth Rhondda 1,026. The total amount paid for single payments at each office during the same period was, at Rhondda West £67,982 and at Porth Rhondda £32,825.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many new claims for housing benefit supplement were received at (a) the Tonypandy Rhondda West and (b) the Porth Rhondda offices from 1 November 1987 to 11 April 1988;

(2) what was the total amount of housing benefit supplement paid at (a) the Tonypandy Rhondda West and (b) the Porth Rhondda offices in the year prior to 31 October 1987.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that information is not available in the form requested.

Information obtained from the housing benefit subsidy claims submitted by the local authorities with which the Department's Rhondda (west) and Porth offices deal is shown in the tables.

Table 1

Number of housing benefit supplement claims on 31 March

Authority (Borough Council)	1987	1988[1]
Rhondda	386	438
Taff-Ely[2]	640	706

[1] Provisional.
[2] Includes claims from Pontypridd office.

Table 2

Total amount of housing benefit supplement paid

Authority (Borough Council)	1986-87	1987-88[1]
Rhondda	86,215	100,236
Taff-Ely[2]	133,219	147,842

[1] Provisional.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many new claims for supplementary benefit were received at (a) the Tonypandy Rhondda West and (b) the Porth Rhondda offices from 1 November 1987 to 11 April 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of claims, both new and repeat, for supplementary benefit received between 21 October 1987 and 8 April 1988 (the closest available dates) is as follows:

	Claims
(a) Rhondda West	2,902
(b) Porth	2,530

Source: Internal management information, which is provisional and subject to amendment.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total amount of supplementary benefit paid at (a) the Tonypandy Rhondda west and (b) the Porth Rhondda offices in the year prior to 31 October 1987.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that this information is not available.

Young People

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases in each standard region are (a) aged 16 to 17 years but receiving income support whilst in relevant education, (b) aged 16 to 17 years who are entitled to income support under schedule 1 of the income support regulations, (c) aged 16 to 17 years who have been entitled to income support for short periods and (d) aged 16 to 17 years for whom he has used his discretionary power to grant income support to avoid severe hardship.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested concerning 16 and 17-year-olds receiving income support whilst in relevant education is not available.

The estimated number of 16 and 17-year-olds entitled to income support without time restriction (schedule 1 of the Income Support (General) Regulations) at September 1988 is as follows:

	Number
England	15,000
Scotland	2,000
Wales	2,000
Great Britain	19,000

Notes:
(1) Based on a sample of 1 in 50 cases in receipt of Supplementary Allowance on a day in May 1987.
(2) Figures rounded to the nearest thousand.
(3) Information is not available according to "standard regions" and in view of the small number of sample cases involved any further breakdown would be subject to wide sampling error and would therefore be of doubtful validity.

The number of awards of income support made to 16 and 17-year-olds for limited periods (schedule 1A of the Income Support (General) Regulations) in September and October 1988 was:

Region	Number of awards
London (North)	27
London (South)	32
Midlands	42
North Eastern	55
North Western	60
Wales and South West	38
Scotland	34
Great Britain	288

Notes:
(1) Based on 100 per cent. count of awards made up to 31 October 1988.
(2) Information is not available according to "standard regions".
(3) Information relates to the number of awards rather than to the individual number of young people involved. Some may have had more than one award.

The number of directions given under the Secretary of State's discretionary power to avoid "severe hardship" to 16 and 17-year-olds during the 13 weeks ended 9 December 1988 is as follows:

Region	Number of applications	Number successful	Number unsuccessful
London (North)	174	124	50
London (South)	131	91	40
Midlands	222	167	55
North Eastern	366	243	123
North Western	293	193	100
Wales and South West	185	122	63
Scotland	518	329	189
Great Britain	1,889	1,269	620

Notes:
(1) Based on 100 per cent. count of applications received.
(2) Information is not available according to "standard regions".
(3) Information relates to the number of applications rather than to the number of individual young people involved. Some may have made more than one application.

Severe Disability Premium

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current estimated percentage take-up of the severe disablity premium.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number of awards thus far of severe disability premium to (a) individuals, (b) couples at the lower rate and (c) couples at the higher rate.

Mr. Scott: I regret that information on the number of people receiving the severe disability premium is not yet available.

Residential Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assisance is available to residents of private aged persons' houes where the fees are raised above the maximum allowabe income support towards residential costs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Income support limits for help towards fees are intended to meet all reasonable charges for accommodation, board and personal care. The actual fee charged by an ndependent residential care home is a matter solely betwen the home and the resident.

Contribution Records

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he has taken to ensure that his Department's contracted-out earnings group office at Newcastle can provide contribution records within a reasonable time period.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Normally it is not necessary for the contracted-out earnings group to provide earnings or contribution information as employers and pension schemes have their own records of this. However, an inquiry service for employers submitting details to the group on magnetic tape is provided, for which a charge is made. The information requested is normally sent within a week of the inquiry.

Medical Tribunals

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when a medical appeal tribunal will hear the case of Pamela Walsh, 4 South avenue, Leigh, whose appeal was lodged in January.

Mr. Scott: I understand from the office of the president of social security and medical appeal tribunals that Pamela Walsh's appeal will be heard on 18 January 1989.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when a medical appeal tribunal will hear the case of Mr. R. T. Watson, 4 Fitchfield walk, Worsley, Manchester whose appeal was lodged on 16 March.

Mr. Scott: This is a matter for the president of social security and medical appeal tribunals, but I understand that Mr. Watson has not yet been allocated a date for a hearing of his appeal.

Relocation of Offices

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration is being given to moving offices of his Department to Bolton.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We shall shortly be making an announcement setting out our plans to move some local office work away from London. Detailed work is also progressing to identify headquarters functions which might be relocated. This work still has some way to go but we are considering all alternative locations which will help the Department to improve efficiency.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many were eligible for housing benefit transitional payments at the start of the scheme; and how many are estimated to be in the next financial year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: When the transitional payments unit was set up it was announced that up to 300,000 people would be eligible to receive payments. Up to 9 December 396,000 applications had been received and 146,000 cases are receiving payments. In the majority of cases where assessments have not been made the unit is awaiting the return of inquiry forms from local authorities. The final date by which applications can be made is 31 March 1989 and until this date is reached it is not possible to predict how many people will eventually benefit from the scheme.

THE ARTS

British Library

Mr. Buchan: To ask the Minister for the Arts what were the total buildings costs of the Urquhart building at the British Library in Boston Spa; and what was the cost of fitting out this building.

Mr. Richard Luce [holding answer 8 December 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 19 October 1988 at column 880 in respect of the total costs of the building. The cost of fitting out was approximately £1·5 million.

HEALTH

Nurses (Grading)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether it is his policy that where a local manager wishes to change a nurse's grade he should not do so without having first consulted the regional health authority who in turn must consult his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. It is for regional and district health authorities to determine what consultations, if any, should take place and in what circumstances this would be appropriate.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate for the Shropshire health authority of the number of patients who have been on the hospital waiting list for more than a year.

Mr. Mellor: The most recent validated in-patient waiting list figures are for 31 March 1988. At that date, there were 2,797 patients on the Shropshire list for more than a year.

Expenditure

Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the level of expenditure for health services per 1,000 population for each of the health districts in the East Anglia region 1979-80 and for 1987-88.

Mr. Mellor: Figures based on the total populations of the district health authorities in the East Anglian region are shown in the table for the years 1982-83 (the first year following the establishment of those authorities) and 1987-88.

Total revenue expenditure on hospital and community health services (HCHS) per thousand population—East Anglian region

District health authorities	1982-83 (cash) £	1982-83 (at 1987-88 prices) £	1987-88[1] (cash) £	Real-terms increase per cent.
Cambridge	196,875	247,974	282,190	13·8
Peterborough	147,793	186,152	201,761	8·4
West Suffolk	122,989	154,911	177,316	14·5
East Suffolk	156,002	196,492	206,428	5·1
Norwich	163,649	206,124	218,825	6·2
Great Yarmouth and Waveney	127,619	160,742	184,129	14·6
West Norfolk and Wisbech	113,474	142,926	166,040	16·2
Huntingdon	86,731	109,243	189,427	73·4

[1] Provisional (ie as yet unaudited figures).

HCHS covers all services provided (including hospital and community health services and where appropriate ambulance and other services).

Sources:

(a) Annual accounts of the district health authorities.

(b) Mid-year estimates of resident population 1982 and 1987 (Office of Population Censuses and Surveys).

Notes to the table:

1. The 1982-83 figures have been expressed at 1987-88 prices by the use of the Gross Domestic Product deflator.

2. District capital expenditure and all revenue and capital expenditure incurred by the East Anglian regional health authority for the region as a whole is excluded.

3. Expenditure on family practitioner services is excluded: such expenditure is accounted for by family practitioner committee (FPCs) and cannot strictly be attributed to particular districts. However, prior to 1 April 1985 the Cambridge, East Suffolk and Norwich district health authorities each had an associated FPC and their total revenue expenditure for 1982-83 included small, not separately identifiable, elements relating to FPCs' administrative expenses.

4. Significant variations in per capita expenditure figures at district level arise principally because:

(i) people travel across district boundaries for treatment and sub-regional resource allocations reflect the pattern and changes in the pattern of service provision locally.

(ii) the population figures used make no allowance for people resident in one district who receive treatment in another or for the differences in morbidity and age/sex structure of particular populations.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by what proportion spending on the health services has increased over and above inflation since 1979; and what is his estimate of how much further that figure is likely to increase when the additional resources he has announced for the coming year are taken into account.

Mr. Mellor: The real terms increase in NHS gross expenditure since 1978-79 is 37 per cent. and is expected to rise to 40 per cent. in 1989-90. If, however, account is also taken of the extra cash released in 1989-90 by the reduction in employers' superannuation contributions and from health authorities' income generation and cost improvement schemes the value of the resources available is equivalent to a real terms increase of 4·5 per cent. over 1988-89.

Drug RU 486

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if there are any plans to introduce the RU 486 abortion pill for use in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what test have been carried out on the drug RU 486 in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Any information of this kind received pursuant to the Medicines Act 1968 is confidential to the licensing authority. A company statement on RU 486 was issued by Roussel Laboratories Ltd. on 1 November 1988, a copy of which and any further information may be obtained from the company's office at Bradwater Park, Denham, Uxbridge, Middlesex UB9 5HP.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the turnover rate amongst National Health Service speech therapists in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: I regret that we do not collect this information centrally.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, by health authority (a) the establishment figure for speech therapists, (b) the actual number in place, (c) (b) as a proportion of (a), and (d) the number of cases treated in the last 12 months.

Mr. Mellor: I regret that we do not collect information on establishment and number of cases treated centrally in this form. The figures for whole-time equivalent staff in post in each English region and the London postgraduate special health authorities is as follows.

NHS staff in post

Speech therapists—England by region at 30 September 1987

Note: All figures are independently rounded to the nearest (10) ten whole-time equivalent.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy on health authorities insisting that patients or the guardians of patients in their area needing speech therapy should first sign an agreement or contract before such treatment can commence.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 13 December 1988]: The terms on which speech therapy is provided to individual patients is a matter for agreement between the patient, or guardian of the patient, and the local health authority and speech therapy manager responsible for the provision. Many forms of speech therapy treatment need the parent or guardian of a speech-impaired child to work with the child outside the formal speech therapy sessions to reinforce the therapy. We are not aware that health authorities are generally requiring patients or guardians to sign written contracts.

AIDS

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement outlining the various methods by which HIV may be transmitted from one person to another; and what is the latest evidence available to him on whether HIV may be transmitted in saliva.

Mr. Mellor: HIV is recognised to be transmissible by three main routes:

unprotected penetrative sexual intercourse with an infected person (between men or between a man and a woman);

by inoculation of infected blood and blood products. In the United Kingdom this mainly results from drug misusers sharing contaminated injecting equipment; and from an infected mother to her baby before or during birth, or after birth via breast feeding.

HIV has been found in low concentration in saliva but I am advised that there is no good evidence that HIV has ever been transmitted in saliva.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest measures being taken to protect at-risk groups from contracting the HIV virus in (a) prisons, (b) Her Majesty's forces and (c) the business travelling community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Since April 1986 the Government have allocated £32·5 million for a sustained programme of public education about HIV and AIDS. In October 1987 the Health Education Authority was given responsibility for further development of the campaign. Campaigns mounted so far include mass media work aimed at those travelling at home and abroad on holiday or on business. In addition, new leaflets have been produced for issue to travellers overseas. These include up-to-date information about the risks of HIV infection abroad.

Educational initiatives aimed at prison inmates and members of HM armed forces are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Home Secretary and the Secretary of State for Defence. However, I am aware that an educational package for prison inmates, comprising a video, a guide to its use and a leaflet, is nearing completion. Members of the armed forces were included in the distribution of the household leaflet "Don't Die of Ignorance" in early 1987 and with it received an insert directed at service personnel. Units moving overseas are given instruction on relevant health hazards, including HIV and other communicable diseases, and precautions that individuals can take to protect themselves.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of reported cases of people affected by food poisoning for each calendar year from 1980 to the present time.

Mr. Mellor: The numbers of formally notified and otherwise ascertained cases of food poisoning for the years 1980-87 are as follows:

Year	Number
1980	[1]10,318
1981	[1]9,936
1982	14,253
1983	17,735
1984	20,702
1985	19,242
1986	23,948
1987	29,331

[1] Formally notified only; otherwise ascertained not available.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the Government's estimate of the ratio of unreported cases to each reported case of a person affected by food poisoning.

Mr. Mellor: While there is considerable under-reporting, we do not have available a precise estimate of the ratio.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will proceed with plans to leaflet every household to warn against the dangers of food poisoning.

Mr. Mellor: Following preliminary assessment, the Government are to launch early next year a nationwide campaign to advise the public on how to prevent food poisoning in the home. Initially, this will be based on a leaflet "The Recipe for Food Safety" to be distributed extensively through supermarkets, doctors' surgeries and other outlets. Other ways of promoting good food hygiene practice in the home will also be considered.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of salmonella poisoning there have been in the last year for which figures are available; and whether the incidence of this type of food poisoning is declining or increasing.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In 1987, 20,532 isolates from humans in England and Wales were identified by the Department of enteric pathogen of the Public Health Laboratory Service. This is a 21 per cent. increase over the previous year and figures to date for this year indicate a further increase in salmonella isolates from humans.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of cases of salmonella food poisoning are estimated to be due to salmonella in eggs; what is his estimate of the proportion of the 30 million eggs eaten annually that contain the salmonella bacteria; and what advice he has circulated to the public and to the catering industry on how to avoid salmonella food poisoning from eggs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In the first 10 months of this year there were 46 outbreaks associated with eggs involving over 1,000 cases of salmonella food poisoning. We do not have information to estimate the proportion of cases of food poisoning due to eggs as in the great majority of sporadic cases no particular food is identified as the cause of the illness. Although the risk of harm to any healthy individual from consuming a single raw or partially cooked egg is small, it is advisable for vulnerable people such as the elderly, the sick, babies and pregnant women to consumer only eggs that have been cooked until the white and yolk are solid. Advice has been given to the catering industry and the public about the handling, cooking and use of eggs.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of cases of food poisoning in the last year for which figures are available, what assessment he has made as to whether the incidence is declining or increasing; and what proportion arose from (a) home catering, (b) commercial catering and (c) catering in institutional establishments.

Mr. Mellor: In 1987 there were 29,331 cases of food poisoning, 20,363 of which were formally notified and 8,968 ascertained by other means. Figures to date for this year indicate that the incidence is increasing. No precise data are available on proportions of cases attributable to different catering locations.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will take steps to introduce a statutory requirement that all those commercially involved in handling food take a course in food hygiene;

(2) if he has any plans for strengthening food hygiene legislation;

(3) what information he has concerning courses that provide training in food hygiene; and whether his Department provides any input to these courses.

Mrs. Currie: A review of food legislation has been the subject of wide consultation over several years and the results were reported to Ministers. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 30 October 1987, announced that officials had been asked to review the proposals in the light of the response to consultation. The proposals under review include the suggestion that training in food hygiene should be mandatory for food handlers, along with other measures.

Such training is currently provided by the food industry itself, by local authorities and by professional bodies. Departmental officials keep in close contact with training bodies and advise where necessary.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of how many cases of food poisoning due to the bacteria listeria there have been in the last year for which figures are available; whether there has been an increase or decrease in the incidence of such cases; and what evidence there is that the cook-chill method of preparation encourages these bacteria to flourish.

Mr. Mellor: I am informed of one well-documented case of food-associated listeriosis in 1986. No such cases were reported in 1987. To date in 1988 there have been three cases. None of these was associated with the cook-chill system of catering. I am satisfied that provided the Department's guidelines on cook-chill catering are carefully followed, microbiologically sound food will be produced.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of food poisoning due to campylobacter there have been in the last year for which figures are available; what indications there are as to whether the figures are declining or increasing; and what evidence there is that refrigeration helps the bacteria to thrive in poultry and underdone meat.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In most instances there is no evidence which specifically links individual reported cases of campylobacter infection with a particular food. In 1984 there were 20,861 laboratory reports of campylobacter enteritis. In 1987 this figure had increased to 25,900 and in a small proportion of these it was possible to identify a food vehicle. There is no evidence to show that the organism grows in food, refrigerated or otherwise.

Whitley Council

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many appeals are currently being processed by the Whitley council procedures in (a) Sunderland health authority, (b) Hartlepool health authority and (c) Durham health authority.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

Midwifery Students

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many entrants for future student midwifery courses have withdrawn their application since 1 October.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

Heart Transplant Programme

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's heart transplant programme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The number of heart and heart-lung transplants carried out in the United Kingdom has grown significantly this year. In the period 1 January to 25 November 1988, 348 heart and heart-lung transplants were performed compared with 288 over the same period last year.

Revenue funding for the heart transplant programme will rise from £6·8 million in 1988-89 to £9·1 million in 1989-90, a cash increase of over one third. This will provide for about 50 extra heart and heart-lung transplants above current levels and for the follow-up of over 350 patients successfully transplanted in earlier years. Nearly £1 million of capital will be spent in 1989-90 on essential developments at the transplant centres. I shall also be asking the supra-regional services advisory group to advise me on the location of a fifth heart transplant which will receive central funding from April 1990.

This expanding programme, which is at the forefront of medical technology, shows the Government's determination to modernise and improve the NHS.

Opticians

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he can give information as to who was available to present evidence to the ophthalmic service committee of the Manchester family practitioner committee investigation referred to in his reply to the hon. Member for Oldham West, on 5 July, Official Report, columns 516-17.

Mr. Mellor: The ophthalmic service committee obtained written evidence from the patients and opticians involved and decided, in accordance with the National Health Service (Service Committees and Tribunal) Regulations 1974, that the investigation could be determined without a hearing.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will consider the introduction of an arbitration officer to determine a fair level of fees for people in private residential and nursing homes.

Mrs. Currie: The level of fees charged in these homes is a matter between the proprietors and the residents, or whoever pays on the residents' behalf, and not one in which we would wish to intervene.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report the prescription charges for patients who do not qualify for exemptions for each medicament included in the limited list.

Mr. Mellor: NHS patients must pay a prescription charge of £2·60 for each item prescribed at NHS expense unless they qualify for exemption. If a patient is given a private prescription for a drug or other product which is not available at NHS expense there is no prescription charge, but the patient must pay the pharmacist the full cost of the item supplied.

Artificial Hips

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many National Health Service artificial hip operations took place in the last year for which figures are available; and what is the approximate average cost of this operation.

Mrs. Currie: We estimate that the number of total hip replacement and other arthroplasty of hip operations performed in NHS hospitals in England in 1986 was 40,000. The average cost of such operations is about £2,400 (1988-89 prices).

Wheelchairs

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what would be the approximate cost of providing powered outdoor wheelchairs for all boys suffering from muscular dystrophy;

(2) what representations he has received regarding the provision of powered outdoor wheelchairs for boys suffering from muscular dystrophy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Most boys with muscular dystrophy would probably need a wheelchair for certain periods of their life. On the best information available, and depending on the type of wheelchair provided, the approximate cost may be in the region of £¼ million—£1¼ million. We have received no representations on this issue.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the latest estimate of the additional cost of providing a powered wheelchair that could be used outside and inside instead of just inside;

(2) how many powered wheelchairs are currently on issue through the wheelchair service; and what is the estimated number of those using powered indoor wheelchairs who would benefit from having a powered wheelchair that could also be used outside;

(3) which aspects of wheelchair provision are now being handled by the regions and which remain the responsibility of the Disablement Services Authority.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the annual amount allocated to the Disablement Services Authority; and what proportion of this amount is available for the improvement of appliances, and in particular, for improved wheelchairs.

Mr. Mellor: These are matters for the Disablement Services Authority, to which the right hon. Member should address questions.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the annual expenditure in each of the last five years on wheelchair provision; what has been the percentage increase each year; and what has been the percentage annual increase in expenditure on all health provision.

Mr. Mellor: The annual expenditure in each of the last five financial years on wheelchairs provision plus the percentage increases is as follows:

Financial year	£	Per cent.
1983-84	22,210,329	—
1984-85	24,592,517	10·72
1985-86	25,863,573	5·16
1986-87	27,265,645	5·42
1987-88	29,413,356	7·87

National Health Service gross expenditure percentage annual increase on all health provision in England is as follows:

	Cash terms	Real terms
1983-84	5·9	1·2
1984-85	7·4	2·8
1985-86	5·8	−0·2
1986-87	7·6	4·0
1987-88	9·9	4·6

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultation there has been between his Department and the Disablement Services Authority regarding the provision of powered outdoor wheelchairs.

Mr. Mellor: Following a recommendation in the McColl report that powered occupant-controlled outdoor wheelchairs should be supplied by the wheelchair service, the DSA has decided to undertake a 12-month pilot study to gain information and experience in the supply of powered indoor/outdoor wheelchairs. Consultation between the Department and the DSA has not been appropriate since this is a matter for the authority.

Pacemakers

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many National Health Service operations to implant a pacemaker took place in the last year for which figures are available; and what is the approximate average cost of this operation.

Mrs. Currie: We estimate that in 1985 (the latest year for which we hold information centrally), there were 6,360 operations to insert pacemakers.

The average cost, based on a study by Trent regional health authority, is approximately £1,700 for the first implantation and £1,500 for a replacement, at 1986-87 prices.

Prescribing Responsibility

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list for 1976 and each subsequent year the number of complaints received by his Department concerning non-compliance with the policy on prescribing responsibility set out in HN(76)69; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list for years 1986 and 1987 the complaints received by his Department concerning non-compliance with the policy on prescribing responsibility set out in HN(76)69, indicating in each case the health authority involved, the nature of the complaint, and the action taken.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold information in the form requested. In the years 1986 and 1987 about 70 items of correspondence referring to prescribing responsibility were received from health authorities, general practitioners and others. The Department has investigated all complaints received regarding non-compliance with our advice on prescribing responsibility for outpatients in HN(76)69 and more recently in DA(87)10.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate how many women are likely to be screened for breast cancer in (a) 1989, (b) 1990 and (c) 1991.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that we do not have this information available centrally. The breast cancer screening programme is being implemented over the three years to 1990. We shall collect statistics centrally on the number of women screened once the service has been fully implemented. We hope that by 1993 all women aged between 50 and 64 will have been invited for screening.

Ambulancemen

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the report from the Ambulance Council working party on "The Problems of Long Serving Ambulancemen", which concluded its report in September 1985.

Mr. Mellor: We intend giving the contents of the final report careful consideration including a decision about publication when it is submitted to Ministers.

Erythroprotein

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether any financial assistance is to be provided to renal units to enable them to purchase stocks of erythroprotein;

(2) whether erythroprotein has passed its clinical trials; and how soon he expects it to be generally available to renal units.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 December 1988]: Information about whether a product licence application under the Medicines Act 1968 has been made or the results of any associated trials is treated as confidential and it is not possible to say if or when this product will become generally available and on what terms.

Doctors' Pay

58. Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the real terms increase in doctors' remuneration since 1979.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 13 December 1988]: 25·5 per cent. between 1978-79 and 1987-88.

Orthotists

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many orthotists there are in England; and how many orthotists there are in England per 100,000 people.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 13 December 1988]: Most orthotists in England are employed by the private sector and we do not collect information on their numbers. Orthotists employed by the NHS in England are graded as medical physics technicians and are not identified separately on manpower returns.

South Western RHA

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the sources of funding for the South Western regional health authority's regional computer centre and regional design service, which enable them to be self-financing.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 13 December 1988]: The regional computer centre and the design service charge fees for the services that they provide. Their customers are primarily health authorities within the South Western region and elsewhere.

Project 2000

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding arrangements have been made for the implementation of nurse training under Project 2000; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 13 December 1988]: In the Autumn Statement the Government announced additional funding for the NHS in 1989-90 which included £12 million for nurse education and training. This is additional to the provision already made for nurse education by health authorities from their existing allocations and is intended to provide extra funds for post-basic education and Project 2000.

Decisions on the allocation of the additional funds for Project 2000 will be taken when authorities submit costed implementation plans to the Department. They have been asked to submit these by the end of February 1989.

Health Authorities (Meetings)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make it his policy that minutes of district and regional health authority sub-committee meetings be made available to community health councils, providing that patient, staff and commercial confidentiality is maintained;

(2) whether he has any plans to open to the public district health authority meetings or their sub-committee meetings;

(3) if he will make it his policy that minutes of district and regional health authority sub-committee meetings should be made available to the public, providing that patient, staff and commercial confidentiality is maintained.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 13 December 1988]: Under the provisions of the Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act 1960 health authority meetings are open to the public and their agendas and related papers available on request, except when confidential matters are under consideration. Most regional and district health authorities conduct their business in an open manner, as is reasonable. I do not believe that any useful purpose would be served by extending these provisions to sub-committees at the present time.

EMPLOYMENT

YTS

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of companies, employing 100 or more YTS trainees, hire no YTS trainees from (a) the Afro-Caribbean community, (b) the Asian community and (c) ethnic minorities, respectively, in (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) the east midlands and (iii) Leicestershire.

Mr. Cope: I regret that the information requested can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people are without a YTS place after their entitlement to child benefit or bridging allowance ran out; and how many were temporarily in this position during 1988.

Mr. Cope: It is not possible to provide this information. Young people are not obliged to report what they are doing after bridging allowance ceases.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide figures on the number of young people no longer on bridging allowance who have not yet been allocated a YTS place.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 13 December 1988]: It is not possible to provide this information. Young people are not obliged to report what they are doing after bridging allowance ceases.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total expenditure on YTS for 1986, 1987 and the estimated expenditure for 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 13 December 1988]: Figures for Great Britain for financial years are published in the 1988 Public Expenditure White Paper. Taking into account the changes made by the winter supplementary Estimates the figures are:

	£ millions
1986-87	874
1987-88	[1]1,006
1988-89	[2]1,145
1989-90	[2]1,189
1990-91	[2]1,156

[1] Estimated outturn.
[2] Plans.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the cost of publicity of the YTS programme.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 13 December 1988]: The planned YTS marketing budget for 1988-89 is £5·9 million.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unfilled places by region, there were on YTS at the most recently available date and at the same date one year previously.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 12 December 1988]: The number of unfilled YTS places as at 31 October 1987 and 1988 is given in the table.

Region	31 October 1987	31 October 1988
South East	20,109	15,698
London	16,030	10,064
South West	14,763	11,456
West Midlands	26,899	20,663
East Midlands and Eastern	18,300	13,973
Yorkshire and Humberside	15,050	9,245
North West	26,837	14,268
Northern	11,761	6,904
Wales	8,365	3,352
Scotland	19,571	12,835
Great Britain	177,685	118,458

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people have experienced benefit penalties for leaving YTS early since it was designated an approved training scheme.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

The youth training scheme (YTS) was designated an approved training scheme on 10 March 1983. Between December 1983 and April 1988, the period for which information is available, a total of 24,204 people had their supplementary benefit reduced for leaving courses early.

Community Opportunity Posts

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria were operated in deciding how many community opportunities posts were allocated to each training area; what is the decision making process operated by Training Agency area offices whereby host organisations are awarded community opportunities posts; and what value-for-money measurements are applied in this process.

Mr. Nicholls: In developing the arrangements for community opportunities, Training Agency area offices took into account the make-up of their area, the likely size of the client group, and the buoyancy of the local labour market.

In selecting host organisations area office staff considered the following criteria:

(i) proven experience in arranging voluntary activity for individuals;
(ii) ability to access a range of voluntary activity to meet the differing needs of clients;
(iii) ability to relate to, and well established links with, voluntary organisations in the community;
(iv) a local base in the area, together with the necessary facilities to accommodate a co-ordinator on their premises;
(v) operation of an equal opportunities policy.

Account was also taken of the effectiveness with which the host organisation could organise the opportunities for employment training leavers, and the performance of host organisations will be carefully monitored.

Training Places (Merseyside)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many Employment training scheme places have been taken up on Merseyside service since the inception of the scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: At 2 December 1988, there were 3,446 people training on employment training on Merseyside.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employment training scheme places have been taken up in Blyth Valley.

Mr. Nicholls: At 2 December 1988, there were 1,682 people training on employment training in the north Tyne area, including Blyth Valley.

Disabled People

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of disabled people of working age are employed in Blyth Valley; and what action he is taking to increase job opportunities for disabled people in Blyth Valley.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested in the first part of the question is not available.

My Department maintains a comprehensive network of services to help people with disabilities find and retain jobs through advice, assessment, rehabilitation and training; and in the case of people with severe disabilities, support in the form of sheltered employment. My officers are continuing to give all possible help to people with disabilities in Blyth Valley through the application of these services against a background of increasing employment opportunities.

Creche Facilities

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what inquiries his Department is making to establish the effect lack of creche facilities has on employment.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department is currently participating in the work of the ministerial group on women's issues on childcare in the context of women's employment. Among other aspects the group is considering the availability of childcare and the effects that the lack of it may have on women's employment.

Benefits (Adjudications)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current average waiting time for adjudications relating to reasons of dismissal in cases where claimants were waiting for unemployment benefit.

Mr. Nicholls: Information is not available in the precise form requested. However the speed with which adjudication officers make decisions—that is, the time taken between their receiving a referral and reaching a decision after making all the necessary inquiries—is monitored in a 5 per cent. sample of cases.

The sample shows that, for the three-month period ending 30 June 1988, the percentage of cases decided within four weeks of referral to an adjudication officer, on whether a claimant was dismissed due to misconduct, was 62·6 per cent.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many cases are currently being dealt with by unemployment benefit adjudication officers in the constituency of Stoke-on-Trent, North;

(2) how many unemployment benefit adjudication officers are available to serve the constituency of Stoke-on-Trent, North.

Mr. Nicholls: Figures are not available by constituency of the number of cases considered by adjudication officers, or the number of adjudication officers who serve that area.

However on 2 December 1988, the total number of cases currently in the process of adjudication arising on claims for unemployment benefit in the adjudication office area of Staffordshire, which includes the Stoke-on-Trent, North constituency, was 3,204.

The number of adjudication officers in post on 2 December 1988 in the Staffordshire adjudication office was nine.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Pensions

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the basic state pension and the state earnings-related pension have fallen as a percentage of annual earnings since May 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

The full basic state pension, as a percentage of average earnings for male manual workers, was 22·5 per cent. in November[1] 1979 and in April 1988 the percentage was 20·5.

It is not possible to calculate corresponding precentages for the State Earnings-Related Pension Scheme because it is not a fixed rate pension.

[1]The information given is for the date of uprating.

ENVIRONMENT

Football Clubs (Membership Scheme)

18. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the proposed national membership scheme for Football League clubs.

55. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received seeking greater flexibilty for his proposals for a national football card membership scheme; and if he will make a statement.

71. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on his proposals to promote a full membership scheme for Football League clubs.

Mr. Moynihan: I have received nearly 650 letters about the national membership scheme from right hon. and hon. Members, members of the public and from various organisations since the meeting between the Prime Minister and the football authorities on 6 July. In addition, I have received a large number of proposals to implement the scheme from computer companies and others.

91. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will meet the directors of Barnsley football club to discuss proposed membership schemes.

Mr. Moynihan: My diary is already very full for the coming months but I am happy to meet directors of Barnsley football club if mutually convenient arrangements can be made.

25. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent talks he has had with the football authorities about the Government scheme for membership cards for football spectators.

46. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has held with the football authorities concerning the introduction of a compulsory membership scheme.

Mr. Moynihan: I had lengthy discussions about the proposed national membership scheme for football supporters with the football authorities at meetings of the working party which I chaired, between July and October this year.

32. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will meet the new president of the Football League to discuss identity cards for football supporters.

Mr. Moynihan: I hope to meet the new president of the Football League shortly.

Houses in Multiple Occupation

20. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of houses in multiple occupation following his Department's consultation document issued in July on houses in multiple occupation.

Mr. Trippier: We are considering what changes to existing legislation might be appropriate in the light of the 200 responses received to consultation.

Water Authorities (Land and Building Assets)

21. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the land and building assets owned by the English and Welsh water authorities.

Mr. Howard: This information is not available centrally.

Rate Support Grant Settlement

22. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the proposed rate support grant settlement for 1989-90.

Mr. Gummer: I have received representations from about 110 local authorities and comments from the local authority associations.

Estate Action Programme

23. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the level of expenditure on the estate action programme in 1987-88; and what is planned for 1988-89.

Mr. Trippier: We increased the resources made available under the estate action programme from £75 million in 1987-88 to £140 million in 1988-89. A further 36 per cent. increase to £190 million is planned for next financial year.

Planning Inquiries (Public Representation)

24. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will increase the opportunities for public representation at planning inquiries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The rules of procedure at planning inquiries, in addition to conferring rights of appearance on certain parties, give inspectors wide discretion to allow members of the public to make representations. I believe that inspectors exercise that discretion reasonably; but in fairness to everyone involved, they do on occasions have a responsibility to control representations which are clearly irrelevant or repetitious.

Hazardous Waste

26. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce further controls on handling of hazardous waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Following extensive consultation we announced our conclusions and intention to legislate on 29 June. A further consultation paper was issued on 23 November. A review of the special waste regulations is well advanced and we expect to consult on this early next year.

District Council Rates (Essex)

27. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the average rate increase for district councils in Essex for 1989-90.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We estimate that if district authorities in Essex spend in line with the proposed 1989-90 rate support grant settlement, and make the same use of balances as this year, then average rate increase would be around 3 per cent.

Stonehenge

28. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made with regard to the creation of a new visitors' centre at Stonehenge.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Progress on this scheme is a matter for English Heritage.

Nirex

29. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next expects to meet the chairman of United Kingdom Nirex; and what matters will be discussed.

69. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next expects to meet the chairman of United Kingdom Nirex; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next expects to meet the chairman of United Kingdom Nirex; and what matters will be discussed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Members to the answer that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing).

Competitive Tendering (Lancashire)

30. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to meet the leader of Lancashire county council to discuss competitive tendering; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to meet the leader of Lancashire county council to discuss competitive tendering. I recently had discussions with the authority on a range of local government issues.

Nurses (Property Taxes)

31. Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about what a typical ward sister would pay in (a) rates, (b) community charge and (c) a system of capital value rates plus local income tax paid in the proportions of 80:20, respectively, if she lived in a typical one-bedroomed flat in the London borough of Kensington and Chelsea.

93. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to what a typical ward sister would pay in (a) rates, (b) community charge and (c) a system of capital value rates plus local income tax paid in the proportions of 80:20, respectively, if she lived in a typical one-bedroomed flat in the London borough of Lambeth.

54. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to what a typical ward sister would pay in (a) rates, (b) community charge and (c) a system of capital value rates plus local income tax paid in the proportions of 80:20, respectively, if she lived in a typical one-bedroomed flat in the London borough of Camden.

67. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to what a typical ward sister would pay in (a) rates, (b) community charge and (c) a system of capital value rates plus local income tax paid in the proportions of 80:20, respectively, is she lived in a typical one-bedroomed flat in the London borough of Hammersmith and Fulham.

86. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to what a typical ward sister would pay in (a) rates, (b) community charge and (c) a system of capital value rates plus local income tax paid in the proportions of 80:20, respectively, if she lived in a typical one-bedroom flat in the London borough of Greenwich.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer that I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Sir G. Finsberg).

Rating Reform

37. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the poll tax which will be levied in Nottingham.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. I wrote to the hon. Member on 6 December about the level of the community charge in Nottingham.

The Government have made no estimates of community charges. We published on 23 June illustrative figures showing what the community charge would have been in each area, had the new system been in force in 1988-89. Those illustrative figures assume existing levels of spending and existing local authority responsibilities. On that basis, the personal community charge in Nottingham would have been £251. Under the Government's safety net proposals this figure would have been reduced to £231 in the first year of the new system.

40. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made by local authorities in preparing for the introduction of the community charge in England.

Mr. Gummer: Many local authorities are clearly making good progress in preparing for the introduction of the community charge. I intend to monitor progress carefully in the months ahead.

51. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on any campaign to refuse to pay the community charge.

Mr. Gummer: I am aware that a number of individuals have said that they do not intend to pay the community charge. Such action would, of course, be both unlawful and futile.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the average national community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have made no estimates of community charges. We published on 23 June illustrative figures showing what the community charge would have been in each area, had the new system been in force in 1988-89. Those illustrative figures assume existing levels of spending and existing local authority responsibilities. On that basis, the average personal community charge in England would have been £246.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much the standard rate of income tax would need to be raised if the expected amount of revenue generated by the poll tax were to be raised through income tax.

Mr. Gummer: On 23 June the Government published illustrative community charge figures, based on local authority spending in 1988-89; copies are in the Library. Those figures also showed the rate of local income tax that would be needed to raise the same revenue. The average increase in income tax rates across England would be 6·4p.

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he is making to ensure that the public are informed of the way in which the new community charge system will operate.

Mr. Gummer: The Department of the Environment published yesterday a new booklet giving up-to-date information on the new community charge system which will be introduced in April 1990. It is available free on request. The Department will also be publishing shortly seven supplementary leaflets, giving more detailed information on particular aspects of the system, for example, on exemptions and appeals. These, too, will be available free on request. Copies have been placed in the Library. The total cost of producing the booklet and leaflets is estimated at £80,000.

We shall also send a leaflet to all households in England next May to coincide with canvassing by local authorities to prepare the register of those liable to pay the community charge. The leaflet will help people to understand the purpose of the canvass and what they need to do. We estimate that the cost of producing and distributing it would be of the order of £980,000.

Since May this year we have issued, jointly with local authority associations, a series of practice notes to individual local authorities and interested organisations dealing with the practical and technical details of the new system. Nine practice notes have so far been published at a cost of £9,000. Twelve more are in preparation. One of the practice notes contained a model canvass form with associated information notes. We are arranging to have the form and notes translated into five minority languages for use by local authorities where appropriate.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in the draft regulations at present being prepared on enforcement of poll tax payments, he will amend the relevant regulations that currently apply in Scotland.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 December 1988]: No. My right hon. Friend's regulation-making powers in respect of enforcement in the Local Government Finance Act 1988 do not extend to the amendment of Scottish legislation on enforcement of the community charge.

Clay Pigeon Shooting

33. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why he did not consult the Clay Pigeon Shooting Association on the recent general development order relating to permitted days.

Mr. Chope: My Department is issuing a consultation paper this week about whether the order should be amended to revert to 28 days. The Clay Pigeon Shooting Association will be among those consulted.

80. Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to have consultations with the Clay Pigeon Shooting Association about the General Development Order 1988 and the reduction of shooting days from 28 to 14.

Mr. Chope: My Department is issuing a consultation paper this week; a copy is being sent to the Clay Pigeon Shooting Association.

96. Mr. Marland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to respond to the views of the Clay Pigeon Shooting Association, by reverting to the 28 days permitted use set by the General Development Order 1988.

Mr. Chope: My Department is issuing this week a consultation paper about whether the General Development Order 1988 should be amended to revert to a maximum 28 days permitted use rights for clay pigeon shooting. The Clay Pigeon Shooting Association and the Sports Council are among those we are consulting.

Homelessness

34. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest figures of homeless households in (a) London and (b) England and Wales.

Mr. Trippier: In the quarter ending September 1988 English local authorities accepted 30,220 households under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: of these 7,550 were accepted by London boroughs.

63. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to seek to amend the homeless persons legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I have nothing to add to the reply given to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin) on 6 December at column 198.

Homelessness

38. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the causes of the increase in the numbers of families accepted as homeless by local authorities since 1983.

Mr. Trippier: Estimates of the number of households accepted by local authorities in England under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act broken down by the immediate reasons for homelessness are as follows:

thousands

Immediate reason for homelessness	1983	1987
Parents, relatives or friends no longer able/willing to accommodate	32·2	47·3
Breakdown of relationship with partner	15·3	20·2
Mortgage arrears	4·8	10·5
Rent arrears—LA dwellings	1·8	2·0
Rent arrears—other dwelling	1·7	1·8
Other reasons for loss of non-LA dwelling	8·3	10·6
Loss of service tenancy/tied accommodation	4·4	4·8
Other	9·8	15·2
TOTAL	78·2	112·4

Rate Support Grant (Brent)

35. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the level of rate support grant for the London borough of Brent.

Mrs. Bottomley: On our latest calculations, Brent will receive £74 million of block grant this year.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be laying the 1989-90 rate support grant settlement shortly. Under our consultation proposals Brent would receive £86 million, £19 million more than this year after allowing for the changed treatment of polytechnics. This is an increase of 28 per cent. over 1988-89.

Inspectorates (Staffing)

36. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to review the staffing complement of the inspectorate in his Department dealing into air, water and waste.

89. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to increase the numbers of hazardous and waste inspectors.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: On 7 December my noble Friend the Minister for Housing Environment and Countryside announced that 13 additional posts will be created to strengthen the professional capacity of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in the spheres of air, water quality and waste. Among other things this will help with implementing the large combustion plant directive, administering the EC directive on the disposal of sewage sludge to land, and developing a programme of inspection of waste disposal authorities and major waste disposal sites. We shall continue to keep the manpower and resource needs of the inspectorate under review in the light of current circumstances and priorities.

Water Industry (Expenditure)

39. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the change in the level of capital expenditure by the water industry between 1979-80 and 1988-89.

42. Mr. Iain Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the change in the level of capital expenditure by the water industry between (a) 1974-75 and 1979-80, and (b) 1980-81 and to date.

Mr. Moynihan: Capital expenditure on DOE services, in real terms, decreased by 33 per cent. between 1974-75 and 1979-80, and increased by 52 per cent. from 1979-80 to the present.

Ozone Layer (Conference)

41. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the progress being made on the calling of the London conference on the ozone layer.

87. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on the international conference to be held on the subject of the ozone layer.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The London conference "Saving the Ozone Layer" will be held in the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre on 5-7 March 1989, Ministers from developed and developing countries are being invited to attend, as well as world industry and international organisations. Initial reactions have been very favourable. The executive director of the United Nations environment programme (UNEP) has offered his warm support for the conference, which is designed to support existing international efforts to protect the ozone layer. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is considering the detailed programme for the conference in consultation with UNEP.

Water Bill

43. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the Water Bill.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend continues to receive representations covering various measures proposed in the Water Bill.

Rate Support Grant

44. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest available figure for the amount of rate support grant to local authorities throughout Great Britain; and what was the figure in 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The latest estimate of rate support grant is £12,702 million for 1988-89. In 1979-80 it was £9,001 million.

Sheltered Housing

45. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to make additional funds available to meet the increased demand for sheltered housing.

Mr. Trippier: Most elderly people wish to remain in their own homes for as long as possible and grants are available for improvements and adaptations. Local authorities must assess need in their areas and secure provision, with the private sector and other agencies, especially housing associations. The extra resources planned for housing in the PES period include an 80 per cent. increase in the Housing Corporation programme.

Football-related Incidents

47. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many arrests there have been in football-related incidents inside and outside grounds in the 1986-87 and 1987-88 seasons.

Mr. Moynihan: The total number of arrests made at league matches in seasons 1986-87 and 1987-88 is as follows:

	Arrests
1986-87	5,531
1987-88	6,147

The Association of Chief Police Officers does not hold information on the number of arrests for football-related incidents away from the grounds.

Rivers (Quality)

48. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of rivers in England are of good or fair quality.

Mr. Moynihan: Water authority data shows that 89 per cent. of the river length in England was assessed as being of good or fair quality in 1987.

Regional Water Authorities

49. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairmen of the regional water authorities; and what was discussed.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend last met the water authority chairmen on 5 December when a wide range of issues affecting the water industry were discussed.

Departmental Relocation

50. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussion he has had about relocating his Department's establishments and personnel from the south to the north of Britain.

Mr. Ridley: About 56 per cent. of the Property Services Agency's non-industrial staff are already located outside the agency's London and south-east regions. The PSA is to be reorganised into three separate businesses between now and April 1990. I shall be considering relocation in the context of the future shape of the agency.

For the Department of the Environment, over one fifth of the staff are already outside London and the south-east. My aim is to relocate as many more of these as makes financial and operational sense. To that end, all areas of the Department's work were considered in the summer and some prima facie candidates for relocation identified. Detailed studies of costs and benefits are needed before firm decisions can be taken. These are in progress.

Land Transfers

52. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the average total of land transferred from farmland to urban uses each decade since 1958; what steps he proposes to take to increase the availability of land for building; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's records show that in the periods 1958-68, 1968-78 and 1978-85 the average estimated net area of farmland transferred to urban and industrial development (including mineral workings) each year in England was 14,000, 13,400 and 5,100 hectares respectively. More recent data in this series are not yet available. The planning policy guidance note "Local Plans" (PPG12) issued on 30 November emphasises that it is the responsibility of local planning authorities to make realistic provision for the foreseeable development needs of their area, in general conformity with the structure plan. In the last two years about 46 per cent. of new housing in England has been on derelict or vacant land in urban areas; the Government are committed to policies of restraint in green belts and other environmentally important areas.

Water Quality

53. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to increase the number of staff involved in the monitoring of water quality.

Mr. Moynihan: The monitoring of drinking water quality will continue to be carried out by local authorities. However my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will also appoint technical assessors to ensure that water undertakers comply with the standards.

Water Authorities (Assets)

56. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he intends to value the assets of water authorities prior to privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department is discussing with representatives of the water authorities what new valuation work should be undertaken in connection with the preparation of prospectuses. No decision has yet been taken.

Leasehold (North-West)

57. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the operation of the leasehold system in the north-west of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: We have received a number of representations recently from hon. Members and others, most of which relate to the activities of Salt Properties Ltd.

I deplore the activities of landlords and their agents who seek to exploit their tenants. Leaseholders who receive unexpected demands should check the terms of their leases and seek advice if necessary.

Under the Leasehold Reform Act 1967 most long leaseholders of houses can insist on buying their freehold if they want to, but they should not feel obliged to buy simply because the landlord offers to sell.

Planning Regulations

58. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals his Department has for changing planning regulations for building homes close to unstable cliff faces on the sea shore.

Mr. Chope: Existing planning regulations are adequate to deal with development close to unstable cliff faces but advice on how to apply those regulations is needed by planning authorities and developers. My Department has recently carried out a public consultation on draft advice on development on unstable land. The responses are now being considered and the advice will be issued in 1989.

Ozone Layer

59. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further measures he intends to introduce to help protect the ozone layer.

92. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further action he intends to take to lessen the dangers posed to the atmosphere by the use of chlorofluorocarbons.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the light of the advice of the United Kingdom stratospheric ozone review group in their second report published in October 1988 about depletion of the ozone layer and the role of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) we are calling for worldwide emissions of CFCs to be reduced by at least 85 per cent. by the turn of the century and for the Montreal protocol to be strengthened accordingly.

At the Environment Council on 24 November most member states supported the United Kingdom's proposal that the Community should adopt this position in the review of the protocol. In order to underline the worldwide commitment needed to reduce CFC emissions and to demonstrate how these can be achieved my right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State are calling a major international conference next March to which Ministers and world industry are being invited. We have also offered to host the second meeting of the parties to the protocol in April 1990, at which we hope that the further cuts we are demanding will be agreed.

General Development Order 1988

60. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations were held with interested parties before he tabled the General Development Order 1988.

Mr. Chope: We issued a consultation paper, including a draft of the proposed order, in February this year. There were 290 original consultees, and a further 156 copies of the paper were sent to those who requested them. A list of those consultees who responded to the paper will shortly be placed in the House of Commons Library.

New Town Houses

61. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to meet the chairman of the Telford development corporation to discuss the future of the new town houses.

Mr. Trippier: I meet the chairmen of development corporations from time to time to discuss a wide range of issues of mutual interest.

Vehicle Exhaust Emissions

62. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce exhaust emission standards for British vehicles similar to those applying in the United States of America.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yes. The exhaust emission standards for large cars, which the United Kingdom Government will be implementing as part of the Luxembourg agreement, will be equivalent to United States standards. For medium and small cars the recently agreed completion of the Luxembourg agreement will also lead to major reductions in emissions for these vehicles.

Vacant Land

64. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to speed up the development in inner cities of vacant land owned by public bodies.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend has put into action several programmes which can speed up the development of vacant land in inner cities owned by public bodies.

The land registers highlight unused and underused land owned by public bodies, and 13,000 acres of such land in inner cities have been removed from the registers since 1984 because it has been sold or brought into use by the owners. We are consulting public bodies about a new code of practice on the publication of information by those bodies themselves about unused and underused land they own. My right hon. Friend is also using his power to direct the disposal of inner city sites owned by public bodies. He is prepared to consider using these powers more widely when asked to do so in respect of specific sites.

Additionally, nine urban development corporations have been set up in England to stimulate the development of vacant and derelict land in their areas. The urban programme supports projects for improving land and buildings in inner cities so that they can be brought back into economic use. Payments from the derelict land grant programme meet the cost of reclaiming damaged land for development, and there has been a steady annual increase since 1984 in the amount paid to inner city local authorities.

South-East (Population Statistics)

65. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has of the proportion of the population in the south-east region with incomes insufficient to become home owners.

Mr. Trippier: Over 72 per cent. of households in the south-east (excluding London) already own their own homes. We believe that this proportion could increase even further not least through the continuation of the successful right-to-buy programmes.

Low-Cost Housing (East Anglia)

66. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received regarding the need for low-cost housing in East Anglia.

Mr. Trippier: Ministers and officials mantain close contact with housing matters in East Anglia. The Government believe that the new Housing Act will greatly increase scope for the private sector, supported by local authorities to meet the needs of the housing market and increase the supply of low cost housing.

Rented Office Space (London)

68. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to reduce the rented office space in central London which has been pre-let for the Government by the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Chope: The Property Services Agency negotiates pre-let agreements where there is a firm forward requirement for Government use. It is for Departments to determine and justify their accommodation needs and its chosen location, having regard to operational and financial considerations and taking account of the Government's relocation policy. There is expected to be a net reduction of 120,000 sq ft in the overall size of the Government's London estate in the current financial year.

"The Green Gauntlet"

70. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to make a response to the document entitled "The Green Gauntlet," a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: "The Green Gauntlet" is a welcome contribution to the continuing debate on environmental matters. We shall consider it, alongside the views of other interests, as we take forward our policies for safeguarding the environment.

Rates

72. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the level of rate rises from April 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We estimate that if all authorities in England spend in line with the proposed 1989-90 rate support grant settlement, the average rate increase for next year will be substantially less than inflation.

Denis-Wild Houses

73. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to persuade building societies to offer mortgage advances on Denis-Wild type houses.

Mr. Trippier: The Building Research Establishment has published technical advice on the structural condition of Denis-Wild houses, and on their inspection and assessment. My Department liaises regularly with the Building Societies Association on the dissemination of such information, and will bring to its attention any particular problems concerning mortgageability.

Sewage (Sea Disposal)

74. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken to control the discharge of sewage into the sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Discharges of sewage by water authorities are regulated by consents granted on behalf of the Secretary of State by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

The consent procedure will be used so as to ensure that discharges which at present have deemed consents will be determined positively. These consents, together with consents for new discharges, will be set so as to respect the EC bathing water directive, where it applies, and generally to reduce pollution by sewage.

Council House Sales

75. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses have been sold to sitting tenants in England since May 1979.

Mr. Trippier: From April 1979 to September 1988, about 960,000 tenants bought their homes from English local authorities and new towns.

Housing Investment Programme

76. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to announce details of individual local authority housing investment programme allocations.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 8 December in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Mr. Patnick) at column 274.

Estate Action

77. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the planned level of expenditure on the estate action programme in (a) 1988-89 and (b) 1989-90.

Mr. Trippier: The provision for additional allocations under the estate action programme in 1988-89 is £140 million. We expect that local authorities will make full use of these resources in expenditure in the current year.

For 1989-90 the estate action budget has been increased by 36 per cent. to £190 million. The initial distribution between the regions will be as follows:

	Total £ million
London	33·643
North West	51·606
Merseyside	18·423
Yorkshire and Humberside	22·175
Northern	13·545
East Midlands	10·719
West Midlands	25·736
South East	1·040
Eastern	1·115
South West	2·025
	180·027

A total of £10 million will be held as a central reserve to provide flexibility in managing the programme and to support good new schemes which might come forward later in the year.

The distribution of resources between the regions is based upon the volume and quality of bids received from local authorities for individual schemes.

I am delighted that the Government's desire to improve living conditions on neglected and run-down council housing estates will receive this very considerable boost.

Chlorofluorocarbons

78. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy for containing the emission of chlorofluorocarbons arising from dry cleaning establishments; what consultation has taken place with the dry cleaning business on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Officials of the Department of the Environment and of the Department of Trade and Industry hold regular meetings with representatives of the users of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs), including the dry-cleaning sector, on the steps that they are taking to reduce use of CFCs to the maximum possible extent. The major dry cleaning solvent used in the United Kingdom is perchlorethylene rather than CFC113.

I am advised that all dry cleaning machines are sealed to be gas-tight, that solvent purification takes place within machines and that they are fitted with refrigeration units to condense solvent vapours and minimise potential emissions. Any solvent remaining in residues is recovered before exposure to the atmosphere. The industry is nevertheless looking at ways of developing even greater economy of use and has produced guidelines on machine operation, which includes proper use of solvents.

Planning Appeals

79. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is contemplating new guidelines and instructions for inspectors hearing appeals against the refusal of planning permission in the future.

Mr. Chope: A new planning policy guidance note on local plans was published on 30 November. The note stresses the importance of formally adopted and up-to-date local plans which are consistent with national and regional policies and with the relevant provisions of the structure plan. The note indicates that where there is such a plan, together with properly substantiated reasons for the local authority's decisions, my right hon. Friend and his inspectors will be guided by it in dealing with planning appeals.

Inspectors will take this new advice into account, along with other material considerations, in hearing appeals.

Mr. Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to use the powers granted to him in the Housing and Planning Act 1986 to enable appellants who prosecute planning appeals by means of written representations or local hearings to be awarded costs against an unreasonable local authority.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to bring these powers into operation, but the matter is being kept under review.

Mortgage Repossessions

81. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest figures for mortgage repossessions (a) for owner-occupiers as a whole and (b) for former council tenants who have exercised the right to buy.

Mr. Trippier: Building societies took 9,770 properties into possession in the first six months of 1988, a fall of 13 per cent. compared with the previous six-month period. Statistics available do not distinguish between houses bought under the right to buy and others.

Planning Inquiries

82. Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance is given to planning inspectors as to the weight they should give to local opinion in reaching their decisions.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend and his planning inspectors are subject to the requirement in section 29 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 that those who decide planning applications must have regard to the provisions of the development plan, so far as is material to the application, and to any other material considerations. Accordingly, inspectors give weight to local opinion in so far as it relates to material land-use planning considerations.

First-time House Buyers

83. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the price/incomes ratio for first-time buyers in (a) London and (b) other regions of England and Wales.

Mr. Trippier: Information for those with building society mortgages is published in table 10.11 in "Housing and Construction Statistics 1977-87", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Water Pollution

85. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken to penalise water authorities which supply contaminated water to consumers.

Mr. Moynihan: The Water Bill will provide a new and strengthened legal basis for drinking water quality standards. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be able to enforce compliance with the EC standards and will also introduce a new provision making it an offence for a water undertaker to supply water unfit for human consumption.

98. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to reduce pollution from sewage discharges into the Bristol channel.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave today to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones). The measures apply generally, and no special rules are needed for the Bristol channel.

Housing Costs

88. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assumptions his Department uses of the maximum percentage of disposable income which can be allocated to housing costs.

Mr. Trippier: Although income levels are considered in determining rates of subsidy no view is taken of the maximum percentage of disposable income that can be allocated to housing costs.

Outer London Boroughs (Redevelopment)

90. Mr. John L. Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received recently about the state and scale of redevelopment in outer London boroughs.

Mr. Chope: We have received several representations from hon. Members, councillors, and members of the public about pressures for intensive redevelopment of sites in established residential areas. Advice on the inclusion in local plans of policies on residential densities was included in planning policy guidance note No. 12, published on 30 November.

Water Authorities (Land and Buildings)

94. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the results of any consultants' work commissioned by him into the extent and value of water authority land and buildings.

Mr. Moynihan: No decision has yet been taken on the commissioning of new work on valuation of water authority land. Relevant information on the land of the successor companies will be contained in the companies' prospectuses.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the value of land and buildings owned by the water authorities.

Mr. Moynihan: The net asset value of the water authorities' land and buildings is shown in their published annual accounts.

House Prices

95. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the link between house prices and job vacancies in the south-east.

Mr. Trippier: My Department keeps under review the evidence about the effect that house prices have on migration between regions. But I do not consider that house prices are the main influence on the number of job vacancies in the south-east as a whole.

Green Belt

97. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement regarding enforcement of green belt restrictions.

Mr. Chope: There is a general presumption against inappropriate development in green belts. The policy is set out in planning policy guidance note No. 2 (PPG2) published in January 1988. My right hon. Friend, and planning inspectors, apply this policy in determining appeals and call-ins. We expect local planning authorities to have similar regard to green belt policy in the exercise of their planning functions.

Empty Properties

99. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the number of council house properties currently standing empty in the Bury area; and how many have remained unoccupied for more than three months.

Mr. Trippier: The latest available information was provided by Bury MBC in their 1988 housing investment programme return (HIP1), a copy of which is in the Library. The return shows the number of council houses which had been empty for more than six months at 1 April, but it does not give any further breakdown of those empty for six months or less.

Red List (Dangerous Substances)

Mr. Redmond: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he intends to halve the number of dangerous substances that are listed in the United Kingdom red list; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The ministerial declaration following the second international conference on the protection of the North sea called for substantial reductions (of the order of 50 per cent.) by 1995 in the total quantity of substances which are toxic, persistent and liable to bioaccumulate entering the North sea via rivers and estuaries.

The United Kingdom reduction programme will focus in particular on a "red list" of the most dangerous substances, proposals for the selection of which were set out in a consultation paper published in July. That paper also included proposals for a new approach towards controlling inputs of the most dangerous substances, involving the application of strict environmental quality standards, the use of best available technology (not entailing excessive cost) for the main point source discharges, and measures to minimise inputs from diffuse sources. These proposals are in line with the range of measures recommended in the North sea conference declaration for the purpose of reducing inputs of the most dangerous substances.

In the meantime, the Department has asked the water authorities in England and Wales to produce action plans setting out their proposals for achieving early reductions in inputs of dangerous substances. Similar plans are being drawn up for Scotland and Northern Ireland. There is certainly no proposal to halve the number of dangerous substances that are being considered for inclusion in the United Kingdom "red list" as the hon. Member's question suggests.

Football Matches (Arrests)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment from what disaggregated sources the totals for the number of arrests at division III and IV Football League matches given in his answer of 5 December are compiled.

Mr. Moynihan: The figures given in my answer to the hon. Member on 5 December were provided by the Association of Chief Police Officers which collates statistics on arrests and ejections from football liaison officers at police forces throughout the country. The form in which the figures are sent to ACPO show only totals of arrests and ejections at each club; they are not broken down into individual matches. Information on individual matches would require direct contact with every liaison officer and extensive searches of police records.

Power Station (Malta)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will monitor the building of a new power station in Malta and its likely effect on the environment, as a means of drawing environmental lessons for the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. I am not aware of information that could be obtained from experiences in Malta that would add to the understanding of conditions in Britain. Full environmental impact assessments are required before power stations can be built in the United Kingdom. All specifically local factors have to be taken into account, as well as the need to conform to emission standards and requirements.

Radioactive Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the policy and technical considerations underpinning the policy choice of early disposal instead of long-term monitorable and retrievable storage of low and intermediate level radioactive wastes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government believe that decisions on the disposal of low and intermediate-level radioactive wastes should not be left to future generations, and that the costs of disposal should be met by the "polluter". It is satisfied that early disposal in general carries a lower risk to workers in the nuclear industry and to the public, and also avoids the provision of costly and extensive storage capacity.

Greenhouse Effect

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has made any representations to the Japanese Government and the Japanese Environment Bureau to persuade them to accept limitations on CFC113, as part of Her Majesty's Government's policy to protect the ozone layer.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. I understand that Japan has ratified the Montreal protocol which limits production and consumption of five chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) including CFC113. The protocol will enter into force on 1 January 1989.

Bracken (Sprays)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department or any relevant agencies have given any guidance to local authorities, landowners and farmers in respect of the environmental and public health implications of using sprays to control the spread of brackens in national parks or other areas of countryside.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Nature Conservancy Council has published guidance on the use of herbicides in nature reserves as "Focus on Nature Conservation" No. 14. This includes a chapter on asulam, which is the chemical normally used to control bracken.

Sea Water (Southend)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in improving the sea water quality at coastal towns in the United Kingdom; and if he is satisfied with the progress made on sea water quality at Southend-on-Sea.

Mr. Howard: Some 60 per cent. of our bathing waters now meet the mandatory standards of the EC bathing water directive. At Southend-on-Sea, although the recently extended outfall has brought about substantial improvements to water quality, further measures are being considered to deal with the problem of storm overflows.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he can give details of the Housing Corporation's approved development programme for 1989-90 and forward plans for 1990-91 and 1991-92; and what grant rates will apply next year to the Housing Corporation's programme of mixed privately and publicly funded schemes.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend announced on 1 November that gross provision for the Housing Corporation in 1989-90 would be £815 million, rising to £1,036 million in 1990-91 and £1,328 million in 1991-92. By 1991-92 gross expenditure by the Housing Corporation is planned to be 80 per cent. above original provision for 1988-89, demonstrating the Government's confidence in the housing association movement to play a central role in the provision of subsidised housing for those in the greatest housing need.

The programme we have now approved for 1989-90 and the provisional plans for the following two years should enable the Housing Corporation to approve schemes in 1989-90 providing about 17,600 homes for rent rising to 24,400 new approvals in 1991-92, over 50 per cent. more than the expected number of approvals in the current financial year. This will be possible not only because of the greatly increased level of public resources being made available, but because of the wider opportunities for private finance opened up by the Housing Act 1988. It is planned that by 1991-92 schemes providing about 80 per cent. of new homes for rent will be approved on a mixed funded basis, combining grant from the corporation with private loan.

Substantial public subsidy will remain available in all cases to ensure that rents are within the reach of those on low incomes. Mixed funded grant rates will vary in different parts of the country because of the significant regional differences in development costs, but the average grant rate in England in 1989-90 will be 75 per cent. The Housing Corporation will publish in due course details of the rates applying to different regions and in respect of different scheme types.

Provision of housing for sale under the corporation's low-cost home ownership programme will also be significantly expanded. The whole of the programme is planned to operate on a mixed funded basis from 1989-90 which should allow the corporation to approve over one-third more new homes than in the current year. By 1991-92 the number of approvals given for housing for sale should be nearly double this year's expected outturn.

In allocating resources regionally for new rented projects, greater emphasis will be placed in 1989-90 and subsequent years on the Housing Corporation's index of housing needs, which will be reviewed to ensure that it reflects housing needs as accurately as possible. A total of £381 million of public and private money will be invested in London and the south-east, where housing pressures are most acute, nearly 40 per cent. more than in the current financial year. But owing to the overall increase in resources available, investment in all other regions will also go up by between 12 per cent. in the north-east and 53 per cent. in the east midlands.

At my request, the Housing Corporation will encourage associations to examine their lettings policies to ensure that priority is given to those in the greatest housing need, especially the homeless. I am convinced that the needs of the homeless are best catered for by focusing sufficient resources in the right places. The greatly expanded overall programme for the Housing Corporation and the improved targeting of resources to areas of greatest need should help provide much needed homes for the homeless.

I have also asked the Housing Corporation to ensure that the needs of those in rural communities are adequately catered for. The corporation will bring forward to 1989-90 its target of giving 600 approvals for new homes in the special rural programme for villages with a population of less than 1,000. A further announcement will be made in due course on targets for later years and the corporation's investment programme in rural areas generally.

I have confidence in the Housing Corporation to make the very best use of the greatly increased level of resources being made available to it within the approved development programme for 1989-90 and provisional plans for the following two years, and to justify the enhanced responsibility it now bears for the provision of subsidised housing for those in housing need.

The breakdown of the approved development programme for 1989-90 and forward plans for the following two years is as follows:

	1989-90 ADP £ million	1990-91 plans £ million	1991-92 plans £ million
Net allocation (cash limit)	701	921	1,211
Receipts	114	115	117
Gross allocation	815	1,036	1,328
Housing for rent

Mixed funding	40	318	587
Major repairs	52	54	62
Mini HAG	4	5	5
Housing for rent—total	699	979	1,265
Housing for sale
Improvement for sale, leasehold scheme for the elderly and shared ownership:
Schemes approved under the Housing Act 1985	65	15	1
Schemes approved under the Housing Act 1988	7	21	30
Home ownership for tenants of charitable associations etc.	39	16	27
Housing for sale—total	111	52	58
Other expenditure	5	5	5

Notes:

1. Included within housing for rent: Housing Act 1988 100 per cent. publicly funded schemes is expenditure to be incurred on schemes to be approved before 1 April 1989 which do not reach tender approval until after 30 September 1989 and are therefore to be be resubmitted under the Housing Act 1988 framework.
2. Other expenditure includes right to buy mortgages and a provision of £1 million to support certain self-build schemes.
3. £8·5 million has been included in the programmes of housing for rent and for sale in 1989-90 to cover the costs of certain projects in Merseyside. Further sums will be made available in subsequent years.

Housing Associations (Tenants)

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance is available to tenants of housing associations who wish to buy homes of their own on the open market.

Mr. Trippier: The Housing Corporation's approved development programme for 1989-90 allocates £39 million for the home ownership scheme for tenants of charitable housing associations, under which portable discounts are paid to people who do not have the right to buy their present homes. There are currently some 3,250 tenants who have applied but are having to wait. They will all be able to proceed by 31 March 1990.

The scheme has helped nearly 6,000 households into home ownership, and released their old homes for reletting, but demand has outpaced the resources available. The rules of the scheme, under the payments are related to right-to-buy discount, are not apt to help as many tenants as possible to buy homes of their own. The scheme is therefore to be superseded by one which will enable resources to be used more efficiently, and no further applications will be accepted after today under the present scheme in England or Wales.

The Housing Corporation is today publishing a consultation document seeking views on proposals for a new scheme to be introduced in 1990-91. Housing for Wales will shortly be publishing a separate consultation document in Wales. The proposals are modelled on the powers in section 129 of the Housing Act 1988 for local authorities to offer financial assistance to tenants to obtain new homes. The forward programme provides substantial funds for the new scheme. It will not be specifically aimed at tenants who do not have the right to buy, but the Housing Corporation envisages that in allocating resources some preference would initially be given to charitable housing associations whose tenants would have qualified for assistance under the present scheme.

Polychlorinated Biphenyls

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the level of polychlorinated biphenyls in the North sea.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 12 December 1988]: Information about inputs of PCBs, concentrations in marine species and ecological effects in the North sea is contained in the quality status report (scientific and technical working group) prepared for the second North sea conference in November last year, a copy of which is in the Library.

As the report shows, levels of PCBs in European coastal waters have been declining. Levels in United Kingdom waters are considerably lower than in the eastern North sea. Monitoring by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and water authorities continues, but generally levels are so low that it is difficult to make reliable estimates for rivers and coastal waters.

SCOTLAND

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what, to date, are the total savings for each health board resulting from competitive tendering.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Contracts awarded to date have identified annual recurrent savings as set out in the table:

Health board	Annual recurrent saving £000s
Argyll and Clyde	147
Ayrshire and Arran	115
Borders	63
Dumfries and Galloway	230
Fife	103
Forth Valley	397
Grampian	598
Greater Glasgow	1,688
Highland	102
Lanarkshire	386
Lothian	1,124
Tayside	148
TOTAL	5,101

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many of the recent tenders in the National Health Service awarded to private contractors as the result of competitive tendering value added tax was paid.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total value to date of all contracts placed with the private sector following competitive tendering in the National Health Service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The value of all contracts awarded to date is £29·5 million, of which £8·2 million was placed with the private sector.

Health Councils (Review)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to receive the report of the review of local health councils; and when it will be published.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The report is due to be submitted by the end of December. I shall consider the question of publication when I have studied the report.

"The Scottish Health Service"

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many copies of the publication "The Scottish Health Service" were printed; how many have been distributed; and to whom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There were 62,000 copies printed, of which 55,000 were distributed in bulk to health boards to be made available to health board members, staff in hospitals and in the community, the family practitioner service and the public. In addition, about 3,000 copies have been issued to all hon. Members for Scottish constituencies, local health councils and the media and in response to requests from, for example, teachers and the public. The booklet is having a wider impact and greater range of applications than we anticipated and has been very well received.

Cigarettes (Illegal Sales)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prosecutions were brought against retailers for illegal sales of cigarettes to children in the last year for which figures are available; of these how many led to convictions; where these cases were heard; what penalties were imposed; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available.

Training Agency

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money the Training Agency expended on the voluntary projects programme in Scotland for the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Lang: Voluntary projects programme expenditure in Scotland in 1987-88 was £940,000.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of each training agency area in Scotland together with details of the host organisations that have been awarded posts and the number of posts allocated to those host organisations.

Mr. Lang: The number of organisations and posts awarded under community opportunities by each training agency area office in Scotland are:

Community Opportunities

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money will be allocated to community opportunities in (a) Scotland and (b) Glasgow in the current financial year and for the financial year 1989-90.

Mr. Lang: A total of £560,000 has been budgeted for community opportunities in Scotland in the current financial year of which £64,000 has been allocated to Glasgow. Comparable figures are not yet available for 1989-90.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people recruited into community opportunities in the Glasgow area will receive training or further education opportunities.

Mr. Lang: The nature of community opportunities activities cannot yet be determined, nor can the number of individuals who may choose to participate. These matters will depend on the types of opportunities identified and whether or not individuals take them up.

Voluntary Projects Programme

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money the Training Agency expects to expend on the voluntary projects programme in (a) Scotland and (b) Glasgow for the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Lang: Voluntary projects programme expenditure in Scotland in 1988-89 is estimated at £925,000 of which £160,000 has been allocated to Glasgow.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in the Glasgow area were recruited into voluntary work in 1987-88 by schemes funded through the voluntary projects programme; and if he will provide a breakdown of this, project by project.

Mr. Lang: A cumulative total of 798 volunteers were recruited into voluntary work in 1987-88 through the voluntary projects programme. From April 1987 to March 1988 the following voluntary projects programmes operated in Glasgow:

(a) The Volunteer Centre—402 volunteers;
(b) The Govan Aid Project/Pearce Institute—38 volunteers;
(c) Maryhill Community Central Halls—156 volunteers;
(d) Community Care/Gairbraid Community Association—112 volunteers;
(e) Community Service Volunteers—90 volunteers.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people recruited into voluntary projects programme schemes in the Glasgow area, received training or further education opportunities.

Mr. Lang: Glasgow voluntary projects programme sponsors provided training or further education opportunities to all their volunteer helpers. This took the form of on or off the job training and further education, according to individual requirements.

Education (Professional Bodies)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all professional bodies within the Scottish education system that have made representations to him requesting or demanding the right to opt out of the state system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The right to apply to withdraw schools from education authority control will be offered to parents. It will be for parents at a local level to decide whether to exercise this right.

A paper describing our proposals was issued last week and I look forward to receiving constructive comments from all involved in Scottish education including appropriate professional bodies.

Farming (Interest Rates)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the cost effect of interest rate increases since May on the average arable farm in the east of Scotland; and if he will express these figures by acre.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Overall borrowings by Scottish farmers are somewhat lower than last year, but the position will vary from one type of farm to another.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the effect on the incomes of arable farmers in the east of Scotland of payments of bank and other interest on loans for purchase of inputs up to May 1989.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have no information about the extent to which farmers' loans are used for the purchase of inputs.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Scottish farming industry about interest rates rises; and what indications he has of their effect on Scottish farmers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend is naturally very much aware of the concerns of Scottish farmers about the possible implications of increases in interest rates. Higher interest rates are expected to add £3 million to interest payments this year, but, because of a lower level of overall borrowings than a year ago, interest payments in 1988 are likely to be only marginally higher at £97 million than the 1987 level of £96 million.

Correspondence

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many items of correspondence he has received from hon. and right hon. Members about the work of the Department of Registers for Scotland since 1 July.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Sixteen.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many items of correspondence he has received from hon. and right hon. Members about the work of the Historic Buildings and Monuments Directorate since 1 July.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since 1 July my right hon. and learned Friend and I have received 33 items of correspondence from and right hon. Members relating to the directorate's work.

Legal System

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the established number of procurators fiscal and procurators fiscal depute in each sheriffdom in Scotland; and how many such positions are currently vacant.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The established numbers of procurators fiscal and procurators fiscal deputes in each sheriffdom in Scotland with current vacancies are as follows:

Sheriffdom	Complement		Vacancies
	PF	PFD	PF	PFD
Glasgow and Strathkelvin	1	65	Nil	7

	43	193·5	Nil	12

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average time between first appearance in (a) summary cases and (b) solemn cases and final disposal in each sheriffdom in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The average period between pleading and trial diet in summary criminal business in the sheriff courts for the year ending 31 March 1988 was 17 weeks. The actual delay period in each sheriff court as at 30 September is as shown in the table below. Information about the average time between first appearance and final disposal in solemn cases is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate how many women are likely to be screened for breast cancer in (a) 1989 and (b) 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not currently available. A detailed programme is being worked out with health boards for implementing a national breast cancer screening programme in Scotland by 1991. Once the service is fully operational, about 111,000 women will be screened each year.

Cash Limits

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to make any further changes to the cash limits within his responsibility for 1988-89.

Mr. Rifkind: Yes. I intend to make a change to one of the cash limits within my responsibility. The 1988-89 cash limit for Class XVI, Vote 19 (General Register Office for Scotland) will be reduced by £25,000 from £4,951,000 to £4,926,000 as a penalty following a cash limit breach in 1987-88.

Local Government (Staffing)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when it is intended to issue the finalised circular on the review of staffing standards in local government.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 12 December 1988]: I assume that the hon. Member's question refers to staffing standards in local authority schools. I am considering the responses to a draft circular on teaching staff in schools. I have also arranged for the outcome of the review of staffing needs to be reflected in the Government's provision for education within the revenue support grant for 1989-90.

Language Teachers

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of secondary school language teachers which the Government project is needed for 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 12 December 1988]: The current projections are:

	Number
1989-90	1,910
1990-91	1,880
1991-92	1,880
1992-93	1,890

These projections fall to be revised in detail in the light of the Government's intentions for the teaching of modern languages in secondary schools. By 1992-93 I expect the number of modern languages teachers to rise to about 2,300.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the Government's proposed intake for teacher training for modern language specialists for 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 12 December 1988]: My right hon. and learned Friend prescribes each year the total number of postgraduate students to be accepted by colleges of education for secondary teacher training; intakes are not set for specific disciplines. The Government will ensure that colleges are made aware of their projections of the number of foreign languages teachers required in forward years. It is then for each college to consult its local education authorities about their detailed requirements, taking full account of the pool of trained teachers already available, and to determine its intake of language graduates accordingly.

Salmonella

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of illness in Scotland can be reliably related to eggs in the last year for which figures are available; what form the illness took in each case; how many cases of illness in Scotland resulted from eating other items; how many deaths have resulted from eating eggs; and what reduction in the sales of eggs has occurred since 2 December.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 12 December 1988]: As at 2 December, 2,847 cases of food poisoning in Scotland have been reported in 1988 by general practitioners. It is not always possible to identify the precise cause, but in some 641 cases 99 were attributable to salmonella in egg or egg-based products and 542 to other food, including poultry. Typical symptons of food poisoning include diarrhoea and dehydration. No deaths from the consumption of eggs have been recorded during this period. Information on the sale of eggs is not held centrally.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if there is a specific target for clearing claims for family credit for people who have moved into paid work.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Special arrangements have been made with the Department of Employment's claimant adviser service for family credit claims made by families of people assisted into work by them to be dealt with through a streamlined procedure. The target is for 90 per cent. of these claims to be cleared within five working days. This target is being met and 95 per cent. are cleared within 10 working days. Other claimants resuming work after claiming income support are sent a specially marked family credit claim form so that, if necessary, their claims can be given priority. The target is to clear these claims, as other family credit claims, in an average of 18 working days. In November a clearance rate of just under 23 days was achieved.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Expenditure (EC)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total budget expenditure for the EEC, European Coal and Steel Community and Euratom for 1988; and what was the total budget in its first full year of operation.

Mr. Brooke: In the ECSC's first year of activity (1952) its budget was 4·6 mecu. In 1968 that part of its budget covering non-operating (that is, largely administrative) expenditure was merged with the EC/Euratom budget, leaving the balance of its budget, covering operating expenditure (mainly aid and restructuring), to stand as a separate budget. In 1968 the ECSC budget, as redefined, amounted to 21·2 mecu; in 1988 it amounted to 562 mecu (£390·4 million[1]).

The budget for the EEC and Euratom in their first year of activity (1958) amounted to 11 mecu. In 1968 the EC and Euratom budget was merged with the non-operating part of the ECSC budget to form the so-called general budget. In that year the general budget amounted to 1,561·3 mecu; in 1988 it amounted to 43,820·4 mecu (£30,431·1 million[1]).

[1] Converted at the Commission's current budget exchange rate of £1 = 1·439421 ecu.

Developing Countries

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to which recent International Monetary Fund study he was referring in his speech of 6 December in the Grand Committee Room which showed that, among developing countries, liberalising changes in trade outnumbered restrictive changes by nearly two to one in 1987.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 14 December 1988]: I was referring to table 1 of the 1988 IMF annual report on exchange arrangements and exchange restrictions, a copy of which is in the Library.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to which World Bank figures he was referring in his speech of 6 December in the Grand Committee Room which suggest that protection by industrialised countries costs the developing countries more than twice the amount of official aid that they receive.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 14 December 1988]: The reference was to estimates contained in a paper by World Bank staff "Industrial policies of Industrial Countries: Impact on Developing Countries" which was discussed at the annual meetings of the IMF and the World Bank in September. The World Bank intend to publish the paper in due course.

Building Societies

Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will lay a statutory instrument before the House under section 119 of the Building Societies Act 1986 defining deferred shares and the terms on which they are issued.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 12 December 1988]: I expect to lay an order under Section 119(1) of the Building Societies Act 1986, together with a consequential order under section 45(5), early in the new year.

Tax Allowances

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what percentage the rate of single person's and married man's income tax allowances has increased between April 1979 and April 1988.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 9 December 1988]: Between 1979-80 and 1988-89, the single person's income tax allowance has increased by 22 per cent. in real terms and the married man's allowance has increased by 23 per cent. in real terms.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

PLO (Meeting)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent meeting between the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) and the representatives of the Palestine Liberation Organisation.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) gave to the hon. Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot) on 12 December at column 398.

Berlin Security Service

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent the British authorities in Berlin are responsible for the actions of the Berlin security service, Berliner Verfassungsschutz.

Mrs. Chalker: Under the declaration of Berlin of 5 May 1955, the Allied Kommandatura has "the right to take . . . such measures as may be required to . . . maintain the status and security of Berlin".
However, the Berlin authorities have responsibility for the day-to-day running of the city, including the operation of the security services.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

In-plant Training

Mr. Bright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the future of the in-plant training scheme.

Mr. Newton: The in-plant training scheme, which operates under section 7 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 but is co-funded by the European Social Fund and administered under ESF criteria, is to be closed to new applications with immediate effect. The scheme was designed to help companies meet training costs associated with new investment projects in the assisted areas which met the requirements for regional selective assistance. Because of substantial changes which the ESF has made to its criteria, the scheme is in practice no longer achieving this objective.

Under the revised rules, trainees must be aged under 25 at the start of the training programme, be trained in the use of new technology and receive a minimum of 200 hours actual training. These requirements have proved difficult for applicants to satisfy and the three operating Departments have made no offers of assistance since the revised criteria were introduced in January 1986. As a result, the Government have decided that there is nothing to be gained by continuing with the scheme.

Closure of the scheme will have no effect on the aount of assistance available to projects which meet the criteria for RSA.

Japan and Taiwan

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will list in the Official Report the financial value of United Kingdom exports to Japan and Japanese imports to the United Kingdom in each of the last three years;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report the financial value of United Kingdom exports to Taiwan and Taiwanese imports to the United Kingdom in each of the last three years.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is given in the following table:

United Kingdom exports and imports for Japan and Taiwan 1985-87
Value in £ millions

	Exports	Imports
Japan
1985	1,012·3	4,115·5
1986	1,193·7	4,936·9
1987	1,495·1	5,463·1
Taiwan
1985	164·8	582·6
1986	192·5	705·6
1987	292·3	1,006·9

Source: Overseas Trade Statistics
Note:
(1) Figures for 1987 are provisional.
(2) Exports valued fob, imports cif.

Estate Agents

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to ensure that estate agents disclose major defects in properties before placing them on the market.

Mr. Forth: I have no immediate plans to do so. It is for the purchaser of a property to ensure that he or she has adequate information on the condition of the property before entering into a commitment to purchase.

RENAVAL Programme

Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his Department's plans for the implementation of the European Economic Community's RENAVAL programme in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins: The RENAVAL programme, financed by the European regional development fund, is for areas adversely affected by the restructuring of the shipbuilding and ship repair industries.

I am consulting my right hon. Friends about applications which may be submitted to the European Commission for RENAVAL programmes for British areas.

Most shipbuilding areas already receive a full range of benefits from the fund.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what responsibility his Department has for ensuring that foodstuffs are safe for human consumption and carry no risk of food poisoning; in what way this responsibility is carried out; how many and what type of staff are required; what is the annual cost to his Department; and what has been the change in the number of staff and the annual cost to his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Forth: The Department of Trade and Industry has no direct responsibility for food safety for human consumption, although the laboratory of the Government chemist plays an important role in conducting analysis and advising the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Ministry of Defence on contamination by micro-organisms, heavy metals, pesticides and veterinary residues; the cost of that work rests with those Departments.

The DTI and MAFF have launched a collaborative link research programme (£7 million from Government; £7 million from industry) to improve control of food processing, which will lead to improvements in food quality and safety.

Multi-Fibre Arrangement

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will place in the Library the details of the bilateral textile agreement between the Economic Community and the Republic of China as it relates to knitted outerwear under the framework of the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 14 December 1988]: Details of the new textiles agreement between the European Community and the People's Republic of China will be placed in the Library when they are made public.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to be able to publish the details of the bilateral agreement on textiles between the European Community and the Republic of China under the framework of the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 14 December 1988]: The details of the new bilateral textiles agreement between the European Community and the People's Republic of China are still being finalised. They will be made public as soon as possible.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish in the Official Report the new inner limits of knitted outwear agreed between the European Community and the Republic of China to the multi-fibre arrangement bilateral agreement expressed as a percentage of the inner limits contained in the previous agreement.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 14 December 1988]: I am writing to the hon. Member.

Small Businesses

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many small businesses have started up and how many have closed over the past five years in Derbyshire; and how many jobs have been gained and lost in connection with these.

Mr. John Cope: I have been asked to reply.

Over the five years to the end of 1986, the latest year for which the data is available, there have been an estimated 12,237 registrations for VAT in Derbyshire, and an estimated 10,682 deregistrations. The overwhelming majority of these related to small firms. It is not possible to say how many jobs have been gained and lost as a result.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

City Technology College, Nottingham

Mr. Graham Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his visit to the Nottingham city technology college.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend visited the Djanogly city technology college in Nottingham on Monday 5 December to lay the foundation stone of the building. The development of the college is proceeding well. The principal, deputy principal and four faculty heads have been appointed, the building programme is on schedule and offer letters have been sent to the pupils for the first year's intake next September.

CERN

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about future United Kingdom membership of CERN.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have now considered the action taken by the CERN council in implementing the reforms recommended by the CERN review committee under the chairmanship of Professor Abragam and concluded that sufficient progress has been made for the United Kingdom to indicate that it will remain a member of the organisation.

There are, however, a number of outstanding matters stemming from the review committee report which the United Kingdom will be expecting to see pursued over the next year. Accordingly, at the CERN council meeting today, the United Kingdom delegate made a statement emphasising the United Kingdom's wish to see CERN's scientific excellence continued and indicating the areas where progress on reducing the cost burden on member states has still to be made. I have arranged for copies of the statement to be placed in the Library.

The Government's decision will be reflected in the forthcoming allocation of the science budget, which I shall make when I have considered the advice of the ABRC.

F E Colleges (Opting-out)

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to allow colleges of further education to opt out of local education authority control; and if he is considering legislation to extend the relevant provisions of the Education Act 1988 to include colleges of further education.

Mr. Jackson: Sections 139 to 155 of the Education Reform Act 1988 provide for the reform of governing bodies of LEA-maintained further education colleges and for substantial delegation to these bodies of responsibility for finance, staff and the pattern of courses. LEAs are free to go beyond this and grant their colleges corporate status, and my right hon. Friend would welcome such a development. To go further and enable colleges of further education to become fully independent of LEA control would require new legislation. My right hon. Friend has no plans for this.

Research and Development

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table updating for the years 1987-88 to 1990-91 that section of table 1.2 in the "Cabinet Office Annual Review of Government Research and Development Expenditure" that relates to the University Grants Committee and the research councils in the light of announcements made subsequent to publication of the 1988 review.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State announced on 1 November increases of £306 million for the science budget over the next three years and of the over £100 million for teaching and research at the universities for the same period.

Most, but not necessarily all, of the additional money for research will be for research as defined in the annual review. Neither research councils nor the UGC will be in a position to provide the necessary figures for updating table 1.2 until well into the new year.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much of the additional money awarded to the research councils for the years 1989-90 and 1990-91 over and above that given in the table 1.2 of the "Cabinet Office Annual Review of Government Research and Development" has been earmarked for (a) AIDS research and (b) the Antarctic Survey.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's replies to my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock (Mr. Janman) on 10 November at columns 253 and 254, and to my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) on 8 November at columns 134 and 135.

My right hon. Friend will be considering shortly the case for an increase in the Medical Research Council's strategic programme for AIDS research on the basis of advice from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils.

Highbury Quadrant School

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to seek to improve the performance of redeployed teachers from Highbury Quadrant; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is not the responsibility of my right hon. Friend to take direct action to improve the performance of individual teachers. That is the responsibility of the employer, in this case the Inner London Education Authority.

Business and Technician Education Council

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many learning establishments in England teach Business and Technician Education Council courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Information from the Business and Technician Education Council is that at 13 December 1988, 601 public and private sector institutions are running courses leading to BTEC qualifications. They are in England, Wales and Northern Ireland. A separate figure for England is not readily available. However, the numbers in Wales and Northern Ireland will be relatively small.

Universities (Funding)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is his policy on making new financial arrangements between his Department and the Universities Funding Council; and what requirements he intends to include in new financial arrangements concerning the monitoring by the Universities Funding Council of individual universities and the transmission of any such monitoring information to his Department;

(2) what representations he has received concerning draft terms of the new financial arrangements between (a) his Department and the Universities Funding Council and (b) the Universities Funding Council and individual universities; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is his policy on making arrangements for annual block grants to be made by his Department to the new Universities Funding Council; and what account will be taken of information made available by the Universities Funding Council concerning the monitoring by the Universities Funding Council of individual universities.

Mr. Jackson: The Department is preparing a memorandum which will govern its financial relations with the Universities Funding Council under the Education Reform Act 1988. Discussions are being held with the council and with the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals on its proposed provisions. Some of those provisions will need to be reflected in the memoranda which the council will draw up with individual institutions. As in the Act, there is a balance to be struck in these matters between institutional autonomy and proper accountability to Parliament for substantial public funds. The council's general responsibilities mean that it needs to have a complete picture of the institutions it funds. While it consequently needs power to require information about the total funding of universities, the Act is clear that such information should not be used to affect funding decisions adversely. In the same way, the Government have made it clear that decisions on funding levels, reached in the light of the council's advice, will not penalise institutions' success in raising private income.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the operation of the consultation process leading to the formation of city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: We shall consider carefully any plans put to us by sponsors which meet the broad objectives of the CTC programme. While there is no general statutory requirement, sponsors will be expected and encouraged to consult the local community, local employers and the local education authority about these plans.

Where local education authorities are considering the possibility of closing an existing maintained school to allow for the establishment of a CTC they will need to publish proposals under section 12 of the Education Act, 1980. We have made clear the importance we attach to appropriate consultations taking place on such proposals with all interested parties. Detailed guidance is given in the Department's Circular 3/87. We set out our policy on deciding section 12 proposals which had as an objective the establishment of a CTC in my right hon. Friend's statement of 28 July at column 402.

Nursery Education

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the percentage difference between the local education authority providing nursery education for the highest proportion of children and that providing the lowest.

Mrs. Rumbold: In January 1988 the percentage point difference between the local education authority where the least proportion of children under five were attending maintained nursery schools and nursery classes in primary schools and the local education authority where the highest proportion were attending such schools and classes was 68.

Marine Research

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his Department's plans for the future funding of marine research.

Mr. Jackson: On the funding of marine research carried out by the Natural Environment Research Council, my right hon. Friend is considering the advice of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils and hopes to announce his allocations for 1989-90 shortly. As to the wider context, the co-ordinating committee on marine science and technology will report in due course on a national strategic framework for Government-funded marine science.

Agricultural and Food Research

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the Government's response to the interim report on agricultural and food research from the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have written to the Chairman of the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology, Sub-Committee I; the following is the text of my letter:

Lord Butterworth CBE
Chairman
Sub-Committee I
House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology
The House of Lords

Dear Lord Butterworth,

House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology Sub-Committee I (Agricultural and Food Research)

1. I am writing to you as Chairman of Sub-Committee I to give the Government's observations on the Sub-Committee's Interim Report which was published on 27 October last.

2. The Government appreciates the thorough and far-reaching enquiry which the Sub-Committee is making into this important subject; and the reasons that led you to make an interim report. The Government welcomes this report as timely further evidence of the remarkable and exciting developments in the biological sciences; of the growing realisation of their pervasive and complex nature; of their enormous potential for good; and of the way these changes rightly bring under review established perspectives and practices.

3. The Government has noted carefully the Sub-Committee's opinion; and in particular their recommendations concerning the remit of SERC, the merger of AFRC and NERC, and the related recommendation on the future development of the Biotechnology Advisory Group. It will be giving these and related matters careful consideration over the coming months. As the Sub-Committee knows, the Advisory Board for the Research Councils (ABRC) is currently reviewing the Research Council's responsibilities for biological sciences. The Government believes that the Sub-Commitee's interim report should be helpful to the Board conducting this exercise. The Government would wish to have the results of that review and the Board's advice on it before reaching final conclusions on whether changes are needed in the structure and responsibilities of the Research Councils and, if so, what changes would be appropriate. I hope to have that advice during the early months of next year.

4. In these circumstances, the Government does not intend to respond further at this time to the Sub-Committee's interim report. We look forward with interest to your final report, to which we will respond in the normal way.

5. In accordance with past practice I shall be making this letter available to both Houses, and publishing it.

Yours sincerely,

Kenneth Baker.

Education Support Grants

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on expenditure to be supported by education support grants in 1989-90.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Department has written to all local education authorities in England to inform them of the level of expenditure which I have approved for the purpose of education support grants in 1989-90.

Expenditure under the programme in 1989-90 will total £125·5m. Some £49·5m of this will be for the continuing support of projects begun in earlier years, and £76m is for new and extended activities. The table sets out the programme and shows the number of LEAs receiving allocations for support of new expenditure.

I am pleased that all local education authorities will be participating in the 1989-90 ESG programme, which is the largest to date. I made clear during the passage of the Education Reform Act that I would use my grant programmes to help with the implementation of the reforms. The approvals I have just announced represent substantial assistance for LEAs with the introduction of local management of schools and colleges and the national curriculum. I am also particularly glad that we have been able to provide support for centres to help adults with literacy and numeracy problems, and that ESGs will be used to allow almost 200 young people to train as youth workers in their own communities.

I have approved £35m of new expenditure in the programme for activities relating to local management, including £25m specifically for its introduction into schools and £5m for governor training. £29m of new expenditure will go towards helping authorities with the various aspects of the introduction of the national curriculum, including £5m for English, £9·5m for the core subjects and technology, and a further £9·5m for the purchase of equipment for information technology in schools. Taking new and committed expenditure together there will be support for over £90m of spending in 1989-90 on activities relevant to the ERA reforms.

Freedom of Speech

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how the Government propose to review section 43 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 in the light of its first year of operation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I have written to the chairmen of the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and of the Committee of Directors of Polytechnics and to the hon. secretary of the Standing Conference of Principals to suggest that as a first step their organisations should examine the working of the section by reference to their members' codes of practice and the way in which they have been applied and should recommend to the Government any desirable changes.

The text of my letter to the chairman of the CVCP is as follows.

Professor Sir Mark Richmond FRS
Chairman
Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals
29 Tavistock Square
LONDON WC1H 9EZ

Dear Mark 14 December 1988

FREEDOM OF SPEECH

It is just over a year since Section 43 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 came into force. During that period there seems to have been a welcome decrease in the disruption which gave rise to the original legislation. But there have still been some bad incidents, which raise questions about the effectiveness of present arrangements. I am sure therefore that you will agree that we ought now to review the working of Section 43.

2. The Government has indicated its intention to undertake such a review. However, we lack systematic information on the arrangements made by institutions. In particular, we have only seen copies of a few institutions' Codes of Practice.

3. I should therefore like to suggest that as a first step the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals (and the Committee of Directors of Polytechnics and the Standing Conference of Principals, to whom I am writing in similar terms) might agree:

(i) to examine the working of Section 43 by reference, among other things, to your members' Codes of Practice and the way in which they have been applied;

(ii) to obtain from your members any additional information needed to illuminate a number of key issues described below, and

(iii) to recommend to the Government any desirable changes.

4. The key issues in (ii) are those which seem to us, as a result of our monitoring of events during the last year, pose particular problems for institutions. They do not necessarily reflect on the legislation but may raise questions as to how institutions have sought to put it into effect. They are:—

(a) the practice of directly limiting the number of meetings which may be held, or requiring organisers to meet security costs which may be disproportionate to their resources. (One suggestion to consider is that the student body, represented by the Student Union, should bear the scrutiny costs as a means of engaging them in the maintenance of free speech and good order);

(b) requirements for excessive notice of meetings. Notice is needed to make security arrangements but should not be such as to prevent topical meetings being arranged to a relatively short timescale. (Long periods of notice also enable those determined to cause disruption to marshall their forces);

(c) the need to ensure that speakers are not intimidated by the number of actions of protestors. This may require institutions to take greater responsibility for the conduct of meetings and the selection of venues;

(d) the responsibility of institutions to avoid appearing to acquiesce in "no platform" policies. We are aware of one institution which refused to consider, and referred back to its Student Union, a complaint from a student group that it had been denied rights by the Union;

(e) the need to take firm disciplinary measures against students who breach Codes of Practice and to have in place effective arrangements for identifying offenders.

5. If the task outlined above could be completed by the end of April 1989, the Government would then review its own position and discuss with the CVCP, CDP and SCOP changes for adoption, if possible, from the beginning of the 1989/90 academic year.

6. If you wish to discuss the contents of the letter with me or with officials, we are available to do so. But work needs to be put in hand quickly. I hope therefore that you can signify by Friday 6 January 1989 your agreement to proceed.

ROBERT JACKSON

Salmonella

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will reconsider the decision to terminate an annual grant of £113,000 to Dr. Geoff Mead at the Institute of Food Research in Bristol to fund work on the control of salmonella.

Mr. Ryder: I have been asked to reply.

The decision to terminate the work on the manipulation of microbial flora of the gut of young chickens was taken following an extensive review of Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food commissioned research in microbiology. It was decided that the work was ready for industry to develop.

A small number of companies have participated in collaborative trials with the institute of food research, Bristol and it is to be hoped that they will be interested in taking this work further. This will not constitute a reduction in Government support on microbiological research, such as in salmonella. The funding is to be diverted to other important parts of our extensive programme of research into microbiological food safety. A working party is currently considering what further research is needed on salmonella and I will consider this advice carefully.

PRIME MINISTER

European Council (Terrorism)

Q40. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the procedures adopted by the European Council to implement its agreement on co-operation between member states to combat terrorism.

The Prime Minister: Her Majesty's Government have for many years attached particular importance to international co-operation in this field. I therefore welcome particularly this, and any other, agreement with our partners, which will give fresh impetus to practical and effective co-operation in defeating the menace of terrorism.

Ministers (Exchange of Letters)

Q89. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her answer of 29 November, Official Report, column 178, she will list those occasions since 1979 on which the text of letters to departing Cabinet Ministers (a) have and (b) have not been published.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 15 November 1988 at column 543.

Engagements

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 15 December.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 15 December.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 15 December.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 15 December.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 15 December.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 15 December.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 15 December.

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 15 December.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 15 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Member's Correspondence

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister if she will publish in the Official Report the text of her letter to the hon. Member for Brent, East on 29 September about Airey Neave and related matters.

The Prime Minister: No. It is not my usual practice to publish exchanges of this kind.

Bed and Breakfast Hostels

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit families who are currently in bed and breakfast hostel accommodation; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have no such plans at present.

Junior Ministers

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister, if junior Ministers in Her Majesty's Government require authorisation from the senior Minister in the Departments concerned before making public announcements outside the House on policies; and if she will publish the recommended procedures involved.

The Prime Minister: Ministers speak on Government policy as appropriate.

Train Travel

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Prime Minister (1) when she last travelled by train on official business in the United Kingdom;

(2) if she will list the occasions on which she has travelled by train on official business since June 1987.

The Prime Minister: In February 1987.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

Grande Carajas Programme

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will reconsider the United Kingdom's contribution to the Grande Carajas programme in the Brazilian Amazonian forest.

Mr. Chris Patten: Her Majesty's Government have not contributed directly to any project in the Greater Carajas programme area of Brazil. In 1982, the World bank and the European Coal and Steel Community approved loans to finance part of the costs of the Carajas iron ore project. Disbursement against these loans is complete. The World bank is also financing an energy options study, which is in progress, in the light of proposed pig-iron smelter production in the region.

TRANSPORT

M66/A664 Interchange

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the draft order, Connecting Slip Roads, M66/A664 (Manchester) Interchange.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Next spring.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the intergovernmental commission expects to receive from Eurotunnel its proposals for safety arrangements, including operating rules and emergency procedures, for the Channel tunnel; and what arrangements are being made for these proposals to receive public scrutiny.

Mr. Portillo: Eurotunnel has already submitted to the intergovernmental commission a certain number of its design proposals for the Channel tunnel, mostly in preliminary form, and intends to complete submission of them in final form by the end of next year, but it has yet to suggest a date for the submission of its operating rules and emergency procedures. The intergovernmental commission, in considering Eurotunnel's proposals, has the assistance of the Channel tunnel safety authority, and the commission and the authority can look for assistance to other bodies, but the concession does not provide and arrangements have not been made for the proposals to receive public scrutiny.

M1

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider remarking the lanes on the northbound carriageway of the M1 motorway north of the junction with the M25 so that the offside lane hard shoulder currently not in use can be utilised as an additional lane but in such a way as to create an additional crawler lane on the nearside similar to the way the lanes have been remarked on the southbound carriageway of the M1 north of junction 4.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Crawler lanes are justified and effective only where there is a significant uphill gradient to the brow of a hill. These conditions do not apply to the northbound carriageway of the M1 north of the junction with the M25.

Any use of the off-side hard shoulder at this location as a running lane would involve many vehicles in repeated changes of lane in a short distance. The adverse effects on safety and the free flow of traffic, particularly at junction 8, would outweigh any benefit from the availability of a short stretch of additional carriageway.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why the road surface markings and signs relating thereto have recently been altered on the southbound carriageway of the M1 north of junction 4 on the stretch of four-lane motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Signs and markings were altered to signal the use of the nearside lane for slow-moving vehicles.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total cost of procuring and erecting the new road signs informing motorists of the short stretch of four lanes on the southbound carriageway of the M1 motorway north of junction 4.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: £4,250.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total cost of the road surface remarking recently carried out on the southbound carriageway of the M1 north of junction 4 on the stretch of four-lane motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: £10,500.

Brixham Coastguard

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the future of the Brixham coastguard.

Mr. Portillo: There are no plans to alter the present status of Brixham coastguard maritime rescue sub-centre.

Research Expenditure

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the annual expenditure on research into (a) public transport and planning and (b) prevention and control of marine pollution in 1978-79, 1987-88, with forecasts and plans for 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Portillo: Expenditure by the Department on research into public transport and transport planning (excluding technology and investment analysis) has been as follows:

Year	£ million
1978-79	1·4
1987-88	1·8

Forecast expenditure for 1988-89 is £1·8 million. Planned expenditure for 1989-90 is £1·1 million. Specific plans for this sector have not yet been made for subsequent years but continuation of expenditure at about the 1989-90 level is likely.

For research into the prevention and control of marine pollution, no figures are readily available for 1978-79. For the other years my Department's forecast or planned expenditure is:

Year	£ million
1987-88	0·892
1988-89	1·052
1989-90	0·989
1990-91	0·970

Other Departments also finance research in this area, including the Departments of the Environment, of Education and Science (NERC), and of Energy; the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food; and the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland.

Buses (Deregulation)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, as a result of research commissioned or conducted by his Department on bus deregulation, he can provide details of (a) the average annual percentage increase in fares since deregulation and (b) the number of routes which have ceased to be served by buses.

Mr. Portillo: Between 1985-86 (the last full year prior to bus deregulation) and 1987-88, local bus fares in Great Britain rose at an annual rate of just under 8 per cent., as fares in metropolitan areas rose from previous very low levels. Data on route mileage are not compiled, but bus mileage had increased sharply, the bulk of it being operated commercially. Local authorities have the power to purchase additional non-commercial services in case of social need.

Railway Accident (Clapham Junction)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will announce the name of the inspector to carry out the investigation into the serious railway accident near Clapham Junction on Monday 12 December.

Mr. Channon: I am glad to tell the House that Mr. Anthony Hidden QC has accepted my invitation to hold an inquiry into this accident. I shall be discussing with Mr. Hidden what expert assessors should be appointed to assist him. He expects to hold an initial hearing as early as possible in January.

The investigation will be carried out under section 7 of the Regulation of Railways Act 1871. That will enable the investigation to inquire into the cause of the accident and all other relevant matters, and to make recommendations, so that appropriate lessons can be learned for the future.

Driver Testing

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the annual report and accounts of the Driver Testing and Training Organisation for the last financial year are yet available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Copies of the Driver Testing and Training Organisation's annual report for 1987-88 have today been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

We welcome the progress noted in the report towards tight management control of unit costs and reduced waiting times for L-tests. The organisation has been set targets to achieve further improvements during the current year and to provide a better all-round service for its 2 million customers.

To help shorten waiting times, Saturday morning tests were introduced in September for a trial period at selected centres. Seven of the 11 regional driver test booking centres are now fully computerised. Once the new systems have settled down, this should mean a better service for customers, particularly when it comes to telephone inquiries.

As from 24 October, the eight-test day recommended in the 1985 review of occupational stress among driving examiners has come into effect. This major improvement in working conditions was made possible by co-operation between management and staff representatives to identify time-saving compensating changes in working arrangements.

Too many candidates take the test too soon. One in two fail. Driving should be learned not just to pass the test, but as an essential skill for life.

Good training and an effective driver testing system are key elements in helping to equip new drivers on Britain's busy roads to cope with the conditions they will find there. It continues to be the overriding objective of the Driver Testing and Training Organisation to contribute cost-effectively to their reduction in road casualties.

Railway Accidents

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the key statistics for railway accidents over the last 10 years.

Mr. Channon: The statistics asked for are available in the chief inspecting officer of railways' annual reports, available in the Library, but for convenience are set out below. The casualties from the Clapham accident have not been included because the final figures are not yet available.

[1] The 1988 statistics do not include the Clapham Junction accident and must be regarded as provisional.
[2] The Accident Reporting Order was changed at the beginning of 1981 and the figures on either side of the asterisk are not strictly comparable.

Notes:
Passenger Casualties
Train Accident— Injuries to passengers caused by a collision or derailment of a passenger train.
Movement Accident— Injuries to passengers not caused by a train accident but arising out of the movement of a train, ie falling, boarding or alighting from a moving train, or being struck by a train or door.
Non-movement Accident— Injuries to passengers not associated with train working. Most are slips, falls or trips on the same level or on stairs or escalators at stations. The casualties of the fire at Kings Cross are included in this category.

Four-wheel Drive Vehicles

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Transport and Road Research Laboratory has completed tests on 4×4 multi-purpose vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The tests have now been completed. We shall be making the full results available tomorrow. We shall have detailed discussions with manufacturers and other interested parties, including the Consumers Association and motorists' organisations.

The TRRL tests are part of our continuing examination of this complex issue. The results will be placed in the Library shortly. We are continuing our investigation of other aspects, notably analysis of accident data both in the United Kingdom and abroad, and sharing our experience with that of other countries.

We have embarked on international discussions with a view to developing appropriate international vehicle safety standards.

Multi-purpose Vehicles

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many cars and related multi-purpose passenger vehicles were involved in 1987 in injury accidents in which a vehicle rolled over.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 1987, 8,338 cars, including multi-purpose passenger vehicles, were involved in injury accidents which included roll-over.

British Transport Police

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the practice of the British Transport police in prosecuting (a) children, (b) young persons, (c) adults and (d) hunts who trespass on or cause damage to British Rail property.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer, 14 December 1988]: The hon. Member should aproach the British Transport police for this information.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation requiring the British Transport police to take legal action against members and officials of hunts who may endanger lives by trespassing on railway lines.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer, 14 December 1988]: Decisions on prosecutions are matters for the police and the prosecuting authorities.

Ardlough

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether there was a public health risk or any ecological damage caused by the sinking of the vessel Ardlough; and whether hazardous substances, including low-level radioactive materials, which were unaccounted for have since been recovered.

Mr. Portillo: The public health risk was small and no ecological damage has been caused by the sinking of the 'Ardlough'. None of the hazardous materials unaccounted for has since been recovered. I am advised that the cargo which has not been recovered including the radioactive material, does not pose a threat of pollution sufficient to justify further action.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Infant Life Preservation Act 1929

105. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Attorney-General when was the last prosecution order under the Infant Life Preservation Act 1929.

The Attorney-General: The last prosecution conducted by the Director of Public Prosecutions under the Infant Life Preservation Act 1929 was in 1980.

Abortion

106. Mr. Alton: To ask the Attorney-General when a prosecution was last taken against a doctor for aborting a child under section 1(1)(b) of the Abortion Act 1967.

The Attorney-General: Section 1 of the Abortion Act 1967 does not create any offence and accordingly no prosecution can be taken under its terms. The last prosecution conducted by the Director of Public Prosecutions for an offence under the law relating to abortion was in 1972. It resulted in a conviction.

Magistracy and Judiciary (Ethnic Community)

107. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Attorney-General what percentage of the ethnic community are members of the magistracy and judiciary.

The Attorney-General: No records are kept of the ethnic origin of members of the judiciary or of magistrates. However, a survey conducted of the magistracy at the end of 1986 showed that the percentage of justices from ethnic minorities in relation to the total number of justices appointed in the Lord Chancellor's area was 1·92 per cent. In 1985 4·07 per cent. of new justices appointed were from ethnic minorities, and the corresponding figure for 1986 was 4·57 per cent. Informal indications are that the percentage will be slightly higher for 1987 and 1988.

Property Sales

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he is taking to seek to bring the law of sale of property in England in line with Scots law to avoid gazumping.

The Attorney-General: None. Such legislation is unnecessary because the differences between England and Scotland in the way in which property is usually sold are differences of practice, not of law; and the procedural delays which permit gazumping in England are best dealt with by changes in practice.

Land Registry

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General how many items of correspondence the Lord Chancellor has received from hon. Members about the work of the Land Registry since 1 July.

The Attorney-General: 73.

Mr. Tony Brooks

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Attorney-General if he is yet in a position to make a statement on Mr. Tony Brooks in relation to alleged illegal acts referred to on 14 November, Official Report, column 739.

The Attorney-General: The Solicitor-General wrote to the hon. Member for Workington on 18 November in the following terms:

"Pursuant to my answer to your oral question on 14 November, I have caused inquiries to be made into your intimation of possible allegations in the Panorama programme broadcast on 13 October, or in David Leigh's book on the Wilson plot that Mr. Tony Brooks was involved in a plot to destabilise the Government of Lord Wilson, or committed illegal acts.

There is in neither the programme, nor the book, any evidence, or indeed any allegation of any criminal activity by Mr. Brooks. I note particularly that Mr. Leigh in his book (at page 245) claims that, when Mr. Wright approached Mr. Brooks with the proposition for taking action relating to Lord Wilson, then the Prime Minister, Mr. Brooks responded that the proposition was improper. I would remind you of the Prime Minister's statement on 6 May 1987 in which she told the House that an investigation carried out by the Director General of the Security Service had found no evidence of any plot against Lord Wilson or his Government. There will be no criminal proceedings."

Justices of the Peace

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General if he will set out (a) the connections with (i) Leyton and (ii) Waltham Forest, (b) race, colour or ethnic origin, (c) business or public service background and (d) qualifications of each member of (1) the North East London area advisory committee and (2) the Waltham Forest division sub-committee on the appointment of justices of the peace.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor and the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster have decided that the names of members of advisory committees on the appointment of justices of the peace are to be disclosed and that this is to apply to all advisory committees no later than 1992. The north-east London advisory committee has already disclosed its names and these have been given to the hon. Member. It would not be appropriate for the Lord Chancellor to disclose other information about individual members. In any event, the committee is in the process of reconstitution.

WALES

Nursing Homes

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of places in (a) private and (b) voluntary nursing homes in each district health authority in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. Grist: Comparable information is available only for the years 1982 to 1987. It is not possible to identify separately voluntary and private nursing homes.

Elderly People Health Care

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, if he will list by district health authorities (a) the number of people between 65 and 75 years of age who have been identified as needing or having (i) hip replacements, (ii) cataracts, (iii) chest complaints, (iv) heart disease, (v) strokes, (vi) Parkinson's disease, (vii) Alzheimer's disease and (viii) osteo-rheumatoid arthritis and (b) the number of people over 75 years of age who have been identified as needing or having the above.

Mr. Grist: Information in the form requested is not available centrally. The number of discharges (including deaths) from NHS hospitals in Wales in 1987 by district health authority (DHA) of residence and by each diagnosis is as follows:—

Sewerage

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the Welsh Water Authority sewage treatment works that failed to meet their discharge contents in 1987; and on what count they failed.

Mr. Grist: The information for 108 works is given in the following table. The remainder of the authority's 810 sewage treatment works met their consent conditions.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide details of any projections for the employment potential of forestry in rural areas in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: By the turn of the century, forestry and the wood-processing industries could be providing directly some 9,000 jobs in Wales, most of them in rural areas.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Offices

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. Members are sharing offices with other hon. Members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Walsh) on 14 December at column 578.

Visitors' Guide

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Lord President of the Council when the visitors' guide to the Galleries will be published in Italian and Dutch.

Mr. Wakeham: There are no plans to do so at present. However, the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee, which has initial responsibility for deciding in which languages the visitors' guide to the Galleries is produced, would be willing to consider any requests for additions to the range of languages available.

EMPLOYMENT

YTS

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on his Department's programme to promote racial equality in its YTS.

Mr. Cope: The Training Agency within my Department keeps under review the series of measures it has adopted to ensure that young people from ethnic minorities enjoy full equality of opportunity as regards YTS. I attach particular importance to the agency's attempts to ensure that any obstacles to ethnic minorities joining schemes in the employer-led sector are identified and overcome with the assistance of all parties involved. The Commission for Racial Equality has endorsed the equal opportunities code of practice for YTS.

Trainees (Injuries)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for each year the number of trainees on MSC/Training Commission/Training Agency programmes who have received payments under the analogous industrial injuries scheme which his Department oversees; and what is the average payment made to each trainee.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of adult and youth trainees eligible to receive benefits from the Training Agency's analogous industrial injuries scheme and the annual amounts paid since April 1983 is shown in the table. Comprehensive information is not available before 1983. It is not possible to provide an accurate estimate of the average payment made because part of the annual amounts shown relate to trainees injured in an earlier year.

Period	Number of trainees who received benefits	Total amount paid
April 1983—March 1984	945	£263,799
April 1984—March 1985	779	£363,497
April 1985—March 1986	782	£480,434
April 1986—March 1987	850	£601,339
April 1987—March 1988	1,057	£607,837

Business Registrations

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish for 1987 business registrations and deregistrations by region as laid in table 12.7 of "Regional Trends 1988".

Mr. Cope: I regret that the information requested is not yet available.

Training

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what effect he estimates his recent proposals for training, contained in "Employment for the 1990's" (Cm. 540) will have on voluntary and conservation groups; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The arrangements in the White Paper "Employment for the 1990's" (Cm. 540) will help to improve the delivery and focus of training at local level. Voluntary and conservation groups will be welcome to continue their support and commitment through training to helping unemployed people back into jobs.

Trade union Ballots

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has published orders containing the qualifications of independent scrutineers of certain trade union ballots and elections and consequential changes to the trade union ballot funding scheme.

Mr. Cope: The Trade Union Ballots and Elections (Independent Scrutineer Qualifications) Order 1988 has been published today. It specifies the conditions that a person must meet to be eligible for appointment as a scrutineer of certain ballots and elections which, under section 15 of the Employment Act 1988, will be subject to independent scrutiny from 1 February 1989. The order also specifies the following three bodies as being eligible for appointment as scrutineers:

The Electorial Reform Society of Great Britain and Ireland Ltd.
The Industrial Society
Unity Security Balloting Services Ltd.

The Funds for Trade Union Ballots (Amendment No. 2) Regulations 1988 have also been published today. These regulations amend the scheme under which trade unions may reclaim certain costs associated with secret postal ballots to reflect the new statutory requirement for independent scrutiny of certain ballots and elections which comes into force on 1 February 1989.

Youth Training Board

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to announce the creation of a successor body to the Youth Training Board.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 12 December 1988]: The Youth Training Board was dissolved when my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State took back the powers of the Training Commission into the Department of Employment. I cannot at the moment announce the creation of a successor body.

SCOTLAND

Health Board Chairmen

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria he uses in appointing health board chairmen.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend appoints the person who in his view is best fitted for the job of leading the health board. This requires commitment of time and energy and qualities of leadership, drive and sound judgment.

Residential Homes

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the figures for the last five years of the number of people who have applied for licences to run residential homes, broken down by health board area in which the homes are situated.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The responsibility for registration of residential care homes lies with local authorities. Information about the number of applications for registration is not available centrally.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements are made for the good management of land sold by the Forestry Commission.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for the good management of land sold by the Forestry Commission rests with the purchasers.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide details of any projections for the employment potential of forestry in rural areas of Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: By the turn of the century, forestry and the wood-processing industries could be providing directly some 17,000 jobs in Scotland, most of them in rural areas.

Sand Eels

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to reduce the catch of 'O' and 'I' group fish in the Shetland sand eel fishery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Shetland fishermen have already taken voluntary measures to reduce catches of the youngest sand eels. We are currently considering whether additional management measures are required to protect the stocks.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the maximum sustainable annual yield for the Shetland sand eel fishery; whether he intends to set a total allowable catch for this fishery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The sand eel is a short-lived species, and recruitment to the stocks varies widely from year to year. In the circumstances, our scientists consider that it is difficult to estimate the maximum sustainable yield or to advise on an appropriate total allowable catch for the Shetland sand eel stock. Other conservation measures may be a more appropriate way of managing the fishery.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to introduce a close season for sand eel fishing in Scottish waters to cover the period July to October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no plans to introduce a general close season for sand eel fishing in Scottish waters. If further management measures appear to be needed around Shetland, a close season is one of the options which will be considered.

Knitwear and Textiles

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing for each year since 1979, in index form with 1979 = 100 the value in real terms of knitwear and textiles output in Scotland.

Mr. Ian Lang: The information requested is in the table. The hosiery and knitted goods industry is part of the wider textiles industry.

	Textiles	Hosiery and knitted goods

Health Spending

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance his Department has issued to health boards on the need for increased spending on services for the elderly, mentally ill and mentally handicapped in line with the Scottish Office publication "Health Spending in Scotland", and the Sharpen report.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government have endorsed the high priority accorded by the Sharpen report to the provision of community care services for the mentally ill and the mentally handicapped. Decisions on spending on local services for particular groups are for individual health boards from the substantially increased resources made available to the National Health Service in Scotland.

Community Care

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines his Department has issued to health boards with regard to remedying the problems of community care, in cases where the transition from institutions to the community is costing more than anticipated.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None. I do not accept that any deficiencies in the provision of community care arise from inadequate funding of the relevant authorities. Gross expenditure on the National Health Service in Scotland is expected to reach £2,754 million in 1989-90. After allowing for inflation, this amounts to an increase in real terms of 34 per cent. since 1979-80. The Government's planning figure for current expenditure on social work services in 1989-90 is £445·4 million, an increase of 38 per cent. in real terms since 1979-80. We have made it clear to the relevant authorities that within these substantially increased resources a high priority should be given to the provision of community care services for vulnerable groups.

NHS Buildings (Sale)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the methods of monitoring the use of the proceeds from the sales of National Health Service buildings used for the mentally handicapped and mentally ill, and how his Department ensures that these proceeds are put back into those services rather than the regional budget.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The proceeds of sales of surplus Health Service property are now used for further investment in the Health Service by the health board in whose area the property lies. The use which is to be made of the proceeds of sales of a particular category of property is not generally specified but health boards know that they should give a high priority to the care of mentally handicapped and mentally ill patients. Capital expenditure on these categories of patient has been almost £20 million per annum in recent years. That sum far exceeds the proceeds of sales of surplus mental hospitals and associated land.

Loch Sunart

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on pollution of Loch Sunart caused by the burial of diseased farmed fish close to the shore of the loch; and if he intends to take any action against any person responsible for such pollution.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Highland river purification board, as the authority responsible for the control of water pollution, is investigating a pollution incident at Loch Sunart. I am advised that the board's initial findings are that no serious pollution of the waters has taken place. The river purification board will determine what further action to take in the light of its inquiries.

Agriculture Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give an estimate of the number of farmworkers whose employment will be affected by participation by their employers or others in the set-aside scheme; and if he will take any action either to compensate those workers or to provide additional employment in the areas concerned.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The possible effect of set-aside on farm and rural employment is one of the aspects of the scheme we shall be evaluating in its first years. Initial indications, on the basis of the average area of land proposed for set-aside by those who have applied this year (36 hectares) in comparison with the average holding size involved (140 hectares), are that the number of workers affected should be very small. There is no provision for special compensation. The Government already provide substantial assistance, through various programmes and agencies, aimed at improving employment opportunities in rural areas.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Standards

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the work of the United Kingdom Register of Organic Food Standards since its launch in July 1987.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend the Minister has recently received from the chairman of Food From Britain, Mr. Walter Goldsmith, the "Review of the Activities of the Board of United Kingdom Register of Organic Food Standards for the period October 1987 to October 1988", a copy of which I am placing in the Library of the House.

Agriculture Council

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council in Brussels which commenced on 12 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I attended the Agriculture Council which commenced on Monday, 12 December. Decisions were reached on a number of issues. The most important was a decision, subject to consulting the European Parliament, on the long running and difficult negotiations to define the production and minimum strength rules for spirit drinks. The outcome was particularly satisfactory for the United Kingdom, in that it fully safeguarded our major interest in Scotch whisky, gin and vodka.

Although the meeting continued late on Monday and Tuesday, and overnight on Wednesday, it was not possible to reach agreement on a large number of other issues on the agenda. The Council was consequently adjourned to Monday 19 December when a further attempt will be made to reach conclusions on all the outstanding issues.

Radioactivity

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representatives of the National Farmers' Union and the Farmers' Union of Wales attended the briefing meeting in London on Friday 9 December to discuss the continuing effects of Chernobyl.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Three.

Edenbridge House, Carlisle (Meeting)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers and landowners attended the meeting at Edenbridge house, Carlisle on 23 November to discuss the aerial survey of post-Chernobyl radioactivity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Six.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place a transcript in the Library of the meeting between his officials and the National Farmers' Union held at Edenbridge house, Carlisle, on 23 November.

Mr. Ryder: No transcript of proceedings was made. However, a letter summarising the data discussed at the meeting was sent to all farmers in the Cumbrian restricted area on 12 December and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Animals (Tuberculosis)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if will give details of research projects he is undertaking or funding into the spread and control of tuberculosis in farmed and wild animals; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he intends to increase research into the spread and control of tuberculosis in farmed and wild animals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department is presently funding at a cost of approximately £0·5 million per annum a programme of research and development at the central veterinary laboratory, Weybridge designed to improve the diagnosis and control of tuberculosis in cattle and wildlife including badgers and deer. Appropriate research work will continue to be funded by my Department in recognition of the statutory and public health importance of this disease.

Radioactivity

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the final report of the aerial survey of post-Chernobyl radioactivity in Cumbria will contain a contour map of radioactive cæsium deposition when published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Yes, the report will contain such a map.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in view of the levels of radioactivity discovered in the post-Chernobyl aerial survey of Cumbria, he will extend the survey to cover all of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ryder: At present there are no plans to extend the aerial survey outside the Chernobyl restricted areas.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to extend the terrestrial radioactive monitoring programme throughout England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The terrestrial radioactivity monitoring programme is a routine monitoring programme for food and environmental materials in the vicinity of each of the major nuclear sites. The feasibility of extending TRAMP beyond its present coverage is currently under consideration.

Deer (Tuberculosis)

Dr. David Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he will make tuberculosis in deer a notifiable disease; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he intends to introduce tuberculosis testing and compulsory slaughter arrangements for farmed deer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: When I met the British Deer Farmers Association recently I discussed with it the current problems with TB in farmed deer. I explained that the Government will introduce legislation to make TB in deer a notifiable disease and to make the keeping of movement records and the permanent identification of farmed deer compulsory. My officials are preparing the necessary legislation and will shortly be consulting other interested organisations. Meanwhile, infected or suspected animals known to the Ministry, will continue to be subject to movement restrictions applied under article 15 of the tuberculosis (England and Wales) and (Scotland) Orders 1984.

I have further agreed that my officials should explore with the industry the introduction of a voluntary tuberculosis attestation scheme for deer herds. Proposals for a scheme are at an advanced stage and letters have been sent to interested organisations inviting them to nominate representatives to form an advisory group to consider the proposals and their application.

I believe that, taken together, these are useful measures to combat the problem of tuberculosis in deer. In response to suggestions from the industry that compulsory slaughter might be appropriate I have suggested that they should consider the possibility of an industry funded programme. We are awaiting an industry response on all these matters.

Departmental Responsibilities

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the duties and responsibilites of the atomic energy (unit C) section of his Ministry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The atomic energy unit of the food science division of the Ministry is now known as the food safety (radiation) unit. Its duties and responsibilities broadly cover all aspects of radioactivity in the terrestrial foodchain. This includes a responsibility, held jointly with Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, for advising Ministers from nuclear sites, and inspection of those sites to ensure compliance. The unit is responsible for assessing, and advising on, the radiological consequences of all planned and accidental releases of radioactivity, in relation to agricultural and horticultural produce. It specifies the environmental surveillance programme to be carried out by nuclear operators and carries out its own programme of monitoring radioactivity in the terrestrial environment. The unit also provides technical advice on all aspects of food irradiation. It sponsors and directs scientific research programmes on relevant topics. Members of the unit represent the Ministry on many national and international advisory committees.

Farmworkers (Set-aside Scheme)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will given an estimate of the number of farmworkers whose employment will be affected by participation by their employers or others in the set-aside scheme; and if he will take any action either to compensate those workers or to provide additional employment in the areas concerned.

Mr. Ryder: I am not yet in a position to estimate the employment effects of set-aside, which has only recently come into operation, but it offers a wide range of alternative land uses which should create new employment opportunities in the countryside, as will other recent Government initiatives such as the farm woodlands scheme and the farm diversification grant scheme. I do not therefore accept that there will be a net reduction in employment.

Eggs

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many eggs which were infected by salmonella enteriditis have been found in the constituency of south Derbyshire during the last 12 months;

(2) how many eggs have been found to be infected with salmonella enteriditis (a) in the Yorkshire and Humberside region and (b) nationally during the last 12 months; and what is the estimated number of eggs produced in the region annually.

Mr. Ryder: I regret that it is not possible to make a precise estimate of the number of infected eggs in any region. But I would agree with what my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health told the House on 5 December at column 19, that the risk to any individual is small and the risk to the healthy adult small indeed.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide details of any projections for the employment potential of forestry in rural areas in England.

Mr. Ryder: Employment provided by forestry and the wood-processing industries in the rural areas of England is likely to stabilise at about the present level.

Woodlands (Set-aside scheme)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether felling licences for woodlands planted under the set-aside scheme will be granted without a replanting condition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The control of tree felling rests with the Forestry Commissioners under powers contained in the Forestry Act 1967.

When clear felling is proposed, it is at present the commissioners' normal policy to require replanting of the felled area. As we have already announced, for woodlands planted under the farm woodland scheme there will, subject to whatever legislation may be current at the time, be a presumption in favour of granting licences without such a replanting condition provided that in each case this has the support of the relevant agriculture department and there are no overriding environmental objections. Similar arrangements will apply to any planting done under the set-aside scheme.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ministerial Visits

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary for State of Northern Ireland how many nights each of the Ministers at his Department stayed in Northern Ireland during the months of June, July, August, September and October.

Mr. Tom King: The information is as follows:

	June 1988	July 1988	August 1988	September 1988	October 1988
Secretary of State	9	5	6	7	7
Mr. Stanley	3	5	—	—	—
Mr. Stewart	—	—	1	9	11
Lord Lyell	9	8	9	10	11
Mr. Needham	11	9	17	5	9
Dr. Mawhinney	4	8	1	8	6
Mr. Viggers	5	5	3	11	7

Mr. Stanley left the Northern Ireland Office and Mr. Stewart joined in July 1988.

Plastic Bullets

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary for State of Northern Ireland what are the rules laid down for the use of plastic bullets in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is not the Government's practice to disclose detailed operational instructions under which the security forces operate in Northern Ireland. However, the general rules governing the use of plastic baton rounds state that riot guns will be used only when judged to be the reasonable amount of force necessary in the protection of life and property, the preservation of the peace, and the prevention and detection of crime. The instructions are designed to minimise the possibility of injury to those at whom the baton rounds are aimed.

Weapons (Theft)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary for State of Northern Ireland if he will list with dates any occasions when weapons have been stolen or have gone unaccounted for from police stations in Northern Ireland from 1970 to the present date.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Detailed information in the form requested is not readily available from existing central records and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Milk Processing Plants

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary for State of Northern Ireland if the Industrial Development Board has concerned itself in the future development and ownership of Northern Ireland milk processing plants following the recent takeover bids by subsidiary firms of which the controlling interests are foreign based; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: The Industrial Development Board has been closely monitoring the progress of recent takeover bids in the milk processing sector in Northern Ireland but it is not part of its role to become involved in what are essentially commercial transactions.

ENERGY

Nuclear Power Plants

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has received from the United States of America about the reasons for the shutdown of the nuclear power plants (a) Hanford, Washington, (b) Rocky Flats, Colorado, (c) Savannah River, South Carolina and (d) Fernald, Ohio; whether any pollution resulted from accidents or discharges at these plants; whether any of this information is relevant to nuclear power plants in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The plants to which the hon. Member refers are military plants and are of designs which have no close parallels in the United Kingdom.

Natural Gas

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the status of Council directive 13/2/1975404 EEC relating to the use of natural gas in power stations; and whether he proposes to seek its modification.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Section 14 of the Energy Act 1976 gives effect to Council directive 75/404/EEC. I understand that, in part as the result of United Kingdom prompting, the European Commission is carrying out a review of the directive.

Atomic Energy Division

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if there are any restrictions on civil servants in his Department's atomic energy division travelling in COMECON countries for their holidays.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There are no specific restrictions against holiday travel in COMECON countries placed on members of this Department solely as a consequence of their being employed in our atomic energy division.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what restrictions exist on retired officials, who have worked in his atomic energy division, wishing to emigrate to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There are no specific restrictions on the choice of country of residence on retirement placed on members of this Department solely as a consequence of their having been employed in our atomic energy division.

Uranium

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he will take to ensure that weapons-grade uranium will not be sold into the wrong hands after privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 8 December 1988 at columns 328-29.

Solar Housing Project

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many copies of the Linford/Pennylands solar housing project book have been published; to whom copies have been distributed; and what has been the total cost of this publication.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Linford/Pennylands housing project book has not yet been published and we are currently reviewing the most effective way to promote the results of this work and other studies. Total cost of the work on the book so far has been £9,336. The three technical reports on the Linford and Pennyland houses on which the contents of the book are drawn are available from the British Lending Library on request. These reports are:

Lindford low energy houses, report number S1025.
A review of design and performance of Calor Solar Houses at Milton Keynes (this report relates to three houses at Linford), report number S1138.
The Pennyland project, report number S1046.

Nuclear Reactors

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has received any indication from British Nuclear Fuels plc as to the likely cost and timetable for (a) the closure and decommissioning of the Calder Hall and Chapelcross nuclear production reactors, (b) the redundant reprocessing buildings at Sellafield and (c) the capping of trenches and repackaging of radioactive wastes at Drigg.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that BNFL hope to operate the Calder Hall and Chapelcross reactors until 1998. During the first three years after closure the reactors would be defuelled; subsequently the external plant items would be removed. The remainder of the reactor would be decommissioned within 100 years of closure. The discounted cost, excluding the cost of reprocessing any fuel remaining in the core but excluding a substantial contingency, is estimated at £224 million.

Decommissioning of redundant reprocessing facilities at Sellafield has already commenced where this is possible. Currently redundant facilities are expected to be decommissioned by 2000, except for three facilities due to be decommissioned by 2016. The estimated cost of £250 million will be incurred throughout the period.

The filled trenches at Drigg are being capped now. This work is expected to be completed in mid 1989. The remaining trench and future vaults will be capped as they become full. The estimated total cost is £5 million.

All wastes currently stored at Drigg are to be transported to Sellafield at a cost of around £5 million. Any necessary repackaging will be carried out as part of this exercise.

Electricity Generation

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what electricity generating capacity is likely to be commissioned before the year 2000; and if he will estimate when.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This will be a matter for the privatised electricity industry to decide. The Central Electricity Generating Board has said in evidence to the Hinkley Point public inquiry that it estimates there will be a shortfall in generating capacity of 15·5 GW by the year 2000.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are his estimates of coal and nuclear generating costs at rates of return of 5, 8 and 10 per cent.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Central Electricity Generating Board has, in evidence to the Hinkley Point public inquiry, estimated the generation costs from coal and nuclear power stations in their "base case" as follows:

p/KWh

	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
Discount Rate	5	8	10
PWR	2·24	3·09	3·80
Coal
Coastal station	2·50	2·97	3·35
Inland station	2·62	3·03	3·36

Heating Costs

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the annual cost of heating a small semi-detatched standardised house in England, Scotland, and Wales in 1979 by (a) gas, (b) electricity, (c) coal and (d) oil, expressed in cash.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Table 1 gives the costs of heating a standardised two bedroom house in five regions of Great Britain. The costs have been adjusted to 1979 money values using indices of current fuel prices as published in "Energy Trends". Costs vary between regions according to differences in temperature and fuel prices.

Table 1
Calculated costs of Heating a Standardised Two Bedroom House by region and type of fuel in 1979 money values

	Gas £	Electricity £	Coal £	Oil £
West Country	70-121 (118-169)	68-124 (106-163)	57-106 (126-175)	42-73 (70-101)
South East	73-127 (121-175)	73-132 (111-170)	64-118 (138-192)	44-75 (73-103)
North East	85-145 (157-193)	83-153 (122-192)	59-108 (118-168)	51-86 (79-114)
Scotland	85-148 (157-196)	85-155 (124-194)	67-123 (133-190)	51-86 (79-114)
Wales	70-121 (115-169)	69-127 (106-163)	61-113 (130-182)	42-73 (69-99)

Notes:
(1) Costs are calculated on the same basis as last published (Feb. 1986) Monergy Guides with fuel prices adjusted to 1979 money values.
(2) Figures given first are for space heating only. The range represents the well insulated and poorly insulated cases. Bracketed figures include water heating.
(3) No standing charges or maintenance costs are included.
(4) The calculations are based on standard wet central heating system for gas, coal and oil. For electric heating storage heaters run on off peak heating are assumed.

Electricity Supplies

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on agreements made at the meeting of the Council of Energy Ministers in Brussels on 8 November; and what are the implications for future construction of power plants in the United Kingdom following from the decision to begin to establish a free market in electricity imports and exports in the European Economic Community.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's statement to the House of 14 November 1988 at column 426 on the outcome of the Energy Council of 8 November 1988.

Trade in electricity is subject to the Treaty of Rome and therefore to the provisions in it precluding barriers to imports and exports between member states. The organisation of the industry in many member states however in practice may inhibit trade and on 8 November the Council endorsed the Commission intention to prepare a report on these practical problems. Importers of electricity into the United Kingdom already have common carrier rights and the right to sell to the utilities at a fair price established by the Energy Act 1983.

Nuclear Power Stations

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give in a table the position of nuclear power stations in England and Scotland, the planned capacity for each, the percentage available and the date of retirement of the stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the relevant electricity boards. I have asked the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to write to my hon. Friend in respect of nuclear power stations in England. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will ask the chairman of the South of Scotland electricity board to write in respect of nuclear power stations in Scotland.

Fossil-fuel Power Stations

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the fossil-fuel power stations in the United Kingdom due to be retired before 2000, the capacity lost and the current plans for replacement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the relevant electricity boards. I have asked the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to write to my hon. Friend in respect of fossil-fuel power stations in England and Wales. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland will ask the chairmen of the Scottish and Northern Ireland electricity boards to write in respect of their power stations.

Uranium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is, for each year since 1973, the total amount of uranium mined in Namibia which has been imported into Britain.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 30 November 1988]: There were no imports of uranium ore concentrate from Namibia for the United Kingdom's civil nuclear power programme until 1977. Between 1977 and 1984, some 8,600 short tons of U308 (some 6,600 metric tonnes of contained uranium) were imported. There have been no such imports since 1984.

All uranium imported into the United Kingdom for civil purposes is subject to Euratom safeguards and to the terms of the United Kingdom-Euratom-IAEA safeguards agreement.

Power Failure (Windsor)

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to complete his consideration of the power failure in Windsor referred to on 12 December, Official Report, column 641-2.

Mr. Michael Spicer: As required by the Electricity Supply Regulations 1988, the Southern electricity board notified my Department of the power failure which occurred at Windsor on 2 December. The cause was a fire in a substation, which led to a loss of supply to just over 12,000 consumers. Supply was restored to around 8,500 of these within five hours, but some remained without supply for a further 26 hours. The board is carrying out a full investigation, and I expect to have a report shortly. I will write to my hon. Friend when I have considered the report.

Oil Rigs

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his reply of 12 December, upon whom the cost of abandonment of North sea oil rigs will fall; whether he has plans to introduce regulations to require future installations to be constructed in a way which makes their abandonment easier and less expensive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Responsibility for the costs of abandonment of North sea offshore installations lies with the parties to the joint operating agreement relating to the installation, and any other persons given notice by the Secretary of State under section 1 of the Petroleum Act 1987. Tax and royalty relief will be available under the normal rules. The cost of abandonment is a factor which my Department is already able to take into account when considering field development proposals.

Energy Use Labelling

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out the policy considerations that underpin the departmental view that it is neither desirable nor appropriate that the Government interfere in the market to enforce energy use labelling for domestic or commercial property for sale or rental.

Mr. Peter Morrison: It would not be justifiable to compel a householder or property owner to spend a sizeable sum of his own money in this way. However, the Energy Efficiency Office supports the development of voluntary energy labels, and I consider this to be the best way forward. Furthermore, enforcement of the use of energy labels would require sanctions for non-compliance; workable sanctions would be difficult to devise and implement.

Kingsnorth and West Burton

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the status of Kingsnorth and West Burton following the announced deferment of the coal-fired power station project.

Mr. Michael Spicer: As I said to the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) on 9 December 1988, at column 379, my right hon. Friend is currently considering the CEGB's application for consent to construct a coal-fired power station at West Burton. He has received no application from the CEGB for consent to construct a coal-fired power station at Kingsnorth. It is for the CEGB to decide whether and when to apply for consent to construct any new power station.

DEFENCE

Arms Exports

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many jobs were directly and indirectly supported by arms exports in (a) 1986 and (b) 1987.

Mr. Sainsbury: As stated in the statement on the defence estimates, (Cm 344-II Volume 2, 1988 Table 6·8) the total number of jobs directly and indirectly supported by defence exports amounted to 110,000 for the year 1985-86. This is the latest year for which Government figures are yet available.

Aircraft (Chaff)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps to prevent the ejection of chaff from aircraft over areas grazed by livestock; what representations he has received from farmers on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No. In war, the deployment of chaff would help our aircraft to avoid detection by enemy radar and thus enhance the survival prospects of the aircraft and aircrew. Practice in deploying chaff effectively is, therefore, essential. Most chaff is dropped over the sea, but a small amount has to be dispersed over land, almost all in the area of training ranges. Such use is very strictly controlled. Following complaints by a small number of farmers in the vicinity of the electronic warfare training range at RAF Spadeadam in Cumbria, the Ministry of Defence commissioned an independent study into the properties of chaff. The Ministry of Defence is discussing with the National Farmers Union our intention to conduct a follow-on study of the effects of chaff upon livestock within the Spadeadam area for a period of two years commencing in the near future.

Chemical Weapons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why it is not the policy of Her Majesty's Government to comment on information relating to chemical weapons capability.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information on which the assessment of chemical weapons capabilities set out in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988" (Cm. 344-I) is based is highly classified, and it would not be in the national interest to discuss such information in detail.

Airfields

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to review the future of the airfields operated by the Procurement Executive of his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have decided to conduct a study into the future requirements for the airfields which support the research and development programme undertaken by the Procurement Executive. The airfields concerned are at royal aerospace establishment Bedford, aeroplane and armaments experimental establishment Boscombe Down and royal aerospace establishment Farnborough. The study will start early in the new year and all interested parties will have the opportunity to submit their views.

Her Majesty's Forces (Car Registration Plates)

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to complete the transfer of car registration plates on civilian vehicles belonging to members of Her Majesty's forces in Germany.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All personnel with private vehicles registered with the British Forces Germany licensing centre have now been issued with United Kingdom-style civilian number plates. This action will be completed today. I should like to take this opportunity to express my appreciation for the excellent work by all those involved in Germany and elsewhere, in this very considerable task, which has involved some 60,000 vehicles and which has been completed in a most timely and efficient manner.

Ingram Model 10 Gun

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the calibre of the Ingram Model 10 sub-machine gun referred to in his answer of 13 June, Official Report, column 229.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Nine millimetres.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Ingram Model 10 sub-machine gun was first issued to the Army in Northern Ireland; to which Army units it has been issued; and whether it can be fitted with a silencer.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I understand that the Ingram Model 10 was first issued to the Army in Northern Ireland in 1976. It is not our policy to comment on the issue of weapons to particular units. Although, like most firearms, the Ingram Model SMG Model 10 can be fitted with a silencer or suppressor, I am not aware of any occasion when a silenced or suppressed weapon has been used by the Army in Northern Ireland.

Keenie Meenie Services

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in which Ministry of Defence publications Keenie Meenie Services (KMS) have placed advertisements.

Mr. Sainsbury: I am not aware of any advertisements having been procured or placed in Ministry of Defence publications by Keenie Meenie Services (KMS).

14 Intelligence Company

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) at what date 14 Intelligence Company was formed; and whether it is still operative;

(2) if he will list the locations and dates of 14 Intelligence Company's tours of duty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our policy to comment on intelligence matters.

Troops (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a table showing the number of troops deployed in Northern Ireland and the number of his Department's civil servants stationed there in each year from 1969 to the present date.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information available on the Armed Forces and MOD civilian numbers in Northern Ireland on 1 January of each year since 1969 and at the latest date is as follows:

	Regular Forces	UDR	Civilians
1969	4,902	—	n/a
1970	8,816	—	n/a
1971	11,100	4,000	n/a

n/a = not available.
Regular Forces numbers in 1969, 1970 and 1971 are at 1 July.
Recruitment to the UDR was authorised to commence on 1 January 1970.
Civilian numbers prior to 1978 are not readily available and could only be produced at disproportionate cost.
Civilian numbers in 1978 are at 1 April.

Ulster Defence Regiment

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the official duties and responsibilities separately of the Ulster Defence Regiment and the regular forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The role of the armed forces in Northern Ireland, including the Ulster Defence Regiment, is to support the RUC in the defeat of terrorism and the maintenance of law and order. The duties and responsibilities in connection with this role are set out in statements on the defence estimates and in such documents as "Regulations of the Ulster Defence Regiment" published by HMSO.

British Nuclear Fuels

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, the British Nuclear Fuel plc team carrying out the programme audit of the capital works programme at Aldermaston and Burghfield communicated with his Department's officials prior to the completion of their report in March 1986.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes. The conduct of the audit required communication and consultation between the BNFL audit team and MOD officials during the audit period.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many programme audits of the capital works programme at Aldermaston and Burghfield have been carried out;

(2) how many programme audits of the capital works programme at Aldermaston and Burghfield have been carried out by British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Mr. Sainsbury: Three programme audits have been carried out on the AWE capital programme. These were carried out by British Nuclear Fuels plc, the controller, establishments research and nuclear, and John Brown (Engineers and Constructors) Ltd.

AWE Capital Programme

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what, pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 50, was the nature of the indications that the estimated total cost of the AWE capital programme was rising.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to paragraphs 9 and 10 to appendix 4 of the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General, "Control and Management of the Trident Programme"—HC 27.

Premature Voluntary Release

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the Army premature voluntary release figures for the third quarter of each year from 1983 to 1988; and what are the comparable full year figures for each year from 1983 to 1987.

Mr. Freeman: The information that my hon. Friend has requested is set out in the table:

Premature voluntary release: Army 1983-1988

Year	1983: 3rd Quarter		1984: 3rd Quarter		1985: 3rd Quarter		1986: 3rd Quarter		1987: 3rd Quarter		1988: 3rd Quarter[1]

HEALTH

Food Poisoning

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of reported cases of people affected by food poisoning caused by the bacterium salmonella enteritida found in eggs (a) for each year from 1980 to the present time and (b) for each calendar month during 1988.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not have readily available information for the years 1980-87 for cases of food poisoning caused by salmonella enteritidis found in eggs. To date, in 1988 there have been 46 outbreaks of salmonella food poisoning involving over 1,000 cases in which the most likely source of infection was eggs. The monthly breakdown of cases is as follows. While we do not have readily available precise figures, a high proportion of these cases was associated with the salmonella enteritidis bacterium.

	Number
January	27
February	—
March	—
April	60
May	302
June	159
July	207
August	145
September	114
October	127

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what responsibility his Department has for ensuring that foodstuffs are safe for human consumption and carry no risk of food poisoning; in what way this responsibility is carried out; how many and what type of staff are required; what is the annual cost to his Department; and what has been the change in the number of staff and the annual cost to his Department in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the right hon. Member have such information as can be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost as soon as possible.

Physicists

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the starting salary of National Health Service physicists who determine radiation output levels in radiotherapy departments; what is the percentage gap between this starting salary and that for physicists in industry with similar qualifications; how many jobs for physicists in the National Health Service are currently vacant; and what proportion this is of the total number.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Starting salaries of physicists who determine radiation output levels in radiotherapy departments range from £11,164 to £14,591 outside London, and from £12,431 to £15,858 in inner London. We do not collect information centrally about vacant physicist posts in the National Health Service or about starting salaries of physicists in industry.

Childminders

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he proposes to take to ensure that applicants for registration as childminders take part in a local authority approved course of pre-registration training, and that registered childminders do not discriminate against children or their families on grounds of ethnic origin, culture or religion.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Local authority social service departments have a duty to register childminders under the Nurseries and Childminders Regulation Act 1948. We intend to revise that legislation by introducing amendments in the Children Bill, now going through Parliament. We shall consider whether it is appropriate to specify training requirements in new legislation. Section 20 of the Race Relations Act 1976 makes it unlawful for a person who provides facilities or services to the public or a section of the public to discriminate against any person who seeks to obtain those services, that is to treat him less favourably on racial grounds. I am advised that childminders are within the scope of that provision and I am satisfied that it is not necessary or desirable to make any further provision in legislation.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from (a) childminding associations, and (b) childcare and family service organisations, with regard to the White Paper, "The Law on Childcare and Family Services"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have received representations on the Government's proposals for new legislation to regulate independently provided day care and out of school services set out in the White Paper from the National Childminding Association, the Staffordshire County Childminding Association and the pre-School Playgroups Association. We intend to introduce amendments to the Nurseries and Childminders Regulation Act 1948, which currently regulates these services, in the Children Bill.

Operating Department Assistants

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether operating department assistants from agencies are paid at a higher or lower rate than National Health Service staff.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have no information about the terms and conditions of service of operating department assistants employed by private agencies. Operating department assistants employed by the NHS receive a package of terms and conditions which includes items such as holidays, pensions and sick pay. Comparison is therefore not possible.

Education Act 1981

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of district health authorities are not complying fully with section 10 of the Education Act 1981.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect this information centrally. However, the arrangements for identifying and providing for children under the age of five with special educational needs should be met through the continuous process of child health surveillance, including any necessary follow up arrangements, carried out by health authorities.

AIDS

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will outline the specific aspects of the AIDS education programme designed to meet the needs of the deaf;

(2) if he will make a statement explaining the reasons for refusing to renew the grant to AIDS health education and advice for the deaf for 1988-89; and whether the grant will be restored in 1989-90;

(3) if he will allocate an additional separate budget for AIDS education for deaf people in 1988-89.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: During 1987-88 and 1988-89 financial support amounting to nearly £113,000 was given by my Department and the Health Education Authority, to AIDS AHEAD a consortium of organisations representing the deaf, for the production and distribution of educational materials including videos, leaflets and posters.

A bid by AIDS AHEAD for further funding in the current financial year is currently being considered, and they have been invited to submit an outline bid for 1989-90.

In setting programmes for AIDS prevention my Department and the Health Education Authority will continue to take account of the educational needs of people with sensory impairment.

Drug abuse

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a breakdown of how the £9·5 million paid during the current financial year to combat drug abuse has been allocated between regional health authorities.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The £9·5 million available to regional health authorities for the development of drug misuse services in 1988-89 has been allocated as follows:

Regional health authority	£'000s
Northern	603
Yorkshire	718
Trent	932
East Anglian	393
North West Thames	719
North East Thames	765
South East Thames	718
South West Thames	576
Wessex	585
Oxford	530
South Western	617
West Midlands	1,044
Mersey	481
North Western	789
Total	9,470

The allocations are based on each region's population in the 15 to 34 years age group.

Grants

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the national organisations to whom grants were made under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 in each of the years 1985 to 1988; and if he will state the amount paid in grants in each case.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Lists giving the details of grants awarded under the section 64 general scheme for the financial years 1984-85 to 1986-87 have been placed in the Library. For 1987-88 I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security on 27 June at columns 124-29.

The majority of the grant recipients are national in scope.

Grading

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff from each of the old grades have been assimilated to each of the new grades in the recent clinical grading structure in Wigan district health authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 12 December 1988]: The information requested is given in the table.

Medical Records Staff

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the cost per member of staff working in medical records, information and technology; and what comparable figure he has for (a) the United States of America, (b) France, (c) the Federal Republic of Germany and (d) Sweden, at current rates of exchange;

(2) how many employees, and at what average rates, are engaged in medical records information and technology aged, respectively, 16 to 18 years, 19 to 24 years, 25 to 35 years, 36 to 50 years and 50 to 65 years; and what are the comparable figures for employees engaged in similar work in (1) the United States of America, (2) France, (3) the Federal Republic of Germany and (4) Sweden;

(3) if he will provide the number of medical records information and technology staff analysed by each health service region and give for each region the percentage which the total of such staff bears to the overall number employed in that region.

Mr. Mellor: The work is performed by staff in a number of different grades and on different pay scales. Information on the average cost of such staff or on their breakdown into different age groups could not be provided except at disproportionate cost. The table shows, for each of the health service regions in England, the numbers of staff employed in medical records and in computing, and these numbers expressed as a percentage of total staff, at the latest available date of information. Comparative information on other countries is not available.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Widows

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many widows under the age of 45 years currently receive widow's pensions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As at 31 March 1988, the latest date for which information is available, approximately 4,500 widows aged under 45 were in receipt of widow's pension, which is payable to widows without dependent children.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has of the number of women aged between 40 and 45 years of age who will be widowed during 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Latest estimates indicate that approximately 4,000 women aged between 40 and 45 will be widowed during 1988.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he last reviewed the level of the widow's pension; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend reviewed the widow's payment at the same time as other benefits, before he made his uprating announcement to the House on 27 October.

Pensioners

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what number and proportion of pensioners' households in Derbyshire are in receipt of (a) occupational pension payments, (b) income support, (c) housing benefit and (d) both income support and housing benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The county of Derbyshire is served by the Department's local offices at Derby (Becket street), Derby (London road), Derby (Heritage gate), Ilkeston, Chesterfield and Buxton, although the boundaries are not conterminous.

The number of income support claimants in receipt of a pensioner premium from these offices as at 31 August 1988, the latest information available, was 22,594.

I regret that the other information requested is not available.

Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action. The figures given include a small number of cases not actually in receipt of benefit and the information is provisional and subject to amendment.

Transitional Payments

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when his Department will authorise Waltham Forest council to pay £5·58p per week transitional payment awarded to Mr. and Mrs. E. W. and R. J. Hirst of 77 Tyndall road, E10 on 26 August; and how many other residents in Leyton are similarly awaiting notification to the local authority by his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In this instance Mr. Hirst opted to have any transitional payments paid direct to Waltham Forest district council. Payments in respect of the period 4 April 1988 to 13 November 1988 have been sent to the council and in these circumstances it is for them to arrange direct with Mr. Hirst the level of future rent and rate liabilities to reflect any transitional payments received direct from the transitional payments unit. Details of applications outstanding within Leyton are not available.

Community Care Grants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will instruct social fund officers to consider the possible award of a community care grant in every case they handle as a means of ensuring that the budget is not underspent at the end of the year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Social fund officers are advised in "Social Fund Manual" paragraphs 1026, 3053 and 4032 that for each application they should consider whether a community care grant would meet the particular need.

Departmental Computer Systems

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list in the Official Report the types of intrusion he is trying to prohibit in designing his departmental computer security systems;

(2) what steps are being taken to protect departmental computer systems against theft of data, malicious damage or illegal tampering with data;

(3) whether encryption techniques are being employed in his departmental security systems;

(4) what plans he has to deal with the safety of back-up storage facilities for computer data in his departmental security systems;

(5) what plans he has to control access to information held in individual files in his departmental computer systems;

(6) whether his computer security system will restrict access to the originator of the data;

(7) what recovery procedures are available to a security supervisor of his departmental computer system when pass words are forgotten;

(8) if there is any system for monitoring terminal usage in his departmental computer system;

(9) what procedures exist to remove protection in particular files to make a computer data available for general release;

(10) whether the Department's security system includes physical devices such as keys to protect computer data.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department has a large number of information technology systems in use and a wide range of measures are provided to safeguard them. Most of the existing computer systems are batch-processing systems, which are not susceptible to many of the threats of on-line systems. However, the Department has now begun to implement its operational strategy, a major programme of computerisation which will provide on-line services for all social security offices. In devising the strategy, we have taken great care to ensure the security of the system.

Entry to a system will be limited to those terminals which have authorised access to the system. The use of terminals will be carefully monitored. External users are unable to dial directly into a system. A dial-back facility will be imposed which ensures that only authorised external users are allowed entry.

Access to a system is limited to authorised users by means of passwords and personal identification devices. Passwords are changed regularly and whenever a password is compromised or forgotten the individual must be re-introduced to the system by an authorised officer.

Most computer data files record the personal details of individuals. These records are treated confidentially and are not avilable for general release. Access to data will be controlled by a system of access permissions which will ensure that officers address only those data needed to perform their work. All transactions will be audited to enable management to monitor access to data and to ensure attempted breaches of security are recognised and reported. Where appropriate, data will be encrypted. Back-up copies of data will be held separately and securely for all systems.

Social Fund

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest information on how much of the social fund has so far been allocated for loans at Ayr's Department of Social Security office; and how much has been allocated as a national average.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As at 30 October 1988 45 per cent. of the social fund loans allocation to Ayr local office had been spent. At the same date national expenditure was 43 per cent. of the total loans budget allocation.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any information as to whether there will be an underspend at local offices of his Department of the social fund allocation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Future levels of expenditure by local offices will be dependent on the numbers, types and financial values of applications made, their relative priorities, the amounts available in local office budgets and the exercise of discretion by social fund officers on individual cases. It is not possible at this stage to predict with certainty the extent to which individual local offices might underspend their budget allocations.

Family Credit

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest estimates for the number of families who will receive family credit scheme benefit during 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information will be published in the Public Expenditure White Paper in the new year.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for housing benefit transitional payments are still outstanding; and if all such cases will be finalised by the end of 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Up to 9 December 396,000 applications had been received at the transitional payments unit. Of these, 314,000 have been assessed and 146,000 cases are now receiving payments. The majority of the outstanding cases are awaiting the return of the inquiry form which is sent to the relevant local authority to obtain housing benefit details. Local authorities are being contacted asking them to deal with the forms as quickly as possible. The unit is processing cases as soon as these inquiry forms are returned by local authorities. All outstanding cases will be cleared once the relevant forms have been sent back.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average weekly payment currently paid out in housing benefit transitional payments; and what is the equivalent estimated sum in the next financial year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The current average weekly payment of housing benefit transitional payment is £4·06, but this figure has fluctuated over the period since payments began. This will continue up to 31 March 1989 which is the cut-off date for applications to be made. It is not therefore possible to predict the average payment for the next financial year until after this date when all applications have been processed.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state the current estimated time for which housing benefit transitional payments are likely to continue.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No decision has yet been made on how transitional payments will finally be phased out although it has always been made clear that these payments will be reduced as people's circumstances change and the need for them is reduced. We have already announced that transitional payments will be reduced in the majority of cases by £2 per week next April. Some payments will therefore cease after the first year and others will not be paid after the end of year two. However, where large payments are being made the need will continue for several years.

Benefit Changes

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 9 December, if he will set out the weekly change in benefit in 1989-90 for the individual claimant of (a) retirement pension, (b) widow's benefit, (c) unemployment benefit, (d) invalidity benefit, (e) attendance allowance and (f) mobility allowance, if mortgage interest payments were excluded from the calculation of the retail price index.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is as follows:

	proposed April 1989 rates, increased in line with published RPI	April 1989 rates, increased in line with RPI excluding mortgage interest payments
Full basic State Retirement Pension	43·60	43·30
Widow's Pension standard rate	43·60	43·30
Unemployment Benefit (under pension age)	34·70	34·45
Invalidity Pension	43·60	43·30
Attendance Allowance (higher rate)	34·90	34·65
Mobility Allowance	24·40	24·25

Benefit Levels

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what level of inflation has been allowed for in his Department's calculations leading up to the setting of social security benefit levels for (a) 1988-89 and (b) 1989-90.

Mr. Scott: The April 1988 uprating was based on the published movement in the retail prices index (RPI) between September 1986 and September 1987; the index rose by 4·2 per cent. The rates of the new income-related benefits took account of a rise of 3·2 per cent. in the RPI less housing costs over the same period.

The uprating in April 1989 is based on the movement in the RPI between September 1987 and September 1988; the RPI rose by 5·9 per cent. and the RPI less housing by 4·7 per cent. over that period. Because the RPI was subject to an error which was corrected during the relevant period, benefits are being increased by more than the rise in the RPI where necessary to compensate for the error. Also in recognition of the error the premiums in the income-related benefits will receive an extra increase.

Board and Lodging Payments

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on proposed changes in board and lodging payments for people in supported lodgings and the level of representations in respect of the changes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A total of 52 representations on supported lodgings were made in response to consultative proposals to reform income support payments to people in lodgings. There will be generous transitional measures to protect this group against loss when new arrangements for people in board and lodgings accommodation come into force next April.

Tax Benefit Model Tables

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the April 1988 edition of the tax benefit model tables; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have placed copies of these tables in the Library today.

We have improved the presentation of the tables. By including take-home pay and net income before as well as after housing costs, we have made clearer the steps by which gross earnings are turned into final figures. We have also replaced the heading "marginal tax rate" by "marginal tax/benefit withdrawal rate". This more accurately describes the marginal deduction from income which occurs as gross earnings rise. As in previous editions, and in order to illustrate fully the interplay between the tax and the benefit systems, the tables apply to local authority tenants. This year we have reflected this in the title of the tables.

In the tables expenses which claimants are expected to meet themselves are now treated as a part of net disposable income rather than deducted as they were before. This applies in particular to water service charges and fares to work. For those out of work and receiving income support, water service charges are treated like any other ordinary item of domestic expenditure. No particular fares-to-work figure, including the average, can represent the range of costs which occur in practice. Moreover, as many as one in three working people have no travel-to-work costs. The tables, therefore, assume no fares to work or other work-related expenses, but anyone wishing to deduct a particular amount, for example, the estimated average amount of £6·30 (which would be consistent with previous years figures), can make the appropriate adjustment to the net income figures shown in the tables.

Despite these improvements, the examples in the tables remain arbitrary. They cannot reflect, except by chance, the actual circumstances of particular people and cannot claim to be representative of the population at large. The tables use average rents and local authority rates so they do not reflect the full range of housing costs which people can pay. The family characteristics in the tables are chosen only to illustrate various features of the social security system.

Incomes

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing by how much the real equivalent incomes of the bottom 5 per cent. and the top 5 per cent. of the population rose between 1979 and 1985, after payment of housing costs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 9 December 1988]: Estimates of real equivalent increase in income are available only in 10 per cent. bands. Between 1979 and 1985, the incomes of the bottom 10 per cent. of individuals in Great Britain, calculated on the basis of "Households Below Average Income" and expressed after housing costs, rose by an average of 3 per cent. in real terms. The real incomes of the top 10 per cent. rose by 19 per cent.

Income Support

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for and awards of supplementary benefit or income support for persons over pension age, unemployed and in other circumstances were made in each month since April 1987.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 13 December 1988]: The information requested is as follows:

Note: Recording of the information changes from four weekly to calendar monthly from April 1988.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Obscene Publications Act

13. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any proposals for seeking to amend the Obscene Publications Act.

Mr. Renton: We see no case for continuing the exemption of broadcasting from the Obscene Publications Act 1959, and would like to see it removed at the earliest opportunity. We have no other proposals at present.

Wolverhampton Town Centre (Security Cameras)

14. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to whether similar action is being considered for other town centres, following the introduction by the police of security cameras in Wolverhampton town centre.

Mr. John Patten: The introduction of such schemes by the police in England and Wales is an operational matter for chief officers. Schemes of this kind might be considered in other "safer cities" areas. We are aware of similar schemes in Southampton, Bournemouth and King's Lynn.

Remand Centres

15. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received regarding the future of remand centres.

Mr. Hurd: About 65 individuals and organisations have sent in comments on the Green Paper "Private Sector Involvement in the Remand System", which was published in July.

Police Forces (Establishment)

16. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police forces are unable to recruit to their permitted establishement at the present time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All forces in England and Wales are at, or very close to, their authorised establishment, although force strengths fluctuate in the light of recruitment and wastage patterns. Only four forces were more than 2 per cent. below establishment on 31 August: these were Bedfordshire 2·62 per cent. below establishment; Northants 2·35 per cent.; Cheshire 2·15 per cent.; and Avon and Somerset 2·07 per cent.

75. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet ready to announce increases in police establishments for police forces.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend is not yet in a position to announce increases in police establishments for 1989-90. He will do so as soon as possible.

Police/School Liaison Group

17. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the code of practice on police and schools produced by the police/school liaison group.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government welcome the spirit of co-operation between teachers and the police which is reflected in the production of their code of practice.

I have to say that we do not agree with some of the detailed recommendations in the code, but we share the authors' view that police work in schools has an extremely important role to play in helping to develop the concept of social responsibility among young people and in maintaining the essential relationship of confidence and trust between the police and the public.

National Disaster Unit

18. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to establish a national disaster unit.

Mr. John Patten: We are looking closely at our arrangements for handling disasters and I will be announcing our conclusions in the due course.

Neighbourhood Watch Scheme

19. Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the numbers of neighbourhood watch schemes operating (a) nationally and (b) in the Stafford area.

Mr. John Patten: At the beginning of October, there were almost 60,000 neighbourhood watch schemes in England and Wales with 159 schemes in the Stafford police division covering nearly 17,000 households. This is an increase of almost 100 schemes over the last 12 months and the number of households covered has more than doubled.

36. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the numbers of neighbourhood watch schemes operating (a) nationally and (b) in the Bury, South constituency.

Mr. John Patten: At the end of October, there were almost 60,000 neighbourhood watch schemes in England and Wales and 288 schemes in the Bury metropolitan district division of the Greater Manchester police force area. I understand from the chief constable of Greater Manchester that figures are not readily available on the number of schemes in my hon. Friend's constituency.

45. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many households in England and Wales are now members of a neighbourhood watch scheme; and if he will make a statement.

88. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many households in England and Wales are now members of a neighbourhood watch scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: There are now almost 60,000 neighbourhood watch schemes in England and Wales covering some 3·25 million households. Since the establishment of the first scheme in 1982, neighbourhood watch has caught the public's imagination and I welcome this clear evidence of their commitment to help the police in dealing with local crime problems.

55. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the numbers of neighbourhood watch schemes operating (a) nationally and (b) in the north-west area.

Mr. John Patten: At the beginning of October there were almost 60,000 neighbourhood watch schemes in England and Wales, with over a quarter of this total (16,800) in the Cheshire, Cumbria, Greater Manchester, Lancashire and Merseyside police force areas.

97. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the role of the neighbourhood watch scheme in crime prevention.

Mr. John Patten: Neighbourhood watch schemes can be effective in reducing crime and the fear of crime, in increasing public awareness of the part they can play in preventing crime, in improving co-operation between the public and the police, and in providing a focus for action for those who wish to work against crime.

Crime Statistics (South Yorkshire)

20. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest quarterly recorded crime figures in the South Yorkshire metropolitan area; and what were the comparable figures for (a) the previous quarter and (b) one year ago.

Mr. John Patten: There was a further drop in recorded crime. In the three months to September, South Yorkshire police recorded 20,883 notifiable offences. This compares with 22,000 in the second quarter of 1988 and 22,888 in the third quarter of 1987.

Forensic Science Service

21. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are, by grade, the manpower levels within the forensic science service; and what they were three and five years ago.

Mr. Hurd: The information is as follows:

The numbers of staff in post in 1985 (at 31 December) and 1988 (at 31 October) at the six forensic science laboratories and the central research and support establishment (CRSE) were as follows:

Grade	1985	1988
6	8	8
7	54	51
Senior Scientific Officer	107·5	118
Higher Scientific Officer	86	95
Scientific Officer	101·5	115·5
Assistant Scientific Officer	81·5	54·5
Laboratory Attendant	11	9·5
Professional and Technology Officer	2	2

Voluntary Bodies (Participation)

22. Mr. David Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to ensure that the policies of all public bodies and agencies for which he is responsible support and encourage the role of the citizen in participation in voluntary bodies.

Mr. John Patten: Involvement in voluntary work is one of the ways in which responsible and active citizens make a positive contribution to their community and I take every opportunity to encourage this. Many of the bodies and agencies for which I have responsibility already work closely with voluntary organisations and with individual volunteers. Volunteers do valuable work for example in the crime prevention field and with young offenders. The Home Office also provides grant aid to a number of organisations which support and promote volunteering.

"Death on the Rock"

23. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has received on the steps taken by the Independent Broadcasting Authority in relation to Thames Television's programme "Death on the Rock".

Mr. Renton: The board of Thames Television has appointed two independent assessors to inquire into the making of the programme "Death on the Rock". The IBA, as the regulatory authority for the ITV companies, will consider the report from Thames as soon as it becomes available, and decide whether any action is necessary.

Broadwater Farm (Incident)

24. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has made inquiries into the alleged violations of police procedures during investigations into the death of PC Blakelock at Broadwater Farm in 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: An investigation into allegations and complaints against the police is being carried out under the supervision of the Police Complaints Authority in accordance with the provisions of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. It would be wrong for my right hon. Friend to intervene in this process.

Police Officers (Stress)

25. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will next meet the chairman of the Association of Chief Police Officers to discuss stress among police officers.

Mr. Hurd: At the meeting of the Police Advisory Board on 25 October, which was attended by the president of the Association of Chief Police Officers, I announced that a central facility would be provided within the Home Office to advise chief officers of police on matters of organisation health and welfare, including stress. I have no plans for a further meeting with the president on this issue.

Offensive Weapons

26. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department has taken to prevent the manufacture and supply of offensive weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have taken powers in the new Criminal Justice Act enabling the Secretary of State to specify, by affirmative order, weapons which it will be an offence to manufacture, sell, import, hire, give or lend. The purpose of this provision is to take out of circulation altogether weapons which have no legitimate use. An order specifying 14 martial arts and other weapons was recently debated and approved by Parliament. The order was made on 17 November and comes into force on 18 January 1989.

87. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals his Department has to limit the manufacture and supply of offensive weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have taken powers in the new Criminal Justice Act enabling the Secretary of State to specify, by affirmative order, weapons which it will be an offence to manufacture, sell, import, hire, give or lend. The purpose of this provision is to take out of circulation altogether weapons which have no legitimate use. An order specifying 14 martial arts and other weapons was recently debated and approved by Parliament. The order was made on 17 November and comes into force on 18 January 1989.

Fire Services

27. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost of the fire service (a) in south Yorkshire and (b) in other metropolitan county areas.

61. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost of the fire service (a) in West Yorkshire and (b) in other metropolitan counties.

Mr. John Patten: The budgets set by the fire and civil defence authorities in South Yorkshire and West Yorkshire in respect of all their functions show expected total expenditure for 1988-89 to be £22·422 million and £37·558 million, respectively. Corresponding information in respect of the other metropolitan fire and civil defence authorities is as follows:

	£ million
Greater Manchester	46·931
Merseyside	31·932
Tyne and Wear	22·982
West Midlands	44·227

Robbery (Sentences)

28. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the change in the last year in the average sentence for robbery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The average sentence imposed on men aged 21 or over (this being the average generally used for purposes of comparison) increased by 9 per cent. in the last year and by over 20 per cent. in the last three years.

Broadcasting Satellites

29. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to prevent broadcasting of obscene and violent programmes in the United Kingdom from foreign-owned satellites.

40. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department will be taking to prevent broadcasting of obscene and violent programmes in the United Kingdom from foreign-owned satellites.

72. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to prevent broadcasting of obscene and violent programmes in the United Kingdom from foreign-owned satellites.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friends to paragraphs 7.12 to 7.14 of our White Paper "Broadcasting in the '90s: Competition, Choice and Quality" (November 1988, Cm. 517), copies of which were placed in the Library. Since the White Paper was published, we have made further significant progress, at last month's Stockholm ministerial conference, towards achieving agreement on an effective Council of Europe convention on transfrontier broadcasting (to which paragraph 7.13 refers). Subject to further discussion by Ministers' deputies, prospects now seem good for opening the convention for signature early in 1989.

HIV Infection (Prisoners)

30. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the level of HIV infection amongst prisoners.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 5 December 1988 the number of reported HIV antibody positive prisoners in England and Wales was 55. These are the identified cases. An informed assessment of the rate of infection in the prison population could be made only by taking the unacceptable step of requiring prisoners to submit to blood testing arrangements different from those which apply in the general community. Prisoners will, however, where appropriate be included in future approved research programmes based on anonymous blood testing.

Prison Kitchens

31. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to meet the Institution of Environmental Health Officers to discuss the inspection of prison kitchens.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have plans to meet representatives of the institution at present.

Official Secrets Bill

32. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the need for a public interest defence in the Official Secrets Bill.

Mr. Hurd: From the publication of our White Paper on the reform of section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911 on 29 June up to 6 December I had received representations from 13 organisations and eight individuals supporting a public interest defence. In addition, right hon. and hon. Members had passed to me representations supporting such a defence which they had received from three organisations and three individuals.

Broadcasting White Paper

33. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with representatives of the Scottish broadcasting media regarding the Government's White Paper, Cm. 517.

66. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with representatives of the Scottish broadcasting media regarding the Government White Paper, Cm. 517.

84. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with representatives of the Scottish broadcasting media regarding the Government's White Paper, Cm. 517.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan (Mr. Sillars) earlier today.

70. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why his broadcasting White Paper proposes that the new television channels should be available only to EEC companies and that each such station should have a required quota of programmes produced in the EEC.

Mr. Renton: Under European community rules the Government must not discriminate between United Kingdom and other EC television companies. The White Paper's proposals reflect well-established principles in existing legislation. Terrestrial television channels have power, immediacy and influence, and are a scarce national resource: the Government do not consider it desirable that non-EC companies should be able to control them. We are considering further whether this restriction should also apply to the proposed franchise for the local delivery of TV. The requirement for a proper proportion of programme material of EC origin should help to maintain a competitive and flourishing United Kingdom programme market.

Guildford Pub Bombing

34. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will refer the Guildford four cases to the Court of Appeal, in view of the new evidence submitted to him concerning the cases; and if he will make a statement.

Guildford and Woolwich Pub Bombings

62. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce the outcome of his review of the convictions of the four people convicted of the Guildford and Woolwich pub bombings.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the question by my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern) on 6 December at column 113.

Children (Rights)

35. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to ensure that United Kingdom immigration rules and the United Nations draft conventions on the rights of the child are consistent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The draft conventions remain under discussion and I have no present plan to make changes to the rules for this purpose.

Frontier Controls (Ports)

37. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to alter frontier controls and arrangements at United Kingdom ports of entry in advance of 1992.

Ports (Controls)

63. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to controls at United Kingdom ports of entry after 1992.

Frontier Control

74. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on control of EEC frontiers after 1992.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on 14 December 1988 at columns 576-77.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Carlisle Report (Parole)

38. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will estimate the effects upon the total prison population of the implementation of the Carlisle report on parole.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The review committee's assessment of the prison population effects of the proposed scheme is given in paragraphs 429-434 and in table 10, appendix 5 of its report, "The Parole System in England and Wales", November 1988, Cm. 532.

Child Destruction

39. Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inmates of Her Majesty's prisons are currently serving custodial sentences for the crime of child destruction under the Infant Life Preservation Act.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The records held centrally show one offender currently serving a custodial sentence having been convicted under the Infant Life Preservation Act 1929. I also refer my right hon. Friend to the reply given earlier to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess).

Footballers (Incidents)

41. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has discussed with chief police officers in England and Wales the role of police in attendance at football grounds in relation to incidents involving players on the field of play.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. It is for the appropriate chief officer of police to decide whether criminal charges should be brought as a result of incidents during football matches. Any cases in which charges are made in England and Wales are then referred to the Crown Prosecution Service.

Police Authorities

42. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure that adequate resources are available to police authorities.

69. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he will take to increase the resources and staffing of the South Yorkshire police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Home Office meets, through police specific grant, 51 per cent. of all police authorities' expenditure for policing purposes. An additional contribution is made from central funds through block grant.

Applications by police authorities for increases in police establishments in 1989-90 are under consideration and decisions will be announced as soon as possible. Eight hundred police posts are available outside London.

Association of Chief Police Officers

43. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Association of Chief Police Officers; and what was discussed.

Mr. Hurd: I hold many meetings with the officers and committees of ACPO. The most recent was with members of the ACPO traffic committee on 24 October. The matters that we discussed included police breath-testing powers and the enforcement of road traffic law.

Gaelic Broadcasting Service

44. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from those campaigning for a Gaelic language broadcasting service.

Mr. Renton: We have received representations on this matter from various interested parties on behalf of the Gaelic community in Scotland, including the report "Towards a Gaelic Television Service" submitted by Comunn na Gaidhlig. Those representations were taken into account in the preparation of the Government's recently published White Paper on broadcasting which, amongst other things, addresses the question of Gaelic broadcasting and how it might benefit from future television services.

65. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding Gaelic broadcasting since the publication of the broadcasting White Paper.

Mr. Renton: We have received one representation from a Member of Parliament on behalf of his constituent. The question of Gaelic broadcasting, and how it might benefit from future television services, is addressed in the Government's recently published White Paper on broadcasting, and Home Office officials have met Comunn na Gaidhlig to discuss the implications of this part of the White Paper.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

46. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will next meet the chairman of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board to discuss delays in processing claims.

Mr. Hurd: I have no plans for such a meeting at present.

50. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further resources he intends to make available in order to reduce the backlog of submissions to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Feltham and Heston (Mr. Ground) on 1 December at column 395.

90. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average waiting time between the injury and receipt of compensation payments from the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board.

Mr. John Patten: The statistics kept by the board use the date of application as the baseline and not the date of the injury. The available information on the proportion of cases submitted to a single member for decision within certain periods from the date of application is published in the Board's annual reports. The most recent report was published on 6 December (Cm. 536).

EC (Security and Frontier Controls)

47. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent talks he has had with European Ministers about security and frontier controls following implementation of the single European market, in particular in connection with the fight against terrorism.

Mr. Hurd: I attended a meeting of Trevi Ministers in Athens on 9 December under the presidency of the Greek Minister for Public Order, Mr. Petsos. We agreed that Trevi should pursue its study of border checks, which had been instituted at my initiative at our previous meeting in Munich, so that the changes to take place on 1 January 1993 should not adversely affect prevention of terrorism, drug trafficking and other serious crime in the Community.

In view of recent events and the important contribution that effective extradition arrangements can make to counter terrorism, we also agreed to ask our Foreign Minister colleagues to arrange for the working group on judicial co-operation to examine co-operation over the preparation and processing of extradition applications as part of its consideration of the subject as a whole. We also agreed an updated assessment of the terrorist threat to the Community countries.

In recent months I have also had bilateral discussions with my French, Italian and Spanish counterparts on terrorism, including the security aspects of frontier checks and controls.

European Court of Human Rights (Brogen and Others)

48. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has yet considered the implications for United Kingdom legislation of the judgment of the European Court of Human Rights in the case of Brogen and others; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I refer the right hon. and learned Member to the statement I made on this matter when moving the Second Reading of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Bill on 6 December at columns 210-11.

Crimes of Violence (Sentences)

49. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will consider legislation to ensure greater consistency of sentencing for crimes of violence.

Mr. John Patten: From 1 February next, under the Criminal Justice Act 1988, the Attorney-General will be able to bring before the Court of Appeal for review sentences imposed by the Crown court for the most serious offences which appear unduly lenient. We have no plans for further legislation for the purpose which the hon. Member suggests.

Rape

51. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the rise in the average sentence for rape over the past year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The average length of sentence imposed on men aged 21 or over (this being the average generally used for purposes of comparison) upon conviction of rape at the Crown court increased by 16 per cent. between 1986 and 1987, the latest year for which figures are available. The average sentence is now over six years.

Old-Age Pensioners (TV Licence)

52. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now introduce free television licences for all old age pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No. This suggestion has been rejected by the House on a number of occasions.

Infant Life Preservation Act 1929

53. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions there have been as a result of prosecutions brought under the Infant Life Preservation Act 1929 in the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess).

Prisoners (Solitary Confinement)

54. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in England and Wales are currently held in solitary confinement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Solitary confinement, which entails deprivation of all human contact, is not available as a punishment in England and Wales. Cellular confinement may be awarded as a punishment at a disciplinary hearing, but figures are not available for the number so held at any one time. In such circumstances, governors have discretion concerning matters such as visits, education facilities and religious observance.

Independent Television Franchises

56. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on his White Paper proposal to auction the independent television franchises.

Mr. Renton: We have received a number of representations on the proposal for licences to be allocated by competitive tender subject to a quality threshold. We have invited comments on the White Paper before 28 February 1989.

Parking Enforcement

57. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the report of the working party on parking enforcement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the parking enforcement working party is nearing the end of its deliberations and is likely to submit its report early in the new year. A decision about publication of the report will be taken when it is received.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what conclusions have been reached by his Department's parking enforcement working party; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the parking enforcement working party is nearing the end of its work, and is likely to submit its report early in the new year.

Abortion

58. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the last inquest was carried out on a baby aborted under the Abortion Act 1967.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am not aware of any such inquest. This information is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

80. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria he used when deciding that it was not in the public interest to order an inquest on the baby of 21 weeks gestational age aborted at the Carlisle city general hospital in July 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The conclusion was reached after careful consideration of all the information provided by the coroner.

92. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the procedures adopted in determining whether inquests should be held on the deaths of babies aborted alive.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: After the decision was made not to direct the coroner to hold an inquest into the death of the Carlisle baby, we received some representations from Members and six letters from the public variously supporting or seeking reconsideration of the decision.

Burglary

59. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress his Department is making in reducing burglary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: There were 73,000 fewer recorded burglaries in England and Wales in the 12 months ending September 1988, compared with the corresponding period to September 1987, a decrease of 8 per cent. This is very encouraging and great credit is due to the police and the public in their co-operation in a range of crime prevention measures, in particular neighbourhood watch.

Rural Violence

60. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department has taken to curb rural violence.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier today to the question by my hon. Friend the Member for Leominster (Mr. Temple-Morris).

Broadcasting

64. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will next meet the chairman of the BBC to discuss the future of broadcasting.

Mr. Hurd: I meet the chairman of the BBC often to discuss this and other matters.

Sunday Trading

67. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to seek to amend the legislation on Sunday trading.

Mr. Renton: We are continuing our consultations with interested parties to see if we can find a practicable solution which will command sufficient support.

Young Children (Attacks)

68. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to prevent and reduce the number of violent attacks upon young children.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 9 December 1988 to my hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury (Mr. Brazier), at column 354.

Punishment in the Community

71. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his plans for punishment in the community.

Mr. John Patten: Our proposals are set out in the Green Paper "Punishment, Custody and the Community" (Cm. 424). We have invited responses to our long-term proposals by 31 January 1989. Meanwhile we issued in August an action plan for dealing with young adult offenders (those aged 17 and under 21). This calls on probation services in co-operation with other agencies to make arrangements to enable more offenders to be kept out of custody.

89. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on his Department's paper, "Punishment in the Community", Cm. 474.

Mr. John Patten: A number of representations have been received from individuals and organisations. We asked for comments by 31 January 1989, and we shall then give detailed consideration to all the responses.

Football Clubs (Membership Schemes)

73. Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to legislate to ensure that a conviction for any crime of violence will automatically disqualify the offender from the proposed national football membership scheme.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the report of the working party chaired by my hon. Friend the Minister for Sport, published on 9 November. A copy is in the Library. The working party recommended that disqualification from membership should be linked specifically to conviction for football related offences. The Government's conclusion will be made known shortly when my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment introduces a Bill on the football membership scheme.

Passport Office (Staff)

76. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has made to the claim by the Passport Office trade union side for an increase in numbers of permanent staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: As I indicated in my reply to a question from the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray) on 28 November at column 72, passport department officials are in consultation with the trade unions about staffing levels.

83. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about staffing levels in passport offices.

Mr. Renton: A number of hon. Members have written recently on the matter, following an approach to them by the Civil and Public Services Association and the National Union of Civil and Public Servants. Replies will be sent shortly.

Metropolitan Police (Fingerprinting)

77. Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the average length of time in the Metropolitan police area taken for the fingerprint department to match a set of fingerprints found at the scene of crime with those of a suspect or suspects.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that searches of this kind are generally completed within a month. Priority is, however, given to cases involving serious offences and where there is a good quality mark, and the time taken in a particular case will depend therefore on the nature of the offence and the quality of the mark obtained at the scene.

Prisoners (Statistics)

78. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were in prison at the most recent count.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On Friday 2 December, the latest date for which figures are readily available, 49,235 prisoners were held in prison service establishments in England and Wales. A further 937 prisoners were held in police cells.

Passport Applications

79. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of passport applications at each passport office in 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988, to September; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The table shows the number of passports issued in each of the last three years, and in the first nine months of this year.

	1985	1986	1987	[1] 1988
London	418,036	437,857	355,475	342,437
Liverpool	446,813	556,664	554,993	583,865
Peterborough	392,460	482,797	480,422	470,982
Newport	369,981	427,800	439,302	452,769
Glasgow	137,098	159,954	159,723	142,726
Belfast	34,655	45,472	51,305	55,713
	1,799,043	2,110,544	2,041,220	2,048,492

[1] January to September.

Police Service (Value for Money)

81. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures his Department is taking to secure value for money in the police service.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Home Office shares with chief officers of police and local police authorities the responsibility for securing value for money in the police service. Significant improvements in efficiency and effectiveness have been achieved, with the encouragement and support of my Department and Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary, through, for example, the civilianisation of police posts (some 3,300 police officers were released for operational duties in this way in the last five years or so); the streamlining of procedures and the elimination of unnecessary paperwork; the contracting out of support services; and the introduction of efficiency scrutinies in the police service. The Home Office pays full regard to value for money in exercising central controls on police manpower and capital expenditure on land and buildings, and in fulfilling my right hon. Friend's responsibilities as police authority for the Metropolitan police; in providing central services for training, research and development, science and technology; and in promoting good practice across a wide range of police activity.

Drug Taking

82. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what extra resources he intends to make available in order to reduce drug taking.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In accordance with the Government's strategy for reducing both supply and demand, extra resources are being committed for: reducing supplies from India by a contribution of £1 million a year through the United Nations fund for drug abuse control; increasing the effectiveness of enforcement by the provision of some £10 million for additional specialist drugs investigators and improved technical aids for Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; developing prevention and education through the latest phase of the drug prevention publicity campaign and, in England and Wales, by an additional year of central funding for drugs education co-ordinators in the area of each local education authority; and improving treatment and rehabilitation. An additional £3 million is to be provided in 1988-89 for the expansion of drug misuse services in England to help prevent the spread of HIV infection.

Scientific Advisory Group

85. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what payments are made to the members of the scientific advisory group under the chairmanship of Sir Ronald Mason FRS; and what is the total expenditure made by his Department on this group to date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No payments are made to members of the forensic science service scientific advisory group other than reimbursement of travelling and subsistence expenses under the usual Civil Service rules.

Horserace Betting Levy Scheme

86. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much progress has been made in discussions over the 28th horserace betting levy scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The chairman of the Horserace Betting levy Board and the Bookmakers' Committee have been asked to submit written representations about the disputed 28th levy scheme to us by 16 December. Each side will then be invited to comment on the other's memorandum of representations. We intend also to make available to both sides any other representations which we receive about the dispute. It will be open to either side to comment on such representations as it wishes. If either side to the dispute wishes to add to its written representations any further points at a meeting with my right hon. Friend, it is our intention to ensure that both sides are represented at any such meeting. This will afford each side the opportunity to comment on points made by the other.

Police Interviews (Tape Recording)

91. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a progress report to the House on the tape recording of interviews with suspects, indicating in how many police authority areas this procedure is now in full operation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We understand that about one-third of all forces will be equipped to tape record interviews forcewide by April 1989. By the same date, all forces are expected to have completed plans to introduce tape recording in at least part of their force area. The tape recording of interviews in respect of indictable offences and offences triable either way should be standard practice throughout England and Wales by 1991.

Excessive Drinking

93. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to deter foolish and excessive drinking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have strengthened the powers of licensing justices. Since 22 August, they have had discretion to grant or refuse late-night drinks extensions; from 1 March 1989 they will be in a position to order, if it is justified, the revocation of current licences for licensed premises at any licensing session. We have also strengthened the law on sales to under-age drinkers. We have prepared crime prevention advice and approved the experimental byelaw in Coventry banning the consumption of alcohol in designated streets and other public places. Similar byelaws will be introduced in six other towns. The ministerial group on alcohol misuse is taking forward further work on other aspects of alcohol misuse.

Police Federation

94. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will next meet the chairman of the Police Federation; and what matters he expects to discuss.

Mr. Hurd: I met the chairman of the Police Federation at a social function on 1 December, when conversation ranged over a number of police matters. The date for our next meeting has not yet been fixed.

Private Security Firms

95. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends taking to control the unregulated proliferation of private security firms.

99. Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy towards matters raised in the report on the private security industry produced by the Association of Chief Police Officers.

Mr. John Patten: The Government have made it clear that they look to the private security industry to provide self-regulation. However, following publication of the report on the industry by the Association of Chief Police Officers, I have asked officials to consider with the police and the industry ways in which self-regulation might be improved.

102. Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider extending to England and Wales the regulations concerning the registration of private security company employees to be registered and vetted, currently in force in Northern Ireland.

Mr. John Patten: The reason for regulating security firms in Northern Ireland is to prevent proscribed organisations from benefiting from their activities. There is no equivalent need for statutory regulation in England and Wales, but following publication of the report by the Association of Chief Police Officers on the private security industry, we are considering ways in which the industry's self-regulatory role might be improved.

Non-violent Crime

96. Mr. Rees: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he proposes to take to achieve a reduction of custodial sentences for offenders convicted of non-violent crimes.

Mr. John Patten: Our proposals are set out in the Green Paper "Punishment, Custody and the Community" (Cm. 424). We have already taken steps to give effect to those which can be implemented under present legislation: we have circulated an action plan to encourage initiatives in developing non-custodial sentences for young adult offenders, and we have issued draft national standards for community service orders. By ensuring that community service is rigorous and demanding, we hope to encourage its use for offenders who might otherwise receive a custodial sentence.

Prisons (Building and Refurbishment)

98. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new prison building and refurbishment initiatives are planned during the coming year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The expansion and acceleration of the prison building programme continues with 18 new prisons at various stages of planning, design and construction in addition to the eight new prisons which have already opened. Seven prisons are now being constructed, the first of which should be ready for occupation in 1990. At least two further prisons will be added to this programme from the additional funds recently announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Autumn Statement. The full programme of new prison building is set out in the table.

The prison building programme includes major capital projects at existing establishments. Many of these schemes, some of which will take a number of years to complete, involve refurbishment and modernisation of living accommodation, including the provision of integral sanitation, and extra places. Work is also in progress to provide new places at existing establishments by the construction of ten 100-place houseblocks at Dover, Featherstone, Littlehey, Glen Parva (two), Full Sutton (two), New Hall, Stocken and Wayland. Details of the individual major capital projects for the coming year are currently being assembled and these will in due course be published as part of the 1989-90 Supply Estimates.

Terrorism

100. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received concerning the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Bill.

Mr. Hurd: I have received a number of letters from members of the public expressing support for the Government's proposals for new measures aimed at curbing the finances of terrorist organisations, provision for which is now contained in the Bill. We have also consulted representatives of the banks and other financial institutions, both in London and Belfast, about these proposals and they have welcomed them and assured the Government that they will be co-operating fully with police investigations into dealings in suspected terrorist funds once the new provisions come into force.

Police Establishments (Civilians)

101. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the numbers of civilians currently employed in police establishments.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A total of 42,107 in England and Wales at the end of August (counting part-time staff on a two-for-one-basis).

Women Police Officers

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women police officers there are in the United Kingdom police forces; and what percentage this is of the total forces.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend is responsible for police forces in England and Wales. At 31 August 1988 there were 12,936 women police officers in England and Wales. This represents 10·4 per cent. of the total police strength.

Probation Service

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the planned level of spending on the probation service in England for each of the next five years in real terms.

Mr. John Patten: Current expenditure on the probation service by local authorities in England is estimated to be £205 million in 1988-89. This represents an increase in real terms of over 60 per cent. since 1979-80, while probation service manpower has risen by 38 per cent. over this period. The proposed level of expenditure in 1989-90 is £219 million. The Government's expenditure plans down to 1991-92, which are set out in cash terms, will be published early next year in the forthcoming public expenditure White Paper.

Cigarettes (Children)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions were brought against retailers for illegal sales of cigarettes to children in the last year for which figures are available; of these how many led to convictions; where these cases were heard; what penalties were imposed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", 1987, supplementary volume 1 (table S.1. (A) under classification 144) a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans there are to improve facilities for people awaiting entry into Wandsworth prison to visit inmates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no present plans to improve facilities for visitors waiting access to Wandsworth prison, except that separate entry into the prison for pedestrians will be provided next year. This should enable visitors to be admitted rather more quickly than is possible at present.

Empty Properties (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many properties in the City of Durham constituency which are owned by his Department by subordinate organisations for which his Department is responsible, or by the police authority, are standing empty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of properties owned by the Home Office in the City of Durham constituency that are currently standing empty is 53 of which 15 are currently in the course of disposal, two have structural faults awaiting rectification; and three are awaiting occupation. No records are maintained by the Home Office of vacant properties in the other categories mentioned.

Drugs

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to make the irresponsible prescribing of drugs a criminal act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 the Secretary of State may, subject to certain statutory procedures, give a direction against any practitioner who in his opinion is or has been prescribing any controlled drugs in an irresponsible manner, prohibiting him from prescribing any or all controlled drugs. It is an offence to contravene such a direction. These provisions seem to us sufficient.

Passports

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many items of correspondence he has received from hon. Members about the work of the passport department since 1 July.

Mr. Renton: A total of 342 such letters were received between 1 July and 7 December.

Prisons (Rule 43)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of prison inmates on rule 43 on 1 December 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Figures for the dates mentioned are not readily available. The number of male prisoners on rule 43 in prisons in England and Wales on 1 January 1988 was 1,916 and on 1 July 1988, the most recent date for which information is available, was 2,126.

MI5

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether in light of the Security Services Bill, he will make it his policy to publish annually the establishment figures for MI5.

Mr. Hurd: No.

Mr. Albert Baker

Mr. Ken Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the case of Mr. Albert Baker No. 241254, Her Majesty's prison, Long Lartin, and consider whether he could complete the rest of his sentence in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr. Baker's request for a transfer to Northern Ireland was turned down in February this year after a full review. Mr. Baker was told in April that the Home Office and Northern Ireland Office would be willing to reconsider the matter on the basis of further reports on his suitability for transfer after a year had elapsed.

Deportations

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases regarding applications for deportation of Italian nationals from the United Kingdom to Italy in connection with terrorist offences are still outstanding; when a decision is likely to be reached by him on each such case; and how many requests for deportation by the Italian authorities in the last five years have been agreed to and duly implemented.

Mr. Hurd: I assume that the question relates to extradition rather than deportation. There are no requests outstanding from Italy for the extradition of persons in connection with terrorist offences. Within the last five years there has been one request by the Italian authorities for the extradition of a person believed to have terrorist connections and she was surrendered in 1986.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the reasons for the delay in reaching a decision on the application for the deportation of Roberto Fiore to Italy where he is wanted in connection with the bombing in 1980 of Bologna railway station.

Mr. Hurd: In 1981 the Italian Government requested the extradition of Mr. Fiore for a number of terrorist offences, but the request failed in the courts because a prima facie case could not be established. This requirement has of course been removed in the Criminal Justice Act 1988.

No further request has been received from the Italian Court, but Mr. Fiore has been informed that consideration is being given to his deportation under section 3(5)(b) of the Immigration Act 1971. He has made representations against such action, and the case is being further considered.

Prisoners (Escapes)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the names of the 152 prisoners who escaped from British prisons between 1 January 1981 and 30 September 1988 and who were unlawfully at large on that date;

(2) if he will list the names of the 52 prisoners who escaped from closed or high security prisons, between 1 January 1981 and 30 September 1988 and who were unlawfully at large on that date;

(3) if he will give the number of escaped prisoners who were unlawfully at large on 30 September and who were serving prison sentences for crimes of violence;

(4) if he will list the escaped prisoners who were unlawfully at large on 30 September who were serving prison sentences for fraud offences;

(5) if he will list the escaped prisoners unlawfully at large on 30 September who were serving sentences for crimes involving drugs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Figures in relation to adult prisoners who escaped from within a closed prison between 1 January 1981 and 30 September 1988, or who absconded from within an open prison between the same dates, and who were recorded as being unlawfully at large on 30 September 1988, were given in my reply to a question by the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) on 15 November at column 550. It would not be right to publish the details requested, but if the hon. Member has a particular reason for requiring more information about incidents to which the previous reply referred, he may wish to write to me.

Extraditions (South Africa)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to secure the extradition of Colonel Henrik Botha, Stephanus De Jager, William Meteler Kamp and Jacobus La Gramse from South Africa.

Mr. John Patten: The United Kingdom has no extradition treaty with South Africa, and therefore no means of securing the return of these men.

Vigilante Groups

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards police co-operation with vigilante groups in areas where there is a shortage of police on the beat.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 14 November 1988]: At the end of August, police strength stood at 124,426, an increase of 12,933 since 1979. My right hon. Friend recently announced that police establishments would be increased by a further 1,100 posts in 1989-90. These increases, together with the civilianisation programmes which all forces are pursuing, mean that the number of police officers available for beat duties has been substantially increased since 1979.

The ultimate responsibility for maintaining law and order rests with the police. We welcome the growing support of members of the public to local crime prevention initiatives, such as neighbourhood watch or the special constabulary, but groups which seek to take over the role of the police, for example by patrolling the streets, are not acceptable.

Motorways (Police Control)

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to a centralised police control of motorways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 9 December 1988]: We have no plans at present to centralise control of motorway policing.

Dogs

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek powers to disqualify from ownership of a dog, anyone who knowingly allows the animal to trespass on a railway line.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 12 December 1988]: I understand that the courts already have powers to disqualify persons from ownership of domestic or captive animals where cruelty or unnecessary suffering is caused to them.

ENVIRONMENT

Radioactive Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress made in his Department's radioactive waste research programme using the "SYVAC" computer programme; what developments have been made with the "Time 2" environmental change simulation programme; and what progress has been made with the "VANDAL" research computer model in evaluating future corrosion of nuclear waste containers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: SYVAC was used during 1982-86 to develop the basis of the Department's approach to the risk assessment of underground disposal of solid radioactive wastes and led to the development of VANDAL. VANDAL is not used for evaluating container corrosion. TIME 2 was developed to help estimate the likely effects on disposal sites of future changes in the environment to approximately 25,000 years. It is being further developed (TIME 4) to permit consideration of periods up to approximately a million years.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress in the hocus hole closure experiments conducted jointly by his Department and the BRE in support of the radioactive waste management research programme.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The hocus hole closure experiments were performed in November 1986 as part of an OECD/NEA study and have been reported in "Hocus Cruise Report, OECD/NEA Seabed Working Group, edited by C. Papucci, ENEA, La Spezia (Italy), May 1988".

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what restrictions are applied to civil servants in his Department's radioactive waste division travelling to the Soviet Union on holiday.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his present estimate per tonne of the cost of the long-term disposal of high-level radioactive waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Accurate cost estimates are not possible as high-level waste will not be disposed of for at least 50 years. An indicative estimate for vitrified high-level waste is £200,000 per tonne.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if there are any plans to export quantities of United Kingdom—generated high level radioactive waste to countries that have commercial contracts with British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. at Sellafield to manage and reprocess spent nuclear fuel.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply.

The Government's policy on the return of high-level radioactive waste was set down in the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 2 May 1986 at columns 502-503.

Seals

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is held by his Department on the link between phocine distemper and the recent increase in seal deaths in the North sea and off the north and west coast of the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The term phocine distemper and seal plague have been used by scientists to describe the virus which has seriously affected seal populations in the North Sea this summer. As far as United Kingdom waters are concerned, the latest information provided by the sea mammal research unit shows that a total of 2,705 dead seals in the United Kingdom had been reported to the unit since 1 August this year. Of these 189 were grey seals. This compares with total United Kingdom population estimates of 25,000 common seals and 100,000 grey seals. It is likely that a very high proportion, but not all, of the seal deaths reported are due to the virus, which has been identified as a member of the morbilli family, of a similar type to rinderpest and canine distemper. Reported seal deaths have declined in recent weeks but the virus seems likely to continue to affect seal populations into 1989. Present evidence is that grey seals appear able to resist the virus.

Greenhouse Effect

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he possesses on research undertaken by Du Pont chemicals in the United States of America on the use of halon 121 to combat ozone layer damage from other halons.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government are aware that Du Pont is investigating the use of halon 121 for discharge testing of fire fighting equipment. The use of halon 121, also known as HCFC 22, is one of several possible approaches to avoiding the use in discharge testing of the halons controlled by the Montreal protocol.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies have been sponsored by his Department or the Health and Safety Executive into replacements for halon 1211, halon 1301, and halon 2402, to mitigate damage from the greenhouse effect.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government have sponsored no such studies. Officials keep in close touch with the steps being taken by industry to reduce use of these halons and to find suitable replacements.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been conducted by his Department on replacement options for chlorofluorocarbon (CFC) 113; and what information his Department has on international research on CFC 113 by the electronics industry.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has not conducted research into replacement options for chlorofluorocarbon (CFC) 113. The Department keeps in touch with the steps the electronics industry is taking, in the United Kingdom and internationally, both to make more efficient use of CFC 113 and to develop alternative methods of cleaning printed circuit boards, including not cleaning them at all.

Tied Housing

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give an estimate of the respective number of farmworkers and other employees in tied housing who at present have their rates paid by their employer.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available.

Chlorofluorocarbon Refrigerant

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to develop a collection network and incineration plants for the safe disposal of the chlorofluorocarbon refrigerant which will be removed from refrigeration machinery during the next 10 years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The EC code of good practice on reducing emissions of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) 11 and 12 in commercial and industrial refrigeration and air-conditioning applications, published in 1984 and currently being updated, includes advice on recovery, re-use and disposal of refrigerants. Both United Kingdom manufacturers of CFCs offer a reprocessing service to their customers.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to include in government contracts for the servicing and replacement of refrigeration and air conditioning equipment, a provision for the safe disposal of used or contaminated chlorofluorocarbon.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Government Departments have been asked to review their policies, specifications and practices with a view to promoting the objective of reducing use of chloroflurocarbons and halons to the maximum possible extent. The Department is assessing the preliminary results of this exercise and considering what further steps may be required.

Rimnet

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 7 December on Rimnet, what is the gamma dose rate.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Gamma rays are emitted by many radioactive substances. The gamma dose rate is a measure of the quantity of gamma radiation over a fixed period.

House of Commons Chandeliers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will undertake investigations to discover if any of the House of Commons chandeliers survived the 1941 bombing.

Mr. Chope: Some chandeliers within the Palace did survive and are still hanging in various locations: but all those in the Chamber itself were destroyed.

Rating Reform

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his latest estimates of the distributional impact of the community charge on household finance.

Mr. Gummer: I have today placed in the Library a note updating figures on the impact on household finances of the community charge. The new figures show that: when fully implemented 58 per cent. of households (11·1 million) will gain from the introduction of the community charge; 83 per cent. of single pensioner households and 75 per cent. of other single adult households will gain from these proposals; percentage gains in net income are largest for the lowest income households; community charges on average would be less than domestic rates in all bands up to £200 per week.

The community charge will reduce the burden on the poorest. The lowest income group will pay less for local government. On average, their rates after rebates account for 3·9 per cent. of net income, whereas the community charge accounts for 3·0 per cent. Of course there will be gainers and losers in any change but these figures show that the community charge with its rebate system cuts the direct cost of local government on the poorest (those households with less than £50 a week) by nearly 25 per cent.

Many poorer people pay more in rates than those who are better off, even in the same local authority, because there is no necessary connection between rateable value and ability to pay. Generally, people buy their homes while they are working, when their incomes are at their highest, but remain in the home and have to continue paying the same rates when they retire with reduced incomes. So it is no surprise that 41 per cent. of households living in homes with above average rateable values have below average incomes.

These figures demonstrate that the majority of households will in fact gain from the community charge; that the poorest households stand to gain; and that domestic rates do not reflect ability to pay.

The revised figures take account of amendments made during the passage of the Local Government Finance Act 1988, local authorities budgetted spending levels in 1988-89, the 15 per cent. community charge rebate taper announced on 14 April and incorporate the uprating of social security benefits announced for 1989-90.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he can estimate the average community charge in 1990 for (a) all adults and (b) income support claimants.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have made no estimates of future community charges. Illustrative figures were published on 23 June showing what the community charge would have been in each area had the new system been in force in 1988-89. Those illustrative figures assume existing levels of spending and existing local authority responsibilities.

Football Clubs (Membership Scheme)

103. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will next meet the president of the Football League to discuss the football club membership scheme.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) on 14 December 1988.

Clay Pigeon Shooting

104. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes he proposes in the laws governing clay pigeon shooting.

Mr. Chope: The Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988 allows land to be used for clay pigeon shooting for up to 14 days in any calendar year without planning permission. My Department is issuing this week a consultation paper about whether the 1988 Order should be amended to revert to the 28 days maximum allowed by the previous, 1977 order.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those organisations he is proposing to consult with regard to the provisions of the General Development Order 1988 concerning clay pigeon shooting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I propose to consult 150 organisations, including the Sports Council, The Clay Pigeon Shooting Association, other shooting bodies, amenity and environmental groups, and the local authority associations. I will place a copy of the consultation paper, and a full list of consultees, in the Library of the House.

Research and Development

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will update table 5A of the Cabinet Office review of research and development for 1988 in the light of announcements made subsequent to publication of the 1988 review.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Table 5A is produced from detailed analysis of research programme expenditure and plans by the Department, the Countryside Commission, the Nature Conservancy Council and the Sports Council. This analysis is now taking place as part of the Cabinet Office review of research and development for 1989 and will not be complete for some time.

30-year Rule

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will initiate a review of all statements, made to the House by Ministers of his Department or of predecessor Departments having responsibility for environmental protection, that may require revision in the light of official information made public under the 30-year rule on 1 January 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

Private Tenancies

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what will be the effects of the arrangements for new private tenancies on families currently on local authority waiting lists; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what will be the effects of the arrangements for new private tenancies on families currently in bed and breakfast accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The new assured tenancy scheme should increase the supply of privately rented accommodation and therefore provide greater choice for families currently on local authority waiting lists or living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Bed and Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to visit families who are currently in bed and breakfast hostel accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend has no such plans at present.

Council Properties

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the percentage of existing council-owned residential properties which should remain in such ownership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Government take no view on such percentages. Our policy is to promote variety of tenure, and wherever possible to give tenants an opportunity to choose for themselves.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received from the international fund for animal welfare.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received cards from members of the public responding to an appeal by the international fund for animal welfare to express concern about the marine environment on an international basis. We recognise that many people are genuinely concerned about the health of our seas and the marine life that they support. Organisations such as IFAW can also play a valuable role in supporting on a voluntary basis conservation and research work on marine species such as seals. That is why I met it today to discuss their campaign.

As the recent seal virus has shown, it is simplistic and wrong to imagine that every change in the marine environment including the death or decline of a particular species is brought about by the impact of human activities, whether through the discharge of wastes or otherwise.

The Government are strongly committed to protecting and improving the quality of the marine environment and where there are good grounds for concern, scientifically supported, we have been ready to act. The precautionary measures, adopted at the North sea conference hosted in London last year by my right hon. Friend, to reduce inputs of dangerous substances to rivers and estuaries, and to phase out dumping and incineration of industrial waste at sea are illustrations of this. On 31 October my hon. Friend announced additional protection measures for seals and on 31 December new restrictions will come into force on the dumping of plastic garbage including nets from ships, one of the issues on which IFAW have campaigned strongly.

Air Pollution

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the consultation paper on the categories of works to be scheduled for control under proposals for changes to industrial air pollution legislation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have today published a consultation paper which lists those works which we propose should be subject to control by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate and by local authorities under legislation to amend the air pollution control system. Under proposals for a cross-media approach to pollution control, the works listed for authorisation by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution would come under the integrated pollution control system.

The paper largely discharges the commitment to further public consultation that was made in the consultation papers on air pollution control and integrated pollution control issued (respectively) in December 1986 and in July of this year. A final consultation paper on charging will be issued in the early part of next year.

Today's consultation paper is accompanied by a paper containing a summary of the responses to the consultation paper issued in 1986, a note on our decision now to favour enforcement of air pollution controls by means of binding authorisations, as recommended by the Royal Commission on environmental pollution, and two specimen authorisations.

Copies of both papers are being sent to local authority and industrial trade associations, environmental organisations and others with an interest, and are available in the Library of the House.

Urban Programme

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will show for each authority currently designated with partnership or programme status, for each year from 1981-82 to 1988-89, at constant prices (a) the amount of rate support grant received and (b) total grants received under the urban programme.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 13 December 1988]: The information is as follows:

Press Gallery (Leak)

Mr. Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the roof leaking in the Press Gallery, off Press Gallery Library, Star Court extension, first reported in April, will be repaired.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 5 December 1988]: The flat roof which is leaking supports a two-storey Portakabin. This severely restricts access to the roof structure and it has not yet been possible to establish precisely where the water is entering. Further repairs were undertaken earlier in December but it will not be possible to judge their effect until they have stood the test of heavy rain. If this latest work proves to have been unsuccessful it may eventually prove necessary to remove the Portakabins. If so, it would be discussed with the House authorities.

Sports Centres

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what grants are available to local authorities to enable them to establish sports centres if they so wish; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Sports Council provides grants towards the provision of sports centres by local authorities; as does the Department under the urban programme. I am delighted that the number of sports halls in England has risen from 770 in 1981 to 1,117 now; participation in sport and recreation has risen from 17 million in 1977 to 23 million now.

WALES

Nurses (Grading)

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many nursing and midwifery staff from each of the old grades have been assimilated to each of the new grades in the clinical grading structure in Wales.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies given to my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Sir R. Gower) on 30 November at columns 244-46 and on 1 December at columns 349-50.

Haverfordwest Bypass

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when work on the Haverfordwest eastern bypass is to commence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The road programme for Wales is presently under review. Details of individual schemes will be given in "Roads in Wales", to be published in the new year.

Economic Assistance

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total amount of agricultural guidance and guarantee fund moneys allocated to Wales in each of the years 1983 to 1987, inclusive, and for each assisted area or function so designated to receive such funds.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is as follows:

[1] Excludes expenditure by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce on market regulation under the CAP because separate figures are not available for Wales.
[2] The figures shown for reimbursements from the European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund (EAGGF) may not correspond exactly to these percentages because of lags between expenditure and reimbursement from EAGGF. The percentage rates of reimbursement have also changed over time for some schemes.
[3] Awards from EAGGF under these schemes are made up to a maximum of 25 per cent. For both these schemes and the beef premium scheme the figures shown for EAGGF reimbursement are on a financial year basis.
[4] Total EAGGF reimbursements are not shown because figures for the individual schemes are based on financial and calendar years.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total amount of European regional development fund moneys allocated to Wales in each of the years 1983 to 1987, inclusive, broken down by county areas.

Mr. Peter Walker: European regional development fund commitments to Wales since 1983 have amounted to more than £270 million. The county breakdown is shown in the following table:

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total amount of loans made to Wales by the European investment bank; and to whom they were given in each of the years 1983 to 1987, inclusive.

Mr. Peter Walker: The annual breakdown of loans provided to Wales between 1983 and 1987 by the European investment bank is as follows:

	£ million
1983	23·1
1984	13·2
1985	47·1
1986	25·3
1987	31·7

Details of individual loans are listed in the bank's annual reports for the years in question.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the geographical areas or functions in Wales which are eligible for moneys from (a) the European regional development fund, (b) the social fund, (c) agricultural guidance and guarantee fund and (d) the European investment bank.

Mr. Peter Walker: Eligibility for each of the four sources of finance is as follows:

(a) European regional development fund—Grants are available to local and public authorities for the promotion of regional development projects and programmes undertaken in the assisted areas and in the area covered by Mid Wales Development;

(b) European social fund—Assistance is available throughout Wales including the following areas to which the Commission accords priority:
Clwyd, Gwent, Gwynedd, Mid Glamorgan, South Glamorgan, West Glamorgan and the Llanelli travel-to-work area;

(c) Agricultural guidance and guarantee fund—Assistance under the individual grant schemes is available throughout Wales except for the environmentally sensitive areas grant which is limited to the Lleyn peninsula and the Cambrian mountains, and the hill and livestock compensatory allowances which are limited to the designated less favoured areas;

(d) The European investment bank—Loans are available to public and private sector borrowers throughout Wales.

Welsh Language

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice his Department is giving to parents who wish their children's school to be exempted from the requirement to include Welsh as a foundation subject from September 1990.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I would advise parents who are interested in the position of Welsh in their children's school to read the interim report of the national curriculum Welsh working group and to let the working group know their views. When we have received the final report of the working group—due at the end of April 1989—the Government will publish proposals on which there will be wide-ranging consultation. Until then it would be premature to consider cases where it might be appropriate for schools to be exempted. I hope that the working group's report will be widely acceptable and will minimise the need for exemptions.

Housing (Expenditure)

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how expenditure which needs to be incurred by housing for Wales between now and 31 March 1989 is to be met.

Mr. Peter Walker: Housing for Wales has been established under powers contained in the Housing Act 1988. Parliamentary approval of expenditure on this new service will be sought in a supplementary Supply Estimate for the "Tourism, roads and transport, housing, other environmental services (including civil defence), education and science, arts and libraries, and health and personal social services, Wales" vote. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £106,000 will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

TRANSPORT

Minibus Drivers

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that drivers of mini-buses for voluntary organisations, charitable organisations and community transport organisations will be exempted from the provisions of the European Community directive on driver licensing harmonisation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is no justification for tougher controls on minibus drivers. Statistics show that minibuses are at least as safe as cars.

Public consultations confirmed that the EC proposals would cause serious problems for voluntary and community transport organisations. The groups that they serve would suffer as a result.

We want to support a modified directive. We want to maintain and enhance safety. We want to maintain and enhance mobility for special needs groups and common interest groups. We do not want statutory additional driving and medical tests for non-commercial drivers of minibuses.

The United Kingdom has wide experience in safe mobility for the handicapped. We aim to share our approach with others. We aim to achieve the modification needed so that each country may choose to develop safe services like ours.

Clapham Junction (Disaster Fund)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give further details of the Government's contribution to the disaster fund set up by the London borough of Wandsworth for the victims of the Clapham junction railway accident and their families.

Mr. Channon: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister told the House yesterday, the Government will be making a contribution of £250,000 to the Clapham junction disaster fund. I very much hope that the Government's example will encourage others to join in helping the bereaved and those who suffered in the accident. Neither the fund nor the Government's donation to it will affect claims for compensation.

Parliamentary approval for this payment will be sought in a supplementary Supply Estimate for the administration and transport services vote. Pending that approval, the £250,000 donation will be met by a repayable advance from the contingencies fund. As savings have occurred in class VIII, 2, there will be no increase in the public expenditure planning total.

Rail Closures

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will call for a report from the chairman of British Rail on the status of British Rail's plans to close 36 lines, including the Swansea to Milford Haven line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I see no need to call for a report. The 36 lines referred to in an article in The Guardian newspaper concern a review of engineering costs by BR's freight business; they are not a list of planned closures for passenger services.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of trainees in companies, employing 100 or more YTS trainees, in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the east midlands region and (c) Leicestershire, are from (i) the Afro-Caribbean community, (ii) the Asian community and (iii) ethnic minorities in general.

Mr. Cope: The information is not available in the form requested. Percentages of YTS trainees from Afro-Caribbean, Asian and all ethnic minorities in employer-led schemes are given in the table.

Percentages of YTS trainees stating their ethnic origin as being from Afro-Caribbean, Asian and all ethnic minorities in employer-led schemes at 31 March 1988.

	Afro-Caribbean Per cent.	Asian Per cent.	Total ethnic minorities Per cent.
Great Britain	1·1	1·1	2·6
East midlands	0·8	1·0	2·3
Leicester	1·1	2·4	4·4

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many local authorities are co-operating with employment training; and how many authorities and other public employers are known to the Training Agency to be boycotting employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: Contracts have been signed with 55 local authorities to be training agents and with 176 local authorities to be training managers. In addition, many other local authorities are involved as members of consortia or as subcontractors to training managers. We are aware of a small number of local authorities which are boycotting the programme or campaigning against it.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion and number of trainees on employment training had either been offered or undertaken work placements by early December.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to his earlier question on 28 November at column 114.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what effect the decision by a number of Labour-controlled local authorities to boycott employment training has had on (a) the number of work placements available to trainees and (b) the overall quality of the programme.

Mr. Nicholls: The opposition to employment training by some Labour-controlled local authorities has had no long-term effect on the number of training places available to trainees and has not impeded the development of good quality training.

However, the opposition to employment training by a small number of local authorities has in some cases unnecessarily restricted opportunities for training, particularly in some inner city areas where co-operation by local authority is important in helping to secure access to suitable premises for training activities. I very much regret that in a small number of such cases the deplorable attitude of Labour local authorities is making it more difficult than necessary for long term unemployed people to undertake the quality training they need and want to get back into a job.

Disabled People

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what proportion of registered disabled people who have received career development loans have gained employment within three months of completion of the training course funded by the loan;

(2) how many registered disabled people have taken up career development loans since their introduction.

Mr. Lee: Career development loans were launched nationally in July. An in-depth survey next year will provide information about participants which is not sought on the application form, including whether the individual is registered as disabled. The survey will also cover employment after completing training with a loan.

Overseas Visitors

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of overseas visitors enter the United Kingdom by (a) plane and (b) ship; and in (i) the latest available annual period, and (ii) 10 years previously.

Mr. Lee: The information readily available from the international passenger survey relates to the mode of transport used by overseas visitors when leaving the United Kingdom rather than when arriving. During 1987, 66 per cent. of overseas visitors left the United Kingdom by air and 34 per cent. left by sea. The equivalent figures for 1977 were 59 per cent. and 41 per cent.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employees are in employment by industry in (a) non-metropolitan areas and (b) rural areas giving the figures by region and by county for 1979 and the most recent year available.

Mr. Lee: Information on employees in employment classified by non-metropolitan and rural areas is not available.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give long and short-term unemployment rates in rural areas for 1979 and 1987.

Mr. Lee: Information is not available in the form requested.

Earnings

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give average gross hourly earnings for males and females in (a) non-metropolitan and (b) rural areas in 1979 and 1987.

Mr. Lee: The available information is published in table 110 for males, and table 113 for females, of part E of the reports on the new earnings surveys for 1979 and 1987. Copies of the reports are in the Library.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Service Manpower

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if copies of the Treasury report on Civil Service manpower changes in 1987-88 will be made available to hon. Members.

Mr. Major: Yes. The report for 1987-88 has been passed to the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee today and copies placed in the Library of the House.

EEC

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Lawson: The ECOFIN Council met in Brussels on 12 December. I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council agreed in principle on two own resources implementing regulations, successors to 2891/77 and 2892/77, and agreed on declarations to cover arrangements after 31 December until the new regulations are formally adopted.

The Council agreed the Commission's annual economic report for 1988-89 as amended in discussion with member states.

The Council reached a common position on the draft directive on own funds of credit institutions and on the draft directive on public offer prospectuses.

The Council agreed that the Commission's proposals for the abolition of fiscal frontiers need further study by the new Commission and the Council.

The Council agreed a two-year extension modifying a Danish derogation on traveller's allowances.

The Council agreed on proposed increases in the limits on travellers' allowances and tax relief for small consignments within the Community.

The Council heard a proposal from the Commission for a further instalment of the New Community Instrument (NIC V).

Court of Auditors

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which body within the Community has the responsibility for pursuing the reports made by the Court of Auditors; and what action was taken on the report by the Court that 19 million lire of Community funds were spent on financing the delivery of non-existent fruit juice to NATO in Palermo by the Mafia-connected firm.

Mr. Brooke: The court's annual report is discussed chapter by chapter by the Council's budget committee, which formulates a draft council recommendation for discharge of the accounts to which the report relates. Under article 206(b) of the treaty of Rome, the European Parliament has the final responsibility for deciding whether or not to grant the discharge.

I am looking into the specific issue referred to in the second part of the question and will let my hon. Friend have an answer as soon as possible.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the report of the Court of Auditors published on 13 December.

Mr. Brooke: The Government will consider the court's report in detail, preparatory to a chapter by chapter examination of its findings by the Council's budget committee. In line with established practice, the House of Commons will have an opportunity to debate the report before it is considered by the Economic and Finance Council.

Interest Rates

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out figures showing his estimates of: (a) how many families with children have lost more as a result of increased interest rates than they gained as a result of the Budget tax cuts, (b) the amounts by which they are worse off and (c) the income groups worst affected.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer, 29 November 1988]: I regret the delay in replying.

Out of some 6·9 million families with children, the number whose income tax and mortgage interest payments during 1988-89 are likely to exceed the payments which would have been made if the tax rates, allowances and average mortgage interest rates in force in 1987-88 had applied is estimated to be about 570,000. The table shows a breakdown by total income and also the average difference in tax and interest payments.

Total income £	Number of families with children paying more in tax and interest at 1988-89 rates[1] (thousands)	Average extra payment £
Up to £5,000	225	85
£5,000 to £10,000	220	100
Over £10,000	125	60
TOTAL	570	85

[1] Assumes that current mortgage rates remain unchanged for the rest of the financial year.

Most of these 570,000 families are likely to be in receipt of a pay increase which comfortably exceeds the extra payment that they will make, quite apart from any extra income from higher interest on savings.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Oil

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to what factors he attributes the fall from

£1,063 million in the period August to October 1987 to £393 million in the period August to October 1988 in the United Kingdom's trade in oil.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have been asked to reply.

The biggest single factor explaining the change in the United Kingdom trade balance in oil over the period was the significant fall in crude prices, which reflects a weakening in the world oil market.

In addition, oil production is provisionally estimated to have fallen by around 14 per cent. between the two periods —a significant part of which is due to the loss in output from fields affected by the Piper accident. Domestic oil consumption has also increased.

Non-Life Insurance

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster why the non-life insurance directive to operate in 1992 and later years does not include provisions for freedom of trade in mass risks; and if he will explain the purpose of the Cumul rule included in the directive.

Mr. Maude: The non-life insurance services directive, which will enter into force in July 1990, lays down procedures for the conduct of business on a services basis for both large and mass risks. A majority of member states considered that for mass risks it should be open to them to impose measures needed in their view to protect consumers. The distinctions between mass and large risks was endorsed by the European Court of Justice judgments in December 1986 on certain insurance cases. The purpose of the Cumul rule is to assist these member states with the regulation of mass risks.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Gloucestershire Regiment (Official Visits)

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many visits he or Ministers and officials in his Department paid to the Gloucestershire regiment at Bally Kelly, Northern Ireland, during the past 12 months.

Mr. Tom King: None.

Royal Victoria Hospital, Belfast

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many motor cars have been stolen from the grounds of the Royal Victoria hospital, Belfast, in the past 12 months; how many of those cars were recovered intact; how many were recovered damaged; how many were not recovered; and what measures he will take to improve security for staff and visitors' vehicles within the grounds of this hospital.

Mr. Needham: A total of 238 cars were stolen from the grounds of the Royal Victoria hospital between 15 January 1988 and 7 December 1988; 23 were recovered intact, 195 were recovered damaged and 20 have not been recovered.

Security at the Royal Victoria hospital site is primarily the responsibility of the eastern health and social services board which, I understand, recently spent £400,000 on security measures recommended by the Royal Ulster Constabulary. The board is seeking at present to identify what additional steps can reasonably be taken to improve security.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the information he has readily available on the accountancy firms which have submitted business plans or proposals in each of the last three years to the local employment development unit and the industrial development board on behalf of clients.

Mr. Viggers: Although most applicants to the industrial development board and the local enterprise development unit for selective financial assistance are supported by business plans, these are not necessarily prepared by accountancy firms. Information on the authors of business plans for the approximately 2,900 applications received by IDB and LEDU over the last three financial years is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost by examination of individual applications.

Health Visitors (Grading)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the effect of the new grading structure on health visitors in Northern Ireland and upon individual health visitors.

Mr. Needham: As a result of the clinical grading review, 98·9 per cent. of health visitors in Northern Ireland were placed on scale G and are now on salary scales 13·7 per cent. to 19·1 per cent. higher than those applying prior to the review. 1·1 per cent. of health visitors were placed on scale H are are now on salaries 25·3 per cent. to 33·2 per cent. higher than before.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the guidance issued to health boards by his Department as to how they should determine gradings for health visitors and any further advice he has issued.

Mr. Needham: Guidance on the grading of health visitors is contained within the management guidance issued to health and social services boards in the departmental circular HSS(TC5)3/88, copies of which are available in the Library. No other advice relating specifically to the grading of health visitors has been issued.

Secondary Schools

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what figures are available to indicate pupil numbers and expenditure for each of Northern Ireland's secondary schools in the past three school years.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information is not readily available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

RUC (Statistics)

Mr. Ken Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing the number of officers of the Royal Ulster Constabulary serving in Northern Ireland in each year from 1969 to the current date.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1988]: The information is as follows:

Strength of the Royal Ulster Constabulary

	Royal Ulster constabulary	Royal Ulster constabulary reserve (full time)	Royal Ulster constabulary reserve (part time)

Robert McConnell

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether, in the light of the undertaking given in the reply to the hon. Member for Brent, East on 23 May, Official Report, column 35 on firearms, he will look into the case of Robert McConnell, convicted for the murder of John Turnley at Belfast Crown Court in June 1982.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1988]: The murder of Mr. Turnley has been fully investigated by the RUC. In the absence of any new evidence, there are no plans for the case to be reopened.

Police and Criminal Evidence Act

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he intends to seek to extend the Police and Criminal Evidence Act to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 15 December 1988]: A proposal for a draft Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order was published on 20 July 1988, and distributed widely to political parties both here and in Northern Ireland and to a number of other interested groups and individuals.

We are presently assessing all the responses that we have received. After considering these, we intend to finalise the contents of the order and lay it before Parliament early in the new year.

Dromara Police Station

Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will ensure that Dromara police station will not be disposed of before 30 June 1989.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 8 December 1988]: Operational matters concerning the Royal Ulster Constabulary are the responsibility of the chief constable, but I understand that no decision has yet been taken regarding the disposal of Dromara police station.

Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will give the financial savings resulting from the closure of Dromara police station, including a breakdown of the sum in terms of wages and running costs.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 8 December 1988]: Operational matters concerning the Royal Ulster Constabulary are the responsibility of the chief constable. I understand, however, that the decision to redeploy the police personnel from Dromara police station was one of several measures recently announced by the chief constable to support and maintain the current thrust of police operations against terrorist activities rather than produce actual financial savings. The savings resulting from the closure of Dromara police station would therefore be limited to running costs.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

North Atlantic Assembly

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, when he last attended a meeting of the North Atlantic Assembly.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has never attended a meeting of the North Atlantic Assembly in plenary session.

Kampuchea

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any progress is being made to find an international solution to the problems of Kampuchea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: While a number of difficult issues remain to be solved, progress is being made in talks between the Cambodian factions, through the "JIM" process initiated by the Jakarta informal meeting in July, in which the countries of south east Asia also participate, at the United Nations, and in bilateral meetings between those most concerned.

Visas

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Mr. Hobbein Zaminpour, reference 885675/704 and Mr. Mortela Faghih of the National Petroleum Company of Iran applied to the United Kingdom post in Geneva for permission to visit the United Kingdom to purchase equipment; and when decisions are likely to be made on their applications.

Mr. Eggar: Mr. Zaminpour and Mr. Faghih applied on 8 December and 14 December respectively at the British consulate-general in Geneva for business visit visas. After personal interview, which is an essential part of our entry clearance procedure, both applications were referred to London for decision. Authority to issue visas was sent to Geneva today.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the National Petroleum Company of Iran's office in London about delays experienced by members of their staff at present in Geneva in coming to the United Kingdom to purchase equipment in consequence of delays in securing interviews at the United Kingdom post to discuss visa applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Correspondence

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the right hon. Member for Brentford and Isleworth may expect the reply, hastened four weeks ago, to his letter of 18 August originally addressed to the Secretary of State for Defence, and transferred by him on 22 August.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State replied to the right hon. Member for Brentford and Isleworth's letter today (16 December).

ENERGY

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what were the total annual sales of safeguarded plutonium to the United States of America for each year since the end of December 1982.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Total sales of safeguarded plutonium to the United States since the end of December 1982 have amounted to significantly less than one gram. Transfers of plutonium under the fast reactor collaborative programme announced by the UKAEA in 1979 were covered in my reply to the hon. Member on 14 December 1988 at column 582.

Laser Isotope Separation

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on progress made by research sponsored by his Department through the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority or British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. on laser isotope separation (LIS); for how long, and with what financial resources for the research and development, the laser isotope separation programme has continued; and what specific attention has been paid to safeguarding laser isotope separation technology in conjunction with the International Atomic Energy Agency and Euratom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Laser isotope separation studies have been proceeding for some years in the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and British Nuclear Fuels plc, but it is too early to quantify progress towards a competitive commercial system. It is also too early to formulate specific safeguards measures since these measures will depend on the physical feature of the production unit.

Private Sector Power Stations

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many projects there are of which he has knowledge for power stations to be built by the private sector; and if he will outline (a) the average capacity per plant, (b) whether any station exceeds 1,000MW and (c) the aggregated capacity involved.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We already know of nearly 20 proposed independent generation projects, with a total capacity of some 7 gigawatts. Specific details of individual projects are commercial-in-confidence until the companies announce them.

ENVIRONMENT

Radioactive Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has had any recent discussions with the chairman of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee, following on the concern he expressed at a Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive technical seminar at Didcot, that excavations for deep underground repositories would disturb the integrity of surrounding rock strata, and allow for transmigration of radionuclides from the repository.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has not met the chairman of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee since the United Kingdom Nirex Ltd. seminar at Didcot.

Greenhouse Effect

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the European Commission report on the causes of and solutions to atmospheric warming (greenhouse effect) presented at the meeting of European Environment Ministers on 24 November; and if he will make a statement on his response to the Commission report.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A copy of the report has now been received. We are arranging through the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for this document to be deposited in Parliament in accordance with the usual procedures. An explanatory memorandum will be prepared in due course.

Water Abstraction

Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report, for the most recent period for which figures are available, the total amounts of licensed abstraction of water in each water authority area and the amount, expressed as a percentage, of water actually taken up in each area.

Mr. Howard: For the calendar year 1987, the latest period for which figures are available, the information requested is as follows:

Water authority (England)	Amount of water licensed for abstraction (megalitres per day)	Percentage taken up
Anglian	3,614	57
Northumbrian	12,629	9
North West	5,922	64
Severn-Trent	10,282	62
Southern	2,849	60
South West	2,542	36
Thames	18,033	25
Wessex	1,775	57
Yorkshire	6,368	48

Old Perry Bridge, Birmingham

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement regarding the delay in granting schedule monument consent for the repairs to the medieval packhorse bridge known as Old Perry, Aldridge road, Birmingham.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A provisional decision indicating that the Secretary of State is minded to grant conditional scheduled monument consent for the repairs to the bridge was issued on 18 November 1988. A final decision can be issued as soon as Birmingham city council has indicated its acceptance of the proposed conditions.

Redundant Farm Buildings

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussion his Department has had with local authority planning committees on the granting of planning permission on redundant farm buildings to be developed as holiday accommodation.

Mr. Chope: We have had no recent discussions with local authority planning committees specifically about this. The re-use of redundant farm buildings for a range of purposes arises quite frequently in correspondence with local authorities and others. The Government's policy is to encourage the granting of planning permission for beneficial re-use of such buildings whenever possible.

Nature Reserves

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to make funds available to voluntary conservation bodies to assist them with the purchase and management of those national nature reserves which are currently owned or part-owned by the Nature Conservancy Council in the event of such areas being taken out of the public sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones) on 9 December at column 350. The Government will consider whether any financial assistance to voluntary bodies is required in the light of the Nature Conservancy Council's report.

Nitrate Desk Studies

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when a report on the nitrate desk studies will be published.

Mr. Howard: Today I, together with my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, have published a research study of the economic and other consequences of various local options for limiting nitrate concentrations in drinking water. I have placed a copy in the Library. The Government will take these studies into account in developing its nitrate strategy and a further announcement will be made in the new year.

Ten widely different catchment areas were chosen for the study. They were selected to provide a good mixture of farming type, geology and climate. There is no implication that the choice of areas in any sense increases the possibility that measures will be introduced in these particular locations.

Rating Reform

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what capital allocations he is making available to charging authorities in England in 1989-90 for the capital costs of preparing for the community charge.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend announced on 21 October that capital allocations totalling £135 million will be made for the capital costs in 1989-90 of preparing for the community charge. This level of allocations derives from the forecast made by Price Waterhouse in its independent report on costs.

Letters have today been sent to each charging authority in England informing them of their individual allocations. A list of these allocations has been placed in the Library. The allocations have been made to charging authorities on a basis which reflects the number and relative mobility of charge payers in each area.

Now that these allocations have been made and charging authorities know the resources they have for 1989-90 they have no excuse for not getting on with the job of implementing the community charge.

National Rivers Authority

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many professional staff there are in the legal departments of each of the shadow National Rivers Authority unit of each regional water authority.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 9 December 1988]: The information is as follows:

Shadow National Rivers Authority unit in regional water authority	Fully qualified legal staff	Legal assistants
Anglian	2	3
Northumbrian	1	0
North West	1	2
Severn Trent	3	0
Southern	3	3
South West	3	1
Thames	3	4
Welsh	4	4
Wessex	1	1
TOTAL	23	20

These figures do not include the contracting out by many water authorities of the legal work on prosecutions for pollution incidents.

Water (Disconnections)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many disconnections of water supplies there have been in each water authority for the half year since April.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 14 December 1988]: This information is not held centrally.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Community Care Grants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) whether he has any plans to extend community care grants to persons leaving hospital and in receipt of invalidity benefit; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will amend his direction 25 in such a way as to enable those discharged from mental institutions and who are in receipt of invalidity benefit to be eligible for community care grants;

(3) if he will extend the criteria for allowing community care grant as a means of increasing the take up of the current budget.

Mr. Scott: We have no such plans, but we have undertaken to monitor the operation of the recent social secrity reforms, including the social fund.

Pensioners

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of (i) all pensioners, (ii) male single pensioners, (iii) female single pensioners, (iv) pensioner couples, (v) newly retired single men, (vi) newly retired single women and (vii) newly retired pensioner couples are in receipt of a state additional pension; and, for each group, what is the average amount received.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested, as records of recipients of the state additional pension are not broken down by marital status.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is (i) the total number and (ii) the proportion of (a) single pensioners and (b) pensioner couples who are in receipt of housing benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest available information is for autumn 1987 when the estimated total number of pensioners receiving housing benefit was 3·8 million. Information about the number of single pensioners and pensioner couples is not available.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons and what proportion of those over pensionable age in Derbyshire are in receipt of payments from occupational pension schemes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available.

Benefit Take-up

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assumptions his Department has made for the percentage take-up of each social security benefit in making its calculations for the impact upon public expenditure for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Forward expenditure estimates are based on expected caseload. Estimates for 1989-90 will be published in the next public expenditure White Paper. Precise take-up estimates are available only on the basis of historical surveys. For the latest available estimates, I refer the hon. Member to pages 272 and 273 of Cm. 288 "The Public Expenditure White Paper". Later take-up estimates, for 1985, will be published in the new year.

Credit Transfer System

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will seek to amend existing legislation to permit the direct payment of income support into the personal bank accounts of disabled pensioners already receiving all other benefits through the credit transfer system.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The facility to have benefit paid directly into a bank account is restricted to beneficiaries paid by computer because a transfer of magnetic tapes is required to effect the payment to the bank. Income support is paid clerically in local social security offices and the direct payment facility cannot be made available at present.

However, it is anticipated that payment of income support will be computerised by the early 1990s and direct payment to bank accounts will then be offered as an option. Amending legislation is not required.

Social Security Schemes (Equal Treatment)

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has for implementing Council directive 86/378/EEC on the principle of equal treatment for men and women in occupational social security schemes.

Mr. Scott: The Social Security Bill published today includes provisions to equalise treatment for men and women in occupational schemes. The Occupational Pensions Board will be given powers to assist schemes to modify their rules to conform with the equal treatment requirements, but scheme rules which by 1 January 1993 do not comply will be overridden so that the more favourable treatment accorded to persons of one sex will apply equally to persons of the other sex. An exception to the general principle of equal treatment will be allowed for survivors' benefits, and we intend to introduce an amendment during the passage of the Bill permitting schemes to retain in accordance with the terms of the directive different ages at which retirement benefits come into payment.

Miss B. M. Shaw

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will investigate why the Post Office has failed to pay the national insurance contributions deducted from Miss B. M. Shaw, formerly sub-post mistress of the Freshwater East sub-post office, for the first nine months of the financial year 1986-87; how many other Post Office employees are similarly affected; what action is being taken by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department is currently investigating the deficiency in the 1986-87 contribution record for Miss B. M. Shaw. I regret that I cannot as yet say how many other Post Office employees are similarly affected. I shall write to my hon. Friend when investigations are completed.

Unemployment Benefits

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he is planning any further changes in benefits for unemployed people.

Mr. Scott: In addition to the legislative measures that we introduced into the House yesterday, we propose to abolish the outdated and complicated rules applying to seasonal workers claiming unemployment benefit. At the same time, the income support rules for calculating notional earnings of seasonal workers will be removed. We also propose to amend the unemployment benefit earnings rules where they operate harshly on people earning very small amounts and yet leave the benefit of people in highly paid weekend jobs unaffected. Our proposals to add a de minimis provision to the so-called "full extent normal" rule and to introduce a cut-off point, at which those on high earnings from part-time work will lost all benefit in the week concerned, will remove these anomalies.

Fuel Direct

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will indicate for each of the Hoxton, Bloomsbury, and Finsbury Park Department of Social Security local offices, the number of cases of fuel direct payment in (a) 1981, (b) 1983, (c) 1985 and (d) 1987; and if he will indicate the amount of the average deduction made under fuel direct in each category.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No reliable data are available before 1987. The number of fuel direct cases in the local offices requested is set out in the table.

Local office	November 1987
Bloomsbury	514
Finsbury Park	1,807
Hoxton	2,167

Note: Information about the average amount of deductions is not available at a local level.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Ashford Remand Centre

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will outline the nature and extent of library services at Ashford remand centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are two library facilities available at this establishment. A non-fiction paperback collection is available on the two wings to which all inmates have access. There is a central library containing a non-fiction book stock which is situated in the education department to which all inmates who wish have access.

Remand in Custody

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average time spent on remand in custody by those who had completed their period of remand in the three months before 1 April 1987 and 1 April 1988 and who were remanded from courts in (a) Avon, (b) Somerset, (c) Kent, (d) the west midlands and (e) the rest of England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not available centrally.

Armley Prison

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in Armley prison are on remand in respect of charges of violent crime, murder, burglary and theft, expressed by number and percentage of the total on remand.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 8 December 1988]: Details of the offences with which remand prisoners are charged are not recorded centrally until the completion of court proceedings. The readily available information is given in the table.

Untried and convicted unsentenced prisoners initially received into Leeds prison: by type of offence, 1987

Offence with which charged[2]	Number[1]	Per cent.

Criminal damage	122	4
Motoring offences	101	3
Other offences	216	7
Not recorded	398	12
Total	3,267	100

[1] The figures, which are provisional, are those recorded centrally and are approximate.
[2] In the case of prisoners convicted, the offence is that for which convicted.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

A-Level Results

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the percentages of those aged 18 years in both schools and colleges obtaining two or more A-levels for each year since 1970-71.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Information is not readily available for years before 1974-75. The table below shows the numbers of English school leavers and students at colleges of further and higher education, of any age, who attained two or more A-levels, expressed as a percentage of the average of the 18 and 19 year age groups.

"Learning in Terror"

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the implications for his policies of the report of the Commission for Racial Equality on racial harassment in schools, entitled "Learning in Terror".

Mr. Butcher: There is no place in our schools or colleges for racial antagonism or intolerance. The Government are pursuing a range of measures to try to promote racial harmony. These include action on initial and in-service teacher training and a number of projects funded through the education support grant activity on educational needs in a multi-ethnic society. It is Government policy that ethnic minority pupils should have the same opportunity as all others to profit from what schools can offer them and that schools should preserve and transmit our national values in a way which accepts Britain's ethnic diversity and promotes tolerance and racial harmony.

Student Grants

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the rates of student grants and parental contributions for 1989-90.

Mr. Jackson: Subject to Parliament's approval of the necessary regulations, the main rates of grant will be increased in the 1989-90 academic year by 5 per cent. for students studying outside London and students who study from the parental home. For those studying in London, the main rate of grant will be increased by 9·3 per cent. in recognition of their higher living costs. In England and Wales the new rates will be as follows (rates for 1988-89 are shown in brackets):

	undergraduate (£)	postgraduate (£)
Halls or lodgings
(i) London	2,650 (2,425)	3,970 (3,630)
(ii) Elsewhere	2,155 (2,050)	3,125 (2,975)
Parental home	1,710 (1,630)	2,270 (2,160)

The threshold for parental contributions, and the points on the contribution scale at which the rate of contribution changes, will be uprated to reflect the movement of earnings. Parents whose residual income is below £10,600 will not be assessed for a contribution.

The full parental contribution scales for 1989-90 are as follows:

Residual income £	Contribution Scale 1 £	Scale 2 £
10,000	0	0
10,600	60	45

41,000	5,300	5,276
41,130	5,300	5,300

Notes:

(1) The second scale of parental contribution was introduced following the announcement on 15 March 1988 that tax relief on new non-charitable covenants would cease. Contributions assessed on scale 2 are 25 per cent. less than those assessed on scale 1.

(2) For 1989-90 the level of contribution will be assessed as follows:

Residual income	Scale 1	Scale 2
From £10,600 to £13,500	£1 in £7	£1 in £9·3
From £13,501 to £19,800	£1 in £5	£1 in £6·6
From £19,801	£1 in £4	£1 in £5·3

(3) The maximum contribution, which applies to parents with more than one child holding an award, will rise from £4,900 to £5,300. The minimum contribution will be increased from £50 to £60 for parents whose student children began their courses before the 1988-89 academic year (and whose grant is assessed on scale 1) and from £37 to £45 where students first entered higher education in 1988-89 or later (and whose grant is assessed accordingly to scale 2).

(4) The contribution payable may be less than the amounts shown on the scale, particularly at its top end and where the contribution is in respect of one award-holder only. This will depend on the amount of grant against which the contribution has to be set and whether any of the assessed contribution is offset by allowances for other dependent children.

Technology Training

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the European Community programme, second phase, on co-operation between universities and enterprises regarding training in the field of technology (Comett II); what funds will be available to the United Kingdom under this phase; and what will be the net cost to Her Majesty's Treasury.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Her Majesty's Government are today negotiating at the Labour and Social Affairs Council the terms of the proposed second phase of the European Community programme on co-operation between universities and enterprises regarding training in technology. As soon as a final decision has been reached, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my reply in the Library.

Schools (Computers)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure that schools have access to computers capable of running MS-DOS software.

Mr. Butcher: Education support grants are now available to LEAs for the purchase of microcomputers, including those which run MS-DOS software.

HEALTH

Personal Social Services

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) amount and (b) proportion of total public spending on personal social services is accounted for by local authorities for each year since 1967-68 projected to 1990-91 in 1987-88 prices.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is shown in the table for 1971-72 and later years. Information prior to 1971-72 is not available in a comparable form.

Figures are derived from public expenditure White Papers up to and including the 1988 edition, as subsequently amended by the 1988 Autumn Statement. The figures up to and including 1986-87 are final outturn, 1987-88 are provisional outturn, 1988-89 are local authority budgets and 1989-90, 1990-91 are planned provision.

It should be noted that from 1977-78 local authority net expenditure includes recharged central administration.

Grading

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each health authority in the northern region the number of nurses in each grade prior to any review or appeal.

Mr. Mellor: The information is given in the table.

Hepatitis B

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy for encouraging a programme of vaccination against hepatitis B; what guidance he has given to general medical practitioners on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 12 December at column 450 about immunisation programmes for health authority staff. The guidance from the joint committee on vaccination and immunisation, which was sent to all doctors in the United Kingdom in July, deals also with other at risk groups for whom immunisation by general medical practitioners may be appropriate.

Residential Homes

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether he has any current plans to review the Registered Homes Act 1984;

(2) whether there are any current plans to extend registration requirements to all residential nursing homes with more than two residents;

(3) whether he has any plans to seek to change the existing statutory requirements for head managers of residential homes to be suitably qualified; and whether he will consider setting out prescribed training to be undertaken on a continuing basis by staff directly involved in caring for residents;

(4) whether he will introduce regulations to ensure that individual programme plans are introduced and published for each client in a registered residential home.

Mr. Mellor: Sir Roy Griffiths' report, "Community Care: An Agenda for Action" and Lady Wagner's "A Positive Choice" contain recommendations with implications for the registration system for residential care homes including the regulation of homes with fewer than four residents. Some of these recommendations would require amendment of the Act. The latter report also included proposals concerning the qualifications and training of the management and staff of homes and arrangements for the care of residents. We are considering these reports and the responses to them and will be bringing forward our own proposals in due course. Copies of both reports are in the Library. There are no legislative provisions governing the qualifications of managers of residential homes; that is a matter for registration authorities to determine.

Smoking

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of recorded deaths (a) from drug addiction and (b) from smoking-related diseases for the last year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: The number of deaths of persons aged 28 days and over registered with drug dependence (ICD[1] 304) as the underlying cause of death in England and Wales in 1987 is 165.

It is not possible to be precise about smoking-related deaths. Most deaths associated with cigarette smoking arise from three diseases: lung cancer, chronic bronchitis and "heart attacks" due to obstruction of the arteries of the heart. However, the proportion of deaths attributable to smoking from each of these diseases varies. Furthermore, smoking is also implicated in certain other conditions where no estimate of the numbers of the deaths caused by smoking is available—for example, obstruction of the arteries of the lower limbs, and strokes.

It is estimated that at least 90 per cent. of deaths from cancers of the lung, lip, oesophagus and larynx, and 90 per cent. of deaths from chronic brochitis, obstructive lung disease, chronic pulmonary heart disease and aortic aneurysm are attributable to smoking. The total number of deaths from these conditions involved is given in the table.

England and Wales 1987

ICD[1] code		Number[2]
162	Malignant neoplasm of trachea, bronchus and lung	35,138
140–149	Malignant neoplasm of lip, oral cavity and pharynx	1,689
150	Malignant neoplasm of oesophagus	4,770
161	Malignant neoplasm of larynx	866
416	Chronic pulmonary heart disease	680
441	Aortic aneurysm	7,844
490–492, 496	Bronchitis and emphysema, chronic airways obstruction, not elsewhere classified	24,996

In its report "Health or Smoking" (1983) the Royal College of Physicians estimated that perhaps 20 per cent. of deaths due to obstruction of the arteries of the heart were related to smoking. The medical term for this condition is "ischaemic heart disease", but it is commonly referred to as "coronary heart disease". The total number of deaths from this condition for England and Wales is as follows:

England and Wales 1987

ICD[1] code		Number[2]
410–414	Ischaemic heart disease	155,235

[1] International Classification of Diseases 9th revision.
[2] Persons, at ages 28 days and over.

Medicines

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total value of parallel imports of prescription medicines in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: The latest information is for 1986 when a representative sample survey of purchasing of prescription medicines for the National Health Service by pharmacists gave an estimate of about £30 million as the value of parallel imported medicines dispensed by pharmacists.

Resources

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department is taking to ensure that the scientific services involved in patient care are adequately staffed and funded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The numbers of staff working in scientific services overall continues to increase.

Regional health authorities have been asked to prepare for all staff groups—including scientific staff—manpower supply strategic assessing demand; supply measures necessary to meet assessed demand together with proposed steps to deal with any shortfalls. Also where necessary to produce training strategies.

Overall staffing levels and funding of scientific services is a matter for local determination.

Community Care

Sir Geoffrey Pattie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is possessed by his Department in relation to the provision of services in the community for the mentally ill as set out in the 1975 White Paper, and whether the targets set out in the White Paper still apply.

Mr. Mellor: The Command Paper "Better Services for the Mentally Ill", published in 1975 by the then Labour Government, did not set illustrative targets.

The development of mental illness services, including the shift to locally-based services, is a regular feature of the annual review meeting which Ministers and the National Health Service management board hold with each regional health authority. This forum is the main method by which health authorities are held accountable for their work. In addition, the Department's social services inspectorate maintains liaison with local social services departments, taking an interest in the development of their services, including those for patients discharged from mental hospitals.

Salmonella

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make a further statement on the alleged salmonella outbreak in eggs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Today's newspapers will carry the first run of an advertisement advising consumers about eating eggs. The advertisement will be carried by national daily, Sunday and leading regional newspapers over the coming weekend. These advertisements set out the facts of the matter and give clear and sensible advice to consumers.

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much evidence there is of salmonella enteriditis existing in the egg yolk before the egg is laid; and by whom and where this evidence was obtained.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A number of scientific papers by American and European researchers report that certain salmonella serotypes including salmonella enteritidis may infect the ovaries and oviducts of laying hens with the resulting potential to contaminate egg contents before the egg is laid. Two recent papers by research workers in the United Kingdom report the isolation of salmonella enteritidis from the ovary of birds from a broiler breeder flock and the ovary, oviducts and yolk of soft shelled egg in hens from a commercial laying flock.

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures were taken to warn egg producers that the catering trade should use pasteurised bulk egg prior to the comments made by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health concerning salmonella in fresh eggs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Liaison with producer representatives has been a feature of the joint consultation between my Department and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Producer representatives have known since July this year that caterers were being advised to use pasteurised egg instead of raw shell eggs in foods that were not to be cooked.

Radiographers and Pathologists

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many radiographers and pathologists are employed in the National Health Service; and how many of those radiographers and pathologists who have contracted out in the last 12 months were state registered.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 December 1988]: We are not aware of such services at present being contracted out.

Such information as is available for radiographers and pathologists employed in the National Health Service is as follows:

NHS staff in post in England at 30 September 1987

DEFENCE

Aircraft (Permitted Speeds)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the maximum permitted speeds for military aircraft in the United Kingdom low-flying system apply to aircraft authorised to fly down to 100 ft in the three tactical training areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Yes.

Low-level Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which unit of the Royal Air Force Police has responsibility for surveying potential new areas for low flying.

Mr. Freeman: The flying complaints flight of the headquarters provost and security services (United Kingdom) is the unit responsible for surveying potential new areas for low flying, at the direction of the Ministry of Defence.

Aircrew Training (Nuclear Power Stations)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what means are used to provide realistic training of Royal Air Force aircrews in attacks on nuclear power stations in wartime.

Mr. Freeman: It is not our practice to comment on wartime targeting policy. The RAF does not use nuclear power stations as targets during low flying training.

Aircraft (Noise)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the locations of complaints about noise from low-flying aircraft are mapped by his Department in order to monitor the distribution of noise disturbance.

Mr. Freeman: The locations of inquiries and complaints about low-flying aircraft are mapped to show their distribution and indicate particular problem areas. Not all representations are primarily concerned with aircraft noise, and the map does not purport to indicate the distribution of aircraft noise disturbance.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all research work currently being carried out (a) by his Department and (b) by external agencies under contract to his Department investigating the health effects of aircraft noise on human beings and animals.

Mr. Sainsbury: No specific research work on the health effects of external aircraft noise is currently being carried out by MOD, either internally or under outside contracts, but we do, of course, monitor developments in this field. The MOD contributed to early work on the human response to noise measurements units which are embodied in the current aircraft noise legislation.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the final report of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's committee on the challenges of modern society's pilot study "Aircraft Noise in a Modern Society" will be published.

Mr. Freeman: Work on the pilot study is continuing and the final report is unlikely to be completed before the end of 1989. The timing of its subsequent publication is a matter for NATO.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what additional measures have been introduced in the United Kingdom, following the recommendation of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's committee on the challenges of modern society's interim report "Aircraft Noise in a Modern Society," that efforts to inform the public of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's reasons for low flying and the steps taken to mitigate the effects of aircraft noise, should be expanded;

(2) what contribution is being made by his Department to the development by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation committee on the challenges of modern society, of a public information package on the noise impact of aircraft operations.

Mr. Freeman: Following publication of the North Atlantic Organisation (NATO) committee on the challenges of modern society's interim report, it was decided that expansion of the reasons for low flying and the steps taken to mitigate the effects of aircraft noise should take the form of a NATO public information package.

The development of this package is being led by the NATO directorate of information. The Ministry of Defence has made available examples of the material in use in the United Kingdom and has responded to a questionnaire circulated by the director of information. The Department is participating fully in the programme of work through its representation on the committee established under the chairmanship of the dirctor of information. Meanwhile, the Department continues to recognise the importance of providing adequate infomation to the public about low flying, the need for it, and the steps taken to minimise consequent disturbance. Our efforts include responding to complaints and inquiries, distributing a pamphlet and making available a video on low flying, briefing journalists and flying them in front-line aircraft, and arranging presentations to the public by both the RAF presentation team and the low flying presentation team.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps have been taken by his Department to implement the recommendation of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's committee on the challenges of modern society's pilot study "Aircraft Noise in a Modern Society" that multinational research into the long-term effects of aircraft noise on humans, animals and structures should be vigorously pursued.

Mr. Freeman: When I wrote to the hon. Member on 31 July 1987 I explained that the analysis of international data on the effects of aircraft noise on humans, animals and structures with a view to working towards the development of agreed technical assessment criteria was one of the tasks to be addressed further by the pilot study. This is continuing. In parallel, the Ministry of Defence continues to participate in international symposia and is also in discussion with academic institutions.

Calder Hall and Chapelcross (Replacement Reactors)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has had any meetings with British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. officials on the future funding of replacement plutonium and tritium production reactors at Calder Hall and Chapelcross, respectively.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Military Personnel (Travel Restrictions)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what restrictions on travel to Communist countries exist for serving military personnel.

Mr. Freeman: Serving personnel who wish to visit a Communist country are required to seek approval in advance of their visit. Each application is considered on its merits.

Equipment Procurement (Anglo-French Meeting)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress arising from the third Anglo-French meeting on co-operation in procurement of military equipment held on 23 November; and if short and intermediate range nuclear weapon systems have been discussed at any of these three meetings.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Anglo-French conference which was held on 23 and 24 November covered air systems equipment. Previous conferences have covered land and sea systems. The conferences form part of an initiative aimed at increasing co-operation to avoid costly duplication of development effort in conventional equipment. Progress on this initiative has been good and a framework of administrative measures, including the publication of contracts bulletins in both countries, has now been established. Some contracts have already been signed and more tenders are under consideration on both sides of the Channel. No nuclear projects have been discussed.

Radioactive Waste (Devonport)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the total volume and curie content of the radioactive waste stored at Plymouth, Devonport.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. It is not our practice to disclose information about quantities and radioactivity levels of intermediate level nuclear waste.

Low Flying (Public Meetings)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates and locations of public meetings on low flying held by his Department in Wales since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: According to available records, the Ministry of Defence has held the following public meetings on low flying in Wales since 1979.

Date	Location
30 September 1982	Carmarthen,Dyfed
15 October 1986	Raglan, Gwent
27 July 1987	Aberedw, Powys
27 May 1988	Dolgellau,Gwynedd
27 July 1988	Kidwelly, Dyfed
28 July 1988	Tumble, Dyfed

Royal Aircraft Establishment

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the acreage of the site currently occupied by the Royal Aircraft Establishment at Farnborough.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Farnborough site comprises 1,196 acres. This includes the airfield and the 50 acre site which is being leased out as a civil enclave. The nearby Royal Aircraft Establishment site at Pyestock comprises 257 acres.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report details of the number of people employed at the Royal Aircraft Establishment at Farnborough together with a breakdown of their Civil Service grades and total salaries paid for each grade.

Mr. Sainsbury: The total number of people employed by the Royal Aerospace Establishment as a whole at 1 April 1988 was 5,378. It is not our policy to provide further breakdown of this figure.

Farnborough (Runway Length)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the length of each runway at Farnborough.

Mr. Sainsbury: The lengths are:

	Metres
Runway 07–25	2,400
Runway 18–36	1,196
Runway 11–29	1,350

Army Guns (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the use by the Army in Northern Ireland of guns previously withdrawn from Regular Army service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Guns which have been withdrawn from Regular Army service are not used by the Army in operations in Northern Ireland.

Hong Kong

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans exist for further troops and equipment withdrawals from Hong Kong.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government intends to retain until 30 June 1997 a garrison in Hong Kong to demonstrate British sovereignty and assist the Hong Kong Government in maintaining the stability, and security of the territory. We plan, however, to reduce the strength of the garrison during the period to 1997, as the Royal Hong Kong police become capable of resuming full responsibility for anti-illegal immigration. Adjustments to the strength of the garrison will be made in consultation with the Hong Kong Government and in the light of the security situation at the time.

Harwell

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the nature of the work being carried out by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's Harwell research centre for (a) his Department and (b) any other institutions or Governments; and what is the value of any contracts on which Harwell is engaged under those categories.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 14 December at column 581 by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Energy regarding work undertaken at UKAEA Harwell for MoD. I am not in a position to comment upon work undertaken at Harwell for other institutions or governments. It is not our policy to provide commercial details of contracts.

Procurement

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are employed in the procurement division of his Department; and at what grades and remuneration.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 6 December 1988]: The information requested is as follows:

1. Salary rates shown are basic pay, excluding additions such as allowances, London Weighting, bonuses and special pay additions.
2. Under pay agreements concluded during 1988 certain grades can qualify for discretionary increments above the scale maximum on the basis of good performance and occupancy of posts requiring certain scarce specialist disciplines.
3. The numbers employed include full-time, part-time and casual staff.
4. Industrial craftsmen in research and development establishments receive a craft allowance on top of their basic pay. All industrial staff are eligible to participate in bonus scheme.

Fraud

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many suspected frauds involving £500,000 or more are currently being investigated by his Department's investigators; and what is the average time elapsing between the commencement of an investigation and the matter being brought to court.

Mr. Sainsbury: Three cases each involving more than £500,000 are currently being investigated by the Ministry of Defence police fraud squad. The time needed to complete an investigation, to the satisfaction of the Serious Fraud Office where appropriate, depends on a variety of factors, including the nature and complexity of the alleged offences.

If, on the evidence obtained, it is then considered that criminal procedures should be instituted, the case will have to come to trial—this is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farm Interpretation Project

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to support the national farm interpretation project, based at the Open University, Milton Keynes, after its present funding ends in January 1989.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I understand that the Open university's new countryside interpretation unit will absorb the work of the farm interpretation project when that project ceases at the end of January 1989. The countryside interpretation unit will, unlike the farm interpretation project, be able to raise its own income by operating on a fully commercial basis.

EC (Breeders' Rights Registrations)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what account he will take of the proposed new European Community breeders' rights registrations, when considering the recommendations of his Department's review of plant variety rights and seed certification systems in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The EC Commission has not yet forwarded any proposal to the Council for a Community plant breeders' rights scheme. However, in anticipating such a proposal, the review report recommended that the United Kingdom should support the principle of such a scheme and ensure that the testing systems operate in a practical and efficient way.

Egg Production

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total number of (a) breeders of laying chickens and (b) egg producers in England and Wales at the latest available date.

Mr. Ryder: The total number of agricultural holdings in England and Wales at June 1987 with breeding fowls was 9,877, but at least 90 per cent. of those will have breeding fowls only for meat production. The number of agricultural holdings in England and Wales with laying fowls at June 1987 was 34,200. Very small holdings, which make only occasional returns, are excluded from these figures.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated value of the egg industry, including the breeding of laying chickens and food production in England and Wales in 1988.

Mr. Ryder: The value of United Kingdom output of eggs in 1987 is now estimated to have been £511 million. The first estimate for 1988 will be published early in the new year. The breeding of laying chickens is an input to egg production and is covered within the above valuation. Consumers' expenditure on eggs for household consumption in 1987 is estimated to have been about £660 million. However, substantial volumes of eggs are used in catering and food manufacture and the total value of the United Kingdom egg market is probably well over £1 billion.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has as to the likely loss of egg production in England and Wales in 1988 following recent publicity about possible salmonella infection.

Mr. Ryder: It is too early to make such an estimate.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the egg industry and farming unions concerning financial compensation for lost production, the destruction of laying chickens and other associated costs occasioned following recent publicity about the possibility of salmonella infection in eggs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to assist the egg industry to overcome its current problems by (a) buying eggs off the market, (b) assisting in a hen culling scheme, and (c) providing facilities for the disposal of unwanted eggs and carcases.

Mr. Ryder: The Government have already embarked upon an advertising campaign giving clear advice to consumers and putting the salmonella problem in eggs into its proper perspective. The other requests from the egg industry are being considered.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether any regulations will be introduced to prevent the feeding of dead creatures to grain eating creatures of the same type; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Government have no plans to introduce further legislation to prevent the feeding of animals on material derived from other animals of the same type.

Feed derived from carcases may not be fed to other animals unless the material has been processed in accordance with statutory requirements. The Diseases of Animals (Waste Food) Order 1973 requires plants which process waste material intended for use as animal feed to be licensed. Under the Diseases of Animals (Protein Processing) Order 1981 all rendering plants are subject to monitoring for salmonella contamination in processed animal protein. The correct application of heat and other treatment in the course of processing will desroy all salmonella organisms.

The feeding to ruminant animals of feed derived from the carcases of ruminant animals is statutorily forbidden in accordance with the advice of the expert working party on bovine spongiform encephalopathy under the chairmanship of Professor Southwood.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce a system of random sampling of the output of each egg producer in order that where eggs are found to be free of infection the public may be so informed at the point of sale.

Mr. Ryder: The number of eggs which have been found to be contaminated with salmonella enteritidis to date is very small, particularly when compared with the large overall number of eggs consumed in this country. In these circumstances random sampling of eggs would be unlikely to produce any meaningful results. A far more fruitful use of resources is the investigations which my officials conduct into all outbreaks of salmonella food poisoning which are traceable to particular farms.

Hormone Growth Promotion

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under the provisions of which Act he issued the Medicines (Hormones Growth Promoter) (Prohibition of Use) Regulations 1986.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Medicines (Hormone Growth Promoters) (Prohibition of Use) Regulations 1986 were made under section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972.

Nephrops

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to designate nephrops contained in ICES VIa area a pressure stock for licensing purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: On the basis of traditional fishing effort, I see no reason for doing so. In 1987 we caught 72 per cent. of our quota in an unrestricted fishery; so far for 1988 (3 December) we have caught 75 per cent. Looking ahead we have maintained the precautionary TAC for 1989 at the current level of 15·620 tonnes.

SCOTLAND

Health Service (Grading)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by health board the number of midwives on each grade of the previous grading structure and the number of midwives on each grade of the new grading structure, identifying separately hospital-based midwives and community midwives.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is given in the tables. Data which would permit separate identification of hospital-based and community midwives are not held centrally.

Exploration for Gold

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will define the licensing and planning requirements associated with exploration for gold in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Most of the gold rights in Scotland belong by ancient right to the Crown and are dealt with by the Crown Estate Commissioners in Edinburgh. There are some exceptions. Certain gold rights are owned by individual landowners.

Applicants for a Crown Estate prospecting licence must convince the Commissioners that they have the necessary financial and technical backing to carry through a comprehensive exploration and eventually an exploitation programme. The applicant will be required to obtain any other necessary consents including that of the landowners. Planning permission is required from the relevant planning authority as for any mineral working.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the gold exploration work (a) in progress and (b) proposed in Scotland at present; and if he will name the companies involved.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The majority of gold prospecting licences are granted by the Crown Estate Commissioners. The information requested is commercially confidential to the companies concerned. Separate records are not kept of licences granted by private individuals who possess gold rights.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to tighten up environmental controls over gold exploration; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans for special controls for gold-mining. Developments of this kind are subject to the existing controls which apply, for example, to discharges to rivers and to the disposal of waste.

Wildlife and Countryside Act

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the payments made to date under the Wildlife and Countryside Act in compensation for the non-planting of trees.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Details of individual payments made by the Nature Conservancy Council are confidential. Information on the numbers and costs of payments are published in the council's annual report, copies of which are in the Library.

Student Allowances

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the levels of students' allowances and parental contributions for session 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I propose to increase the main rates of allowances by 5 per cent. in the 1989-90 academic year, as previously indicated. In addition, I propose to increase the differential in the rate paid to students studying in London. The new rate for Scottish students will be as follows (rates for 1988-89 are shown in brackets):

Student in the parental home	1,575	(1,500)
Student living away from home
— outside London	2,090	(1,990)
— in London	2,585	(2,365)

Students in receipt of maintenance allowances will be eligible for reimbursement of travelling expenses in excess of the £55 included in the main rates.

The threshold for parental contributions, and the points on the contribution scales at which the rate of contribution changes will be uprated to reflect the movement of earnings. Parents whose residual income is below £10,600 will not be assessed for a contribution. The minimum contribution will be increased from £50 to £60 for parents whose contribution is assessed on scale 1 and from £37 to £45 for those assessed on scale 2. The maximum contribution, which applies to parents with more than one award-holding child, will increase from £4,900 to £5,300.

The full contribution scales for session 1989-90 are as follows:

Residual income £	Contribution scale Scale 1 £	Scale 2 £
10,000	0	0
10,600	60	45
11,000	117	88

Notes:

(1) The second parental contribution scale was introduced following the announcement on 15 March 1988 that tax relief on new non-charitable deeds of covenant would cease; it applies primarily to students who first entered higher education in session 1988-89 or later. The contributions assessed on scale 2 are 25 per cent. less than those on scale 1.

(2) Contributions will rise with residual income, as follows:

Income	Scale 1	Scale 2
From £10,600 to £13,500	By £1 in £7	By £1 in £9·33
From £13,501 to £19,800	By £1 in £5	By £1 in £6·67
From £19,801	By £1 in £4	By £1 in £5·33

(3) The contribution payable may be less than the amount shown in the relevant table, particularly at the top of the scale where the contribution is in respect of one award holder only. It will depend on the level of grant against which the contribution is to be set and whether or not any of the assessed contribution is itself offset by allowances for other dependent children.

Remand

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average time spent on remand in custody by those who had completed their period of remand during the three months prior to 1 April.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not available.

Woodland Grant Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his assessment of the achievement of the woodland grant scheme in maintaining the planting rates of (a) coniferous forest and (b) broadleaved woodland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The woodland grant scheme has only been open to applicants since the middle of June. It is too early to say how successful it will be in terms of planting rates.

Language Teachers

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans there are to revise the draft review of secondary school staffing standards to take into account the inclusion of modern languages in the core curriculum.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 12 December 1988]: The draft proposals for staffing levels in secondary schools are not affected by the precise pattern of curriculum entries, but by the breadth of the curriculum offered. In the longer term there should be no overall effect on the number of staff required by schools but rather an adjustment in the balance between teachers of modern languages and of other subjects.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 143

SESSION 1988–89

5th December-16th December 1988

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
